We learn from Mr. Thomas Mederith that on Saturday last, at Borton's mill fifteen miles east of Rochester, in Kosciusko county, two men were suffocated in a well. The mill pump got out of order, and Mr. Ellis Borton, one of the propriet ors, descended the well to ascertain the cause of the derangement. When about ten feet from the surface, he inhaled the noxious gas and became insensible, falling into the water, which was about three feet deep. The engineer, whose name we did not learn, inspired by that sort of heroism that does honor to human nature descended to rescue his employer, when he, too, was struck with death from the same cause. Both men perished, but the name of the engineer deserves to be recorded in the annals of fame.

BEECHER ON RELIGION.—Religion is a good thing if it makes a man better. We don't care what kind of religion it is if it only makes a man honest, truthful, benevolent and conscientious, if it does a good job for him. If religion don't do this for a man, it won't be of much benefit to him in the next. If a person makes a profession of religion, and talks loud in meeting about love for God, yet manifests in various ways a hatred for man, refuses to pay honest debts, sells dead ben feathers for live geese, fine shavings for curled hair, or gives less than sixteen ounces to the pound, we necessarily conclude that his religion isn't good for much or he hasn't got enough of it. We don't expect this will hurt anybody unless it hits them.

A hotel in California keeps an ordinary bulfrog, in a glass jar, half filled with water. Inside this jar is a diminutive ladder, from the bottom of the vessel to the top, just above the water line is a perch, on which his frogship in dry weather is to be seen sitting perfectly motionless as long as the dry season lasts. On the slightes indication of a change in the atmosphere; the frog quits his perch and returnes to the water, returning to the landing only at long intervals to feed upon the flies that are thrown into the jar. This animated weatherguage never takes any nourishment ex cept in rainy weather.

In these days of Congressional and Presidential grabbing it is pleasant to remember that Franklin Pierce vetoed a bill that had passed both houses of Congress for the payment of the French spoalition claims, though his wife was interested in them to the extent of $50,000. History will never record a similar act of pecuniary self denial on the part of our present President.

It is expected that Americans will carry away a large number of the Vienna Exposition prizes. What a pity there is none well-behaved Commissioners. We would be sure to have it.

The Skull of Shakespeare.

A certain French Baron, whose scientific tastes led him to collect the skulls of celebrated persons, one day received a visit from a man with whom he was accustomed to deal.

"What to you bring me here?" asked the Baron, as the man slowly unwrapped a carefully enveloped package.

"The skull of Shakspeare."

"Impossible!"

"I speak the truth, Monsieur le Baron. Here is proof of what I say," said the dealer, producing some papers.

'But,' replied the Baron, drawing aside the drapery which concealed his own singular collection, 'I already posess that skull.'

'He must have been a rogue who sold you that,' was the remark of the honest dealer. 'Who was it, Monsieur?'

'Your father,' said the Baron, in a mild tone, he sold it to me about twenty-nine years ago.'

The broker was for a moment disconcerted, then explained with vivacity:

'I comprehend. Be good enough to observe the small dimension of the skull on your shelf. Remark the narrow occiput, the undeveloped forehead, where intelligence is still mute. It is of Shakspeare certainly, but Shakspeare as a child about twelve or fourteen years old, whereas this is that of Shakespeare when he had attained a certain age, and had become the great genius of which England is so justly proud.'

The Baron bought the second head.

An Editors Work.

The editor of the Rochester, Ind., Spy claims that he did a bigger day's work than any other printer in the State last Tuesday. He was alone in the office till noon, and had to perform the functions of editor and compositor and devil, at one and the same time. The folowing is a list of achievments during the day:

Arose at 5 A. M.; ate breakfast; buried a cat; split an armful of wood; walked four squares; set a column of primer type; went down town and stayed half an hour; came back and wet down the paper; took proof of six galleys; read and corrected them; made up two forms; went to dinner, distance going and returning, eight squares; pried up a board in order to convince our better half that there was not a dead rat under the kitchen floor; returned to the office and read a daily an' hour; got ready for press washing the roller and stone, oiling the press, cleaning off the tympan and lay a tympan sheet; distributed a column of breveir type; worked two hours at press; went to supper; chopped and split two arms ful of wood; came back to the office and finished working off the papers; washed the forms, etc. Was in bed and asleep at 10 P. M.

A Fool and His Money.

[From the St. Paul Pioneer July 1:]

On the train from St. Clond. that arrived here at 7:30, was a german about 50 years of age, named Peter Vaar, and his wife. Just previous to the arrival of the train he was approached by a gentlemany appearing man, who entered into a conversation with him, and found that he was going to Oshkosh, where he had a brother. The stranger was glad to meet Mr. Vaar. He knew the brother very well indeed and was going there himsef. He had a large amount of money he was going to invest there, but it was in his valise, and he could not get to his money until he could get to his baggage to open it. To cut a long story short, he prevailed upon the confiding Vaar to loan him $1,000 in clean money to pay a large freight bill for goods he was going to take Oshkosh and as security for the $1,000 for a few moments until he could get to his baggage, he gave into posession of Vaar a bag of $20 gold coins. When Vaar got off the cars the gentleman who made the loan could not be found and when Vaar came to count over his security he found that his gold security amounted to just eighteen twenty dollar gold peices, and upon submitting them to the police, it was found as might have been expected, that the twenty-dollar gold pieces were all counterfeit. Vaar was wild, and ran about like a crazy man. The whole police force was set at work, and scoured the city, visiting all places where the swindler could be suspected of being concealed, but up to two o'oclock this morning no traces of him could be discovered. The hunt will be continued to-day, but very likely with no better success than followed the search last night. The case is a very strange one. The parties had never seen each other before, and the whole transaction did not extend over five minutes, during which time the swindled man parted with his $1,000. It is a strange story still we have to be true.

BEFORE AND AFTER MARRIAGE.

GENTLEMAN BEFORE MARRIAGE.

My dearest duck, my sweetest girl,
I love you most sincerely;
I'd rather own this sunny curl
Than win a fortune yearly;
This little hand, so soft and white,
Was only made for kisses;
This little form, so frail and light,
Was made for gauzy dresses.

I'll keep my Kate a span of grays,
A carriage and a pony;
I'll go with her to balls and plays,
And never speak of money;
For I'll buy a romance new,
Attending to her pleasure,
And poems, bound in gold and blue,
I'll order for my treasure,
Our lives shall be but one sweet dream
Of love and sunny weather,
No adverse wave shall cross the stream
Of wedded bliss forever!

AFTER MARRIAGE.

You always talk of plays and balls,
You are forever flirting,
And scribbling rhymes and making calls,
And never make up shirting;
You smile in every whiskered face,
You chase all silly fashions;
You load in jewels, flaunt in lace,
And show your angry passions!

The baby's left to cry and moan,
I've ne'er a decent dinner;
You drag me out, you call me down—
I am a hen-pecked sinner,
An abject slave—I tell you so!
Madam, your folly's ended,
You shall not flirt, and go—and go—
I'm weary and offended.
I'm going to a reading-room—
I'll join a club thereafter—
So—mend your manners—stay at home,
And dry your eyes with laughter!

LADY BEFORE MARRIAGE.

I feel a very solemn sense
Of all a woman's duty,
To keep within the door-yard fence,
Unmindful of her beauty;
To share her husband's grief and care,
But, in his shadow walking,
Content to mind her own affairs,
Be reverent when he's talking.

'Tis plain our maker did design
That women should be humble;
Not given to looks nor dressing fine,
Which makes them fret and grumble.
Those novels are pernicious things,
To feed imagination;
All filled with angels' shorn wings—
To me they are vexation.
Dear William, as your wedded wife
I never mean to tease you,
My aim and pride all through my life
Shall only be to please you!

AFTER MARRIAGE.

Bill, come down stairs; I know you can,
The baby has the colic;
The way you shirk your duties, man,
Is truly diabolic;
The nurse has such a blundering way
She cannot stop his crying,
And as for me, I'm housed all day
Till I am almost dying!

Ann! run and bring my velvet sacque,
My parasol and bonnet;
I'm going to Messers. Black,
The printers, with a sonnet!
I have no time to write nor read—
But while he tends the baby,
You, Sarah, take this book with speed
Across to Mrs. Maybe;
Ak sher to lend me Hugo's last
In change for Love's Dilemma—
There, Bill—don't rock so horrid fast—
You'll wake my darling Emma!

HOW THE VOW WAS KEPT.

It was Saturday night. I do not know that every woman devotes this remnant of the week to mending, but Mary Matthews always did. Crowd her work each day as she might, there were never any moments left in which she could sit down to that basket of holy things and devote herself to the contents, save on Saturday night, and then because the work had to be done, it was done, though sometimes the poor little woman was so tired she scarcely knew how the task was accomplished. Its completion, however, she would fully realize, and if John Matthews, her husband, were sitting before her, she would look up brightly into his face, no matter how full of weariness was her soul. When the basket had been more crowded than usual, and the weekly work consequently greater, this little woman was wont to creep over to the silent man, as the last amendment was laid on the table, and rest her dizzy head on his great shoulder, smoothing his hard, coarse hands, and caressing his shaggy beard lovingly; oftentimes, on such occasions, she would glance furtively toward his countenance for a—well—if the truth must be told—I think it was the smile of a loving heart that Mary Matthews' eager eyes strove to discern. You term this last act foolish, perhaps; for you think that such a sentiment should long ago have been outgrown; you declare that a woman of her burdens and responsibilities should be above any such "exhibition of weakness," by the very dignity they confer upon her. I cannot call such an action foolish, or even weak, though I can and do wonder that such tenderness as Mary Matthews manifested toward her husband had not, in the years of the latter's indifference, become calloused, hardened, beyond the power of loving smiles to soften. Still more do I wonder that, as she realized the barrenness of the soul upon which she showered her caresses, she could continue to expect, or even faintly hope for, any sympathetic return from a quarter in which there was such a dearth of anything like it. Ah, the love of woman in its greatness, its fidelity, in the much which it can absorb, in the little upon which it sometimes thrives, is indeed wonderful! It is to be cherished, to be admired, to be reverenced! Don't ever call it foolish, or term it weak.

John Matthews was not an unkind man. At least he did not intend to be, if he ever had any intentions at all. He loved (?) his wife, his family, in his way, but his heart was no more capable of ministering unto their spiritual needs than his hands of providing for their temporal wants—apparently they were of the same material, both failing in the functions for which they were designed. He was ambitionless; to manage to live, "somehow or other," was the extent of his aims, so far as the getting of money was concerned. It is needless to say, therefore, that a very small portion of this world's goods fell to his share—ay! very little indeed; but he never seemed troubled or anxious. And as one after another "little responsibility" was added to his family flock, he put forth no extra exertion, and felt no added care, apparently; he lived up to his motto, and managed to exist. He managed, did I say? Ah, it was his wife that did that. It was her slight frame that bore the double weight, when the half was sufficient to crush any ordinary woman! It was she who contrived, she who made everything go twice as far as it was originally destined; it was Mary Matthews, who planned and planned until her brain grew giddy with the whirl of thought, while John walked leisurely down the street to his work—he made crochet-needles—or sat by the stove in the evening, reading or sleeping, as he felt inclined. He was a patient man, he seldom complained. But would he have been justified if he had, and was it to his credit that he did not? No, to both!

There was an unusual amount of work on hand this Saturday night, and Mary Matthews glanced at the basket, and then at the clock, and looked very doubtful as to whether her task could be accomplished in the given time, yet, the manner in which she immediately went to work indicated that she was resolved at least to make the endeavor. And as this little woman sewed, there sprang up after her, little patches upon garment-land, growing there as though to be never uprooted. And where baby's little toes had gone through his socks and out into the wide, wide world, the mother placed delicate wicker-work to keep them in. Archie's little feet had backed out of his stockings to boot, but Mary Matthews heeled the gaping injury, and with her surgeon-like needle skillfully united the raw edges that mortification could not result therefrom. In the husband's hose, the wife barred and cross-barred all the unlawful openings, till it would have been difficult for light or cold to have entered by those means again. Then Myrtle's Sunday dress was taken down an inch or two, that it might not feel so much above her, and the waist to Sadie's frock was eyed till it promised to never flinch from duty again. There were only fifteen minutes ere the clock would strike twelve, but in ten of them this persevering woman liberated a dashing little butterfly from a brown silk chrysalis, and in the remaining five folded up the evening's work and laid it aside. Then she looked up to John, who sat near by, giving him a smile of affection—requiring only one in return to cause her heart, tired as it was with the week's hurry and worry, to bound for very joy. But a stretch and a yawn was all that he sent back across the wave of light that had flashed over at him. Ah, had he but sent a smile her woman-heart would have made so much of it; she would have seen in it more than his nature could have possibly felt; appreciation, sympathy, love—for you remember she could make a little go a great way. It would have been to her a sweet blessing, she would have rested upon it all the coming week, and have placed it as compensation against every disappointment—"John smiled upon me"—"John thinks of me"—"John loves me." But as it was, he only said he was tired, and was glad she was through for the night. And the weary woman, with an unsatisfied longing in her soul, a craving in her heart for sympathy, caught up her baby from the cradle, and hugged it tightly to her bosom, kissing its fair face again and again. Baby was asleep, but its clumsy fist opened wide of a sudden, and the tiny hand clasped itself around the mother-finger, and would not let go. It was a very little thing for a baby to do, but it cheered the lonely heart wonderfully; the haggard look left her countenance, and a warmer hue succeeded. You call her foolish again, and say it was only an accident—that no emotion stirred the baby-heart of the slumberer. Perhaps you are right, my friend, but I love to think that the God who has hidden from the wise what he has revealed unto babes, sent comfort to the mother through the child. Any way, I know that his blessing rested upon them that Saturday night in the Long Ago.

CHAPTER II.

It was in the early winter. Baby Matthews was wrapped in his warmest flannels, but somehow they did not keep out the cold. At last, before night came on, the little fellow who had worried all the day, began to breathe very hard, and gave palpable evidence that he was sick. Mary Matthews feared her boy was attacked with croup, and wanted a physician summoned. But the father of the child said he would be well over it by morning—it was nothing—and he didn't believe in doctors. He was correct in the first particular, for ere the straggling rays of light penetrated that little bed-room, baby Matthews put up his little hands in great pain, and the Savior looking down upon the suffering child, had compassion upon it, and took it up in his arms and healed it. Earthly eyes pronounced it dead, after that, and so the treasure was buried in the ground.

It would be doing injustice to John Matthews to say he did not miss the little thing, though I do not think he mourned. He could labor all day and never feel his loss till he entered his home at night, but with Mary, his wife, the case was different. In all her work had the little face been associated: kneading her bread she had watched the baby on the floor, that no harm might come near; in washing her dishes she had handled them gently that the sleeper might slumber; when baby cried out from any cause, there had always been a song on her lips to quiet him. Whether in her arms or out, the care of the blessing had been in her every thought. Was it strange then that the mother-heart ached—that it cried aloud in its grief, though there were others yet left to be cared for? Ah, no, it was but natural, for none but baby can fill the empty place in the cradle. The little woman did not give up, however. She toiled early and late, and devoted herself still more to the children that remained, praying that God would spare them to her lonely heart.

But, finally, there came a time when Mary Matthews took a rest in her work; a Saturday night when the basket of mending was filled and unemptied; when the clock ticked on and no one took heed of the passing hours; when silence was in the kitchen—when every room was dark and desolate—when the house seemed ready to fall. The little Matthews with scared faces stood around helplessly; they couldn't begin or end anything without mother. But Mary Matthews was on her sick bed and never gave them a thought. Her tired brain was occupied with other things—strange pictures, wild fancies, confused thoughts—such as these hot, raging fevers bring, when they go to one's head. The neighbors, God bless them, did all they could for the sick woman, the physicians prescribed their most subtle doses, and John Matthews, well fitted for the vocation, watched night after night.

Weeks passed. It was Saturday night again. The basket of mending was filled to overflowing, yet it remained untouched—undisturbed. Mary Matthews still lay upon her sick bed; John Matthews still watched by her side. Not in vain had the husband sat by the side of his wife all these days, nor had he listened to her ravings for naught. Mutterings of a crazy woman, others might have termed them, but to John Matthews they were terribly significant. However strange and wild her fancies, her one cry had been always the same, as worn out she would sink exhausted among the pillows. It was a cry for sympathy, for love, a cry full of yearning—and so hopeless—so sad—oh, how could it but touch his heart, how could it but speak to him over and over again, the one word neglect, which he had shown toward Mary Matthews—the woman whom he had promised, before God, to love, ay! to cherish, as long as they both should live. And she was going to die now, the neighbors said so; the doctors gave no hope. Was he to be released from his contract just as he began to realize what love and cherish meant? He looked at her as she lay there in stupor. He saw beside her pale, thin, careworn face, another—roguish and ruddy; a girlish face, with full, plump cheeks and pretty, laughing eyes; a dear, sweet, oval face; and the border-land above the merry blue eyes was smooth and white, not a line of trouble written upon it, nothing but soft, brown curls wandering where they would. It was the countenance of his Mary when he first called her his little girl wife. She was seventeen then, and now she was—he counted up to see—yes, she was thirty now; they had been married just thirteen years. Her beautiful hair was full of silver-gray now; her features were sharp; her cheeks hollow; her eyes so sunken—a little, faded, tired out woman, there she lay. Oh, how old she looked. "Mary, oh Mary," he murmured, "and so young!" He took her hand in his—what a hand for a woman! How the joints were spread! How discolored the skin! What had become of the fair little hands, with the dainty fingers, that his Mary used to have? And then something within him whispered, "She lost them working for you—in loving and cherishing you." Yes, she had toiled for him early and late—she had laid down her life in his service—her part of the contract had been nobly fulfilled? What had he done for her? Had he given her a fortune? No; he had spent what little she brought him. Had he given her love? Doubtful. Had he comforted her when discouraged? No. Had he borne her burden when it weighed heavily—had he ever said, "Never mind, Mary, such and such a trial is hard to endure, but we'll share it together!" He could not recall an instance. Had he ever read dear, precious words to her as she sat sewing and darning for him? Not once. As he had come home night after night through the years, had he been wont to tell the little woman who never left home what was going on in the outside world? No. And when by a hot stove the little flushed face had watched his favorite dish that it might not burn, had it ever occurred to him to thank her? Never! What had he done for her any way—in what way had he cherished her? Oh, a chill ran through that iron frame, as the man answered that question in his heart—as he admitted to himself that his wife, Mary Matthews, had traveled the rough path of life, unassisted, unsupported, unappreciated, uncherished, had gone on her way lonely and sad, craving and praying for the sympathy which he had withheld. And John Matthews groaned, as well he might, and hid his face in his hands, while the tears trickled through his fingers, as he thought upon the past which he could not recall, of the suffering woman before him who lay at death's door, and whom he had refused to cherish.

He started! He thought he heard Mary's voice. Yes! she was in her right mind! She knew him—she was beckoning to him. He leaned toward her and brushed the tears from his eyes. "John," she whispered, "dear John," and that was all. Soon again she murmured, "To-morrow will be Sunday—my work is all done." Then her weak, trembling hand sought his face and she tried to stroke his beard, as she had done weeks before, but her strength failed her and it fell back upon the bed. A beseeching look came out on her countenance, her eyes—faded eyes—glanced eagerly at him—and the white lips twitched and trembled. He interpreted the expression of longing; he read the cry her features uttered; it was a sorrying heart that spoke to him, it was entreating him for a little love. No need to beg for it now, love had suddenly become very plenty—no need that she should ever hunger again. For a moment she looked at him anxiously; he was overcome with emotion; he tried to speak, but his throat was choked; he tried to answer her with a smile, but he could not control his face, and the tears blinded his eyes so that he could not see. And thus the little woman went on her long journey, unblessed with the knowledge that she was loved, appreciated, cherished—at last. She made one more effort to reach his face with her hand and failed; then, still searching for comfort, she died, whispering, "I'll go and wake up baby."

Hours after, the neighbors found John Matthews, with his arms around the dead form of his wife, and he was kissing her cold face again and again, and caressing her hands, wet with his tears. "It seems he really loved her after all," they whispered to themselves. But the grief-stricken man was groaning to himself meanwhile, "Too late, too late, she is dead, my Mary is dead."—Wood's Household Magazine.

THE editor of the Record, an Arizona paper, has now on his table two invitations to act as second in a duel, an invite to an Indian hunting raid, a pair of bear skin pants presented by a hunter, a three-pound nugget of silver, a free pass on a stage-route, two lottery tickets, three Apache scalps, a call to act as postmaster and justice of the peace, and twenty-seven dollars' worth of faro checks.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Boston Transcript, who renews the cry that our country needs a distinctive name, suggests that Westland might, perhaps, be as good a one as England is for our mother land. Our people, he says, might then be called Westlanders, or, better still, Westerans.

Tunneling the Rocky Mountains.

In this age of engineering wonders, each fresh achievement attracts comparatively little attention, and schemes that twenty years ago would have been been called incredible or chimerical are now heard of as matters of course. The Pacific Railroad, the Suez Canal, the tunnel through Mont Cenis, and, at last, even the East River bridge, with its span hitherto unheard of, are successively put down as in the regular routine of things, and the world is apt to forget within how short a time it pronounced each of these enterprises to be impossible, and as little worth talking about, for any practical end, as the philosopher's stone or perpetual motion. Were it not for this blunting of the senses to engineering triumphs, the newest grand project of the sort—that of tunneling the Rocky Mountains—would have had a similar welcome; but, as it is, the scheme is listened to with a kind of passing amazement, indeed, but still with little trace of incredulity.

Already this colossal undertaking has been begun, however, and it is hoped in no long time to push it to consummation. The tunnel is to begin at a point near Black Hawk, and to emerge in Middle Park. It will be twelve miles long, and at its greatest depth, under James' Peak, there will be 6,000 feet of earth and rock over it. The object of the tunnel is not only that of furnishing an avenue for the railroad, thus avoiding an immense deal of grading on both sides the slope, but it is hoped that vast mining profits will likewise accrue, so as to make the work remunerative at a very early day. The bore is to be effected by "diamond pointed drills," driven by machinery; and it is calculated that the tunnel will be cut at the rate of five feet per hour, or sixty feet per working day. At the Black Hawk terminus work is already in progress; and early in 1874 work is to begin at the other end in Middle Park.

The preliminary operations have been remarkable. The site of a mountain has been graded down for the face of the tunnel, and a flume has been built 1,300 feet long from this point to the nearest water-course. By this means a fall of twenty-five feet has been procured for a stream of water which is made to turn an overshot wheel. This wheel will be used to force air into the tunnel—an indispensable measure for future proceedings—and the waste water will supply the workmen and their families. It is intended so to shape the line of the tunnel that it will strike certain valuable mines whose existence is already definitely ascertained. If the expectations of the "Sierra Madre Tunnel Company of Colorado" are fully realized, they will not only construct one of the most stupendous works of engineering ever wrought by human hands, but will deflect through it nearly the whole line of Pacific travel, and make themselves enormously rich. The expense, however, of their undertaking is certain, while, until it is fully carried out, the reward must remain more or less doubtful.

The national taste for grandeur of dimension should find, in the Rocky Mountain tunnel, ample gratification. It will be nearly twice the length of the Mont Cenis tunnel—the distance from Fourneax to Bardonneche being but seven miles five furlongs—while the deepest point on the Mont Cenis line beneath the crest of the Alps is but 3,480 feet. When to these points of obvious superiority are added the gold, silver, diamonds, and other gems the company hope to find, to say nothing of the humbler but more useful minerals the metallurgists promise to delve forth in its way, the pre-eminence of the American tunnel must at once be claimed and acknowledged. If, now, instead of taking fourteen years—the time expended in boring the Alps for the Mont Cenis tunnel, its Rocky Mountain rival should be "put through" in, say, four—which an average of sixty feet a day, or even 15,000 feet a year, working at but one end should apparently effect—the element of swiftness of construction will be attained to endow our colossal bore with its proper and crowning national characteristic.—New York Times.

A Member of the Typographical Union Refused Burial by a Catholic Bishop.

Yesterday morning, at 8 o'clock, the friends and relations of poor Chabot, the printer who was last week drowned in the harbor, followed his remains to the grave in the Roman Catholic Cemetery, but, strange to say, the authorities at the last moment refused to allow the body to be interred. Upon inquiries being made, it was stated that a note had been handed to Bishop Bourget informing him that the deceased was a member of a secret society inimical to the Catholic faith, and that consequently he had felt himself constrained to prevent the burial of the deceased in consecrated ground. This was a dreadful blow to the friends of Chabot, whose only connection was with the Montreal Typographical Union No. 97, which, of course, is very far from being a secret society. Several persons attempted to have the order withholding burial rescinded, but with no success. Much indignation is expressed by the printers generally at the Bishop's conduct.—Montreal Witness.

Lassoing a Lion.

One day last week, as Samuel Mattison was riding through the hills of San Lorenzo, he suddenly came face to face with a large, full-grown California lion. In an instant his lasso, that indispensable article to the mountain ranger, was circling above his head, and with the dauntless courage characteristic of Sam, he sent the fatal noose with unerring aim around the neck of the lion; then, suddenly turning, he plunged the rowels of his spurs deep into the flanks of his well-trained horse, and dragged the animal a few hundred yards, when he dismounted and buckled a strap around the jaws of the lion, which was completely exhausted from the choking it had received. He then bound and packed it upon the horse, and took it to the house, not far distant, where he secured his lionship, which soon recovered, when Sam found he was like the man who bought the elephant. He has the skin of the animal, and displays it as a trophy of his reckless daring.—San Francisco Paper.

THE hornet is beautifully defined to be the red-hot child of nature.

Pulling a Tooth with a Door Knob.

A rough Western farmer came into a doctor's office to have a tooth extracted, but flinched at sight of the "instruments," and again the doctor tried in vain to get a gripper into his mouth.

At last the Hoosier declared "that 'ere new-fangled thing to be no account," and wanted to know if the doctor could tie a string around the tooth; "for," said he, "that's the way I used to pull 'em out, an' I guess it's better'n all your new-fangled fixtures."

The dentist, to please him, said he would try, and producing from a drawer a fine, strong piece of fish-line, after a great deal of trouble and yells of pain from the Hoosier, it was firmly secured around the tooth. The Hoosier then proposed to fasten the string to the door knob, which was accordingly done.

The backwoodsman then commenced a series of easy jerks on the line, each of which was followed by yells of pain. The doctor resumed his seat, and smiled audibly behind his paper, occasionally glancing toward the door, and then turning quickly again to the paper to hide behind it his merriment.

Thus matters stood, until, at last, the fire burned low, and the dentist rose to replenish it. As he threw in the wood and stirred the red-hot coals into a blaze, a brilliant idea seemed to strike him, for his face brightened wonderfully. Arising from the floor, he left the poker in the fire, and seating himself, awaited the change of affairs. The backwoodsman had relapsed into despondency, for a melancholy expression had settled on his face. He steadily gazed downward, as if he were in deep thought.

The dentist, as I have said before, resumed his seat, but threw aside his paper, and sat looking intently into the fire, with an expression of merriment playing on his features.

Thus he sat for some time. At last, noiselessly rising from his seat, he drew the poker, one end of which was glowing with a red heat, from the fire. He suddenly brandished it in the air and brought it rapidly towards the Hoosier's nose. The backwoodsman threw himself back with a jerk. The cord did not break nor the door knob come out, but the tooth loosened from its place and bounded against the door with the click of a bullet.

The Growing Crops.

INDIANA has not more than half the acreage of corn she had in 1872.

CORN promises well in Southern Illinois, notwithstanding the very late planting.

LESS than an average yield of grain is now promised throughout Ontario, Canada.

THE early crop of new potatoes in the southwestern portion of Illinois is yielding bountifully.

THE wheat crop of Minnesota is estimated at 40,000,000 bushels this year—an unprecedented yield.

No peaches, few cherries and grapes, and an entire failure of blackberries, is the report from Southern Illinois.

AT St. Joseph, Mich., during the season, 16,257 crates of strawberries were shipped, and 11,676 for Benton Harbor. The greatest shipment on any one day was on June 16, when about 5,000 packages were shipped by three different steamers.

THE farmers of Western Iowa say the potato bugs have not been so bad for years as they have this season. Whole fields have been stripped of their foliage and are a mass of dying and barren vines. The probabilities are that potatoes will be very scarce and dear this fall.

IN the vicinity of Des Moines, Iowa, the crops are promising. Barley is large; wheat is better than for many years; corn is astonishing; apples are abundant; raspberries, ditto; pears are a failure; potatoes are buggy.

A California Ranche.

The following descriptian of a California ranche of vast extent and great productiveness is supplied by the Sacramento Union of June 23: "Dr. Glenn, of Colusa county, owns a ranche which contains nearly 45,000 acres. It embraces a frontage of eighteen miles on the Sacramento river, and extends back about five miles. It is inclosed and divided by 140 miles of fencing. One tenant, G. W. Hoog, rents and cultivates about 10,000 acres of the land, and the Gupton Brothers cultivate an equal portion. Some 15,000 acres are rented out to a number of farmers who work on a smaller scale. At the present time farming operations are going on on his ranche at a lively rate, as the work of harvesting is progressing rapidly. Hoog is engaged in cutting 7,000 acres of wheat and barley. The crop will this year yield about twenty bushels per acre of wheat. In favorable seasons the yield has been about thirty-five bushels. The yield of barley is considerably larger. The total crop will amount to nearly 180,000 bushels. He is thrashing his grain with one of Case's 48-inch cylinder thrashing machines, which is run by a twenty-horse power steam engine. To supply this machine requires six large-sized headers and eighteen header-wagons, all of which require the labor of 110 horses and 50 men. The machine has thrashed five sacks of barley per minute, at which rate it has run for an hour and half in succession. It has also thrashed thirty-sacks of wheat in seven minutes. It will require about six weeks to thresh the entire crop. These are the operations of Hoog alone. Gupton Brothers have an equally large crop, and are driving business on about the same scale. The smaller tenants are equally well employed."

THERE are on the globe 1,288,000,000 souls, of which 360,000,000 are Caucasians; 522,000,000 are Mongolians; 190,000,000 are Ethiopians; 176,000,000 are Malayans; 1,000,000 are Indo-Americans. There are 8,642 languages spoken, and 1,000 religions. The yearly mortality of the globe is 42,043,000 persons. That is at the rate of 115,200 per day, 4,800 per hour, 80 per minute. Among 10,000 persons one arrives at the age of 100; one in 500 attains the age of 80; one in a 100 to the age of 70. In 100 persons 95 marry. In numbers the two sexes are very nearly equal in the United States: Males, 19,493,505; females, 19,064,806; but the distribution is not even.

WAITING FOR YOU, JOCK.

BY SAMUEL SLICK, JR.

Winter's agoing;
The streams are a-flowing;
The May flowers blowing
Will soon be in view.
But all things seem faded,
For my heart it is jaded,
Waiting for you, Jock,
Waiting for you;
Oh, but it's weary work,
Waiting for you!

As soon as the day's done,
My thoughts to the west run;
I envy the red sun,
That sinks from my view.
On you it's a shining,
While here I am pining,
Waiting for you, Jock,
Waiting for you;
Oh, but it's weary work,
Waiting for you!

I sigh when the day beams;
The pitiful night seems
To cheer me with sweet dreams,
That beams to you.
Each morn as you see me,
The fading stars see me,
Waiting for you, Jock,
Waiting for you;
Oh, but it's weary work,
Waiting for you!

Go, robins, fly to him,
Sing every sigh to him,
Summer winds, sigh to him;
[illegible]
Where he sleeps on the prairies,
Oh, whisper, kind fairies,
"Waiting for you, Jock,
Waiting for you;
Oh, but it's weary work,
Waiting for you!

Humorous.

THE best man to back any horse—The jockey.

A WAG, speaking to a blind wood-sawyer, says that "while none ever saw him see, thousands have seen him saw."

MILWAUKEE has had a wooden wedding. Henry Block was married to Amanda Board. It was a plain affair.

A MINISTER walked six miles to marry a couple lately. He said he felt sort of fee-bill like. The groom saw it.

"IS THAT marble?" said a gentleman, pointing to a bust of Kentucky's great statesman. "No, sir; that's Clay," quietly replied the dealer.

A LITTLE girl sent out to hunt eggs came back unsuccessful, complaining that lots of hens were standing round doing nothing.

WHY are we led to infer that David and Joshua were intemperate men? Because David, when he went out to meet Goliah on the field of honor, "took a sling," and Joshua, previous to his attack on the walls of Jericho, "took a horn" and gave a regular blow.

AN auctioneer at a late sale of antiquities put up a helmet with the following candid observations: "This, ladies and gentlemen, is a helmet of Romulus, the Roman founder, but whether he was a brass, iron or type founder, I can not tell."

AN aged gentleman in Kansas City received a letter from agents of one of the swindling lottery schemes, stating that if he would send $10 he would receive a gift of $25,000. The old gentleman replied that it was unnecessary for him to send the $10, as they could deduct that amount from the $25,000. He added that he would be satisfied to allow them $25 for their trouble, and that if they would send him $24,975 he would call it square.

SOME young men marry for dimples, some for ears, some for noses; the contest, however, generally lies between the eyes and hair. The mouth, too, is occasionally married; the chin not so often.

A LADY having the good fortune to have her husband hang himself on an apple tree, the wife of a neighbor immediately came to beg a branch of that tree, to have it grafted into one in her orchard. "For who knows," says she, "but it may bear the same kind of fruit."

THE attention of the fair sex is invited to a patented process of manufacturing "switches" from the bark of the redwood tree, but a schoolmistress of our acquaintance says that for the young ladies under her charge she would much prefer the old-fashioned birch ones.

THE Tennyson of Indiana is responsible for the following contribution:

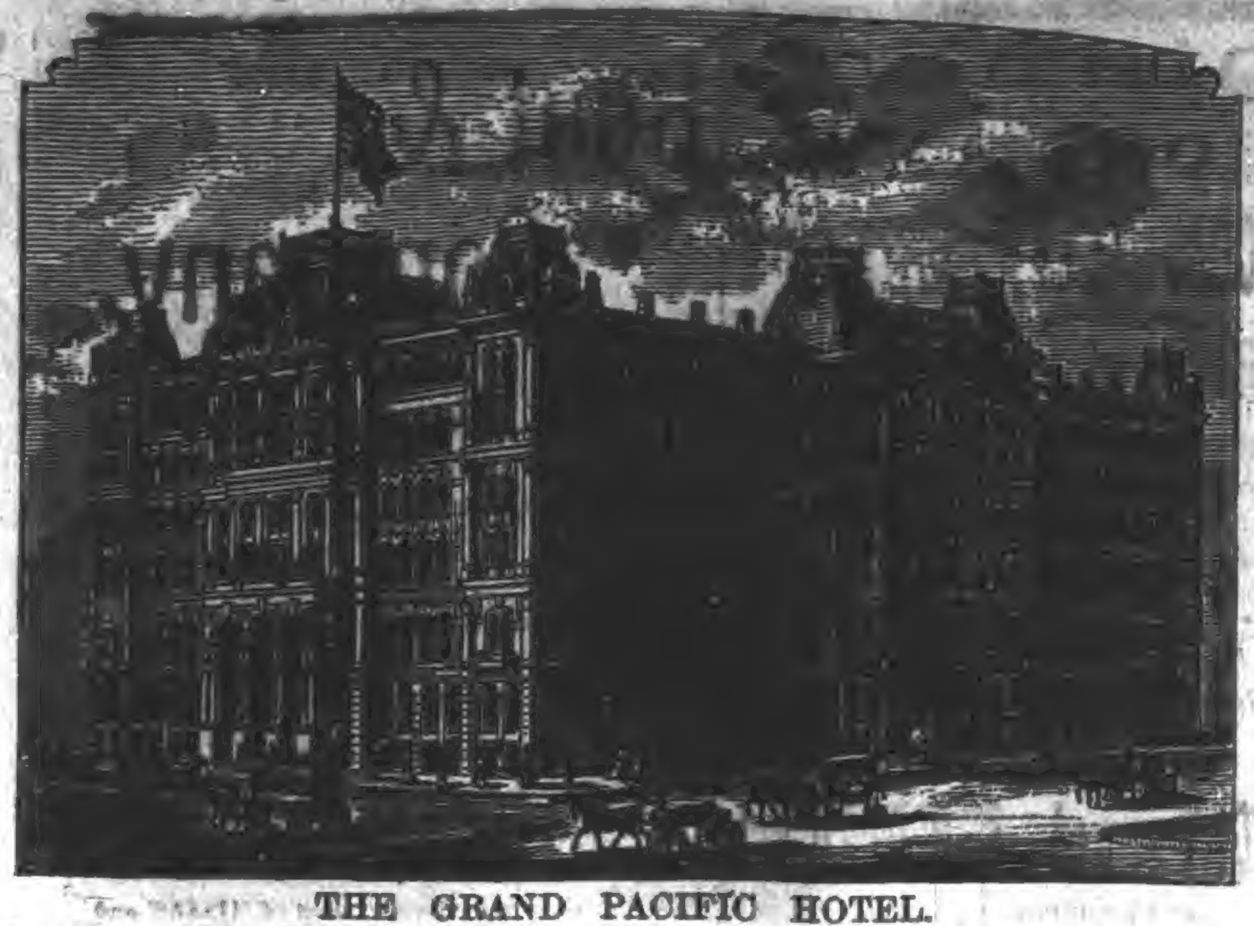
Young man, spare that bustle;
Touch not a single papé;
That woman had an awful tussle
To get herself in shape.

Bridges.

Probably more bridges have been built since 1800 than in all time before. In 1750 London Bridge was the only one across the Thames in that metropolis, and every attempt to create another was, through local jealousy, vehemently treated. Between Putney, distant about eight miles, and London Bridge there are now nine bridges. There was at one time a mania for bridge-building, says the Building News, and Tom Paine, the free-thinker, undertook to span the Schuylkill with a single arch. A part which he constructed with this view went to form a very lofty bridge over the Wear at Sunderland. South America very early hit upon the expedient of suspension bridges. All fees over bridges in London are now abolished, save in one case. A writer on this subject recently pointed out that even the magnificent and enormously costly bridge over the Danube, at Buda Pesth, is free, and adds that no American bridge is, so far as he is aware, tolled, which, we regret to say, shows the writer's ignorance only too plainly.

Punctilio.

Not more than three weeks have elapsed since the Chancellor of the German Empire stated, officially, that "Ambassadors are to Sovereigns, not to States." Even American ministers are accredited to the "courts" or monarchs of the countries where they represent us. But old Spain has made a very new innovation on this immemorial etiquette. The British Government has refused to recognize the Spanish Republic. The new Spanish Minister to that country is officially styled "the representative of Spain to England, not to "Her Majesty." This fact deserves record as the most dignified example ever exhibited of the lex talionis. It will be worth while to note the manner in which the new Minister will be received. Thus has proud Spain, the birthplace of punctilio, been forced by the march of modern ideas to become the first of European nations officially to ignore the punctilio!



THE GRAND PACIFIC HOTEL.

One of the most marked institutions of the outgrowth of life in our larger genters of population is the great hotel, and no feature is more notable and remarkable in New Chicago than the vast caravansaries that are to make her the hotel city of the continent. The largest of these, and the largest hotel structure in the world, is the Grand Pacific, a cut of which we give in this issue, at once the pride and the marvel of the Garden City. Its immense size and elegance are well indicated in the engraving, and very reliable in suggestiveness as to the appointments and adornments of the interior. The Grand Pacific covers an area of 64,000 square feet, an entire block, bounded by Clark, Jackson, LaSalle and Quincy streets. Opposite, on Clark street, is rapidly rising the vast government building, also occupying an entire square. The material of the fronts of the great hotel is the beautiful olive-tinted Ohio sand-stone. The structure cost over one million dollars, and its furnishing by the lessees, Messrs. George W. Gage, David A. Gage, and John A. Rice, nearly four hundred thousand dollars, an expenditure warranted by their twenty years' lease, and securing throughout a richness, elegance, and solidity that will give enduring attractiveness to the hotel, and carry its fame among travellers all over the globe. The carpets of the house, Axminster, Aubisson, Wilton and English Brussels, are all in new styles, and largely in special designs, and aggregate over six acres. The beautiful carpets of the corridors, eleven feet wide, amount to over a mile in length. The features of the hotel that most strike the visitor and guest are the two immense interior courts, used respectively for the grand office and the office arcade The principal Dining Hall is 135 by 65 feet; the Ladies' Ordinary 75 by 75 feet; the Grand Parlo 100 by 25 feet; the noble promenade with its Corinthian Colonnade is 130 by 30 feet. The kitchen, fitted up with the most approved appliances of the cuisine, is 140 by 60 feet. The system of protection against fire is perfect. The floors are filled in with cement, and the floor beams bricked in between partitions. The house has its regular disciplined fire brigade of fifty trusty employees. Standing iron columns from the street, vast tanks in the roof, the most powerful steam pump in the city, with 3,000 feet of hose always kept attached in various parts of the house, a telegraph fire alarm in every room, and the new and perfect electric clock system of Prof. Hamblet are among the appliances and safeguards against conflagration. From three hydrants on the roof the hotel force can protect their own structure and help the safety of adjoining buildings. It would be difficult to suggest a feature in a great hotel which the Grand Pacific has not. The entire work of carrying the structure to completion has been for many months in charge of the lessees, whose reputations and fortunes were made in the Sherman House destroyed in the great fire. Few strangers will visit Chicago without making the Grand Pacific one of the principal lions of their visit. Twenty months have given Chicago a marvellous beauty in her new structures, which in extent more than restore her former business capacity. Her streets are now lined with tall blocks that are unsurpassed in variety and richness in any city in the world. Our readers will thank us for the presentment of the largest and most striking structure of all, the Grand Pacific, which on the first day of June, 1873, opened its doors to guests.

A Narrow Escape for Miss Nellie Grant.

On Wednesday evening, just after 6 o'clock, Miss Nellie Grant left the President's cottage for a ride in her pony phaeton. She was unaccompanied, except by the colored coachman. The team was the President's favorite span of spirited black ponies, and they bowled along the avenue in fine style. While passing along the lower end of Ocean avenue the ponies became suddenly frightened and started into a furious run. The driver manfully clung to the lines and did everything possible to check the runaways, but all to no purpose, for they were unmanageable. Miss Grant bravely kept her seat and did not manifest any alarm, while the plunging ponies tossed the tiny carriage on either side of the road. As the team reached the residence of Mr. Franklin, the agent of the Cunard line, they whirled into the yard and across the lawn, dashing themselves on to the piazza, where they were stopped in their mad career by the astonished visitors. Miss Grant was assisted from the carriage, which miraculously escaped destruction, and was warmly congratulated on her narrow escape from serious injury.—New York Telegram.

RAILROADS.—There are at present 130,000 miles of railway on the globe, whereof about 68,000, or more than one-half, are in the United States. In countries were government management exists there are altogether about 9,000 miles of railway. The Belgian Government has the greatest interest in railways, that is to say, it has the greatest proportionate ownership. In Austria there are 7,000 miles of railway, and Russia possesses 8,000 miles open for traffic, and 5,000 more in course of construction.

A GENTLEMAN and wife recently arrived at Albany, en route for Saratoga, having driven the entire distance from Omaha. The time consumed was some six weeks.

PAIN KILLER—ITS MERITS.

ASIATIC CHOLERA IN CHINA.

TUNGCHOW, China, Aug. 23.

Messrs. PERRY DAVIS & SON:

Dear Sirs—During a long residence in China, I have used your invaluable Pain Killer, both in my own family and among the Chinese, and have found it a most excellent medicine. In the summer of '62 and '63, while residing in Shanghai, I found it an almost certain cure for Cholera, if used in time. Indeed, using it in a great many instances, I do not remember failing in a single case. For three years I have been residing in this place, more than fifty miles from a physician, and have been obliged often to fall back upon my own resources in cases of sickness. The Chinese come to us in great numbers for medicine and advice. Though without medical knowledge ourselves, the few simple remedies we can command are so much in advance even of their physicians, that we have almost daily applications. We allow them to come, because it brings us in contact with them, and opens a door to usefulness. In diarrhea, colic, vomiting, cholera, coughs, &c., your Pain Killer has been my chief medicine. Yours, very truly,

T. P. CRAWFORD.

ITS MERITS ARE UNSURPASSED.

If you are suffering from INTERNAL PAIN, Twenty to Thirty Drops in a little Water will almost instantly cure you. There is nothing to equal it. In a few moments it cures

Colic, Cramps, Spasms, Heart-burn, Diarrhea, Dysentery, Flux, Wind in the Bowels, Sour Stomach, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache.

In sections of the country where

FEVER AND AGUE

Prevails, there is no remedy held in greater esteem. Persons traveling should keep it by them. A few drops, in water, will prevent sickness or bowel troubles from change of water.

From foreign countries the calls for PAIN KILLER are great. It is found to

Cure Cholera, when all other Remedies fail.

WHEN USED EXTERNALLY, AS A LINIMENT, nothing gives quicker ease in Burns, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Stings from Insects, and Scalds. It removes the fire, and the wound heals like ordinary sores. Those suffering with RHEUMATISM, GOUT, or NEURALGIA, if not a positive cure, they find the PAIN KILLER gives them relief when no other remedy will.

It Gives Instant Relief from Aching Teeth.

From 1840 to this day, 1870 (Thirty Years), PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER has no Rival.

Every Housekeeper should keep it at hand, to apply it on the first attack of any Pain. It will give satisfactory relief, and save hours of suffering.

Do not trifle with yourselves by testing untried remedies. Be sure you call for and get the genuine PAIN KILLER, as many worthless nostrums are attempted to be sold on the great reputation of this valuable medicine. Directions accompany each bottle.

Price 25 cts., 50 cts., and $1 per Bottle.

Suggestions for Summer.

It is of great importance that the system should be in a vigorous condition when the hot weather commences. The effects of a high temperature upon an enfeebled frame are always more or less disastrous. The loss of substance and the declension of nervous power, occasioned by excessive heat, can only be compensated by the active, healthful, and regular exercise of all the bodily functions by which the waste of nature is replenished and the vital energies renewed. The great utility of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as a means of toning, invigorating and regulating the organs of the body, is universally acknowledged. As a tonic it stimulates the flagging appetite and accelerates digestion; as a corrective it neutralizes acidity of the stomach and relieves flatulency; as an alterative and mild aperient it regulates the liver and the bowels; as an anodyne it promotes tranquil sleep; as a wholesome stimulant it imparts firmness and elasticity to the relaxed and trembling nerves, and as a blood depurent it purifies the vital stream. The value of such a specific to the weak and debilitated is beyond all estimate. To invalids wilted down by the sultry heat of midsummer it is as refreshing and vitalising as the cool night dew to the sun-scorched flowers. Composed of vegetable elements only, with a basis of pure diffusive stimulant, it is safe and palatable as well as medicinal. In fever and ague districts and wherever the natural conditions are conducive to epidemic disease, it is considered the best safeguard against malarious infection, and the speediest remedy for intermittent and remittent fevers.

MAGNETIC OINTMENT

INFLAMMATORY DISEASES.

Dr. Trask was engaged for twenty years in a course of experiments upon the medical properties and power of vegetables, separate and combined. At the age of seventy years he succeeded in presenting to the world, as the result of his experiments, a combination of Vegetable extracts, the power of which in removing diseases is unequaled in the annals of Medicine.

His discovery consists in a combination of these powerful Vegetable Extracts with Electricity or Magnetism in the form of an Ointment.

Certain, it is, that the remarkable and unprecedented success which has attended its application in the cure of diseases, stamps it at once as the greatest discovery of the age, and calls for a trial and close investigation of its properties.

It never fails, while there remains sufficient life to restore a natural and healthy action to the capillary vessels of the body, and equalize the circulation of the blood. By this means a controlling power [illegible] gained over the most malignant forms of disease, which cannot be obtained from any other remedy.

Such is the power of this combination, that it penetrates to every portion of the human frame; every bone and muscle, vein, nerve and ligament is searched out and made sensible of its purifying and healing influence. Hence it copes as readily with internal as external disease.

Numerous instances are on record where this remedy has restored health to patients so near the grave that the most powerful internal remedies failed to produce any effect. Such has frequently been the case in Inflammation of the Bowels.

No patient ever need die with this disease where the Magnetic Ointment can be obtained.

For Inflammatory Rheumatism this Ointment is the most complete remedy ever prepared. For Diphtheria or Putrid Sore Throat it is unrivaled.

In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, it will afford entire relief to the worst cases of Nervous Headache in thirty minutes.

For Nervous Diseases this medicine is of immense value.

Affections of the Spine, Rheumatism, Lameness, Ulcerated Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Pleurisy, Croup, Colic, Cholera Morbus, Ague in the Face or Breast, Burns, Scald Head, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Inflamed Eyes, Fever Sores, Sores, etc., will be immediately relieved by the use of Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment.

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, July 17, 1873

A valuable suggestion to reformers is furnished by the result of the Louisville lottery drawing. A saloon-keeper has drawn the capital prize of $100,000 He is going right straight out of the business. He could not be induced under any circumstances to sell another drop—while his money last.

Some of the papers think that young Walworth would turn out to be a first-class humorist if he were allowed a little time for preperation. He will have plenty of spare moments in Sing Sing to fit himself for the profession, and if he applies himself, maybe when he gets his pardon, step from the cell to the sanctum—discard the ball and chain for the tripod.

"Grace Greenwood" intimates that never a one of the nominally masculine writers of the press will make the man that Susan B. Anthony is. The World says: "If this be so the prosecution of Miss Anthony for illegal voting fall to the ground, and she becomes instead amenable to indictment for masquerading in female attire.

The Hebrew conference which has been in session at Cincinnati for several days, adjourned Thursday. The Conference adopted resolutions asking the co-operation of all Hebrew congregations in the United States for the purpose of securing the establishment of a Jewish Theological Institute, and and otherwise advance the interests of the church.

Senator Carpenter of Wisconsin has made a speech at Iannsville in that State in which he takes high ground in defense of the Salary Grab. He claims all the credit of it for the "Great Party," and refuses the opposition any portion of it. Would to God this were so. Gen. Butler is vigorously defending the same measure in massachusetts and Morton is now said to have drawn his share of the spoils, and is at Indianapolis "fixing things," and all the indications are that the whole pack will soon be in full chorus in defense of the infamy.

It is curious to note the way in which the money stolen from the people by the last Congress is being spent. Grant is using his on fast horses and bull pups at Long Branch. Bingham is invetsing his in gold lace and gewgaws, in which to cut a figure, U. S. Minister, under appointment of Grant to the Czar of all the Russias. Butler is spending his electioneering for Governor of Massachusetts, while Morton has his on deposit in Washington, during his absence in Arkansas at the Hot Springs—still pursuing the heroic treatment of "fighting fire with fire."

Our readers are already aware that the American Department of the Exposition at Vienna is already a pronounced failure. Before a wheel or ribbon was in place the whole affair had been brought into disgrace by corruptions of Grant's Commissioners, and the stench of our filthy politicians has repelled all decent men. All the bright hopes of the friends of this enbrise are dead blighted, mildewed. Oh! could not our ring and mercenary politicians have saved us this last blistering disgrace in the eyes of the world?

Quiet as Japan now seems to the out side world which congratulates it upon its endeavors to reform the Government after the model of Western civilization, in the interior there are many elements of unrest. This is not to be wondered at when one recollects that the sudden striping of the daimics of rights posessed by them from time immemorial effects equaly the thousand of their inferiors who have always looked up to the nobles as their protectors, and now find themselves destitute of food, which they have not the means of obtaining such as were guarenteed them under the old system, when the daimios gave them work. In doing away with great evils, the Government, in the view of the daimos and the serfs, has acted to hastily and is unable to substitute anything of value in the place of the old state of affairs. Prince Satsuma is said to have protested against the enforcement of certain of the current reforms as necessitating the employment of troops in enforcing them. In some parts of the interior rebellion seems to be anticipated.

No, 1,—On Sewerage,

It has been our intention to present our readers with a few short articles upon the subject of "Sewerage and Drainage," before this, but the pressure of other duties prevented.

In the investigation of the sewerage question, much valuable time has been spent, and volumes written, therefore the ideas here presented will not be new, but merely a few practical facts gathered from the recorded experience of others, in this country and Europe.

A good text to take for this article would be, "For which of you intending to build a tower, sitteth not down first and counteth the cost, whether he have sufficient to finish it." It this was considered wisdom eighteen hundred years ago, it is none the less so now. No man thinks of building a house until he has his plans to suit his wants, and has made estimates of its cost, nor would a mechanic attempt to construct a steam engine or any other piece of machinery until he has draughted out on paper each piece of the propor size to suit the place designed for it to work. We think our village board have acted sensible with reference to our sewerage matter, not doing as many small towns have done, building sewers and drains at random—finding as the size of the increases that the work done is not equal to the demand made upon it, or perhaps twice or three times the expense has been incurred that was necessary. They have begun at the foundation by employing an engineer that has had some experience in such matters, to make surveys and plans for the proper drainage, and estimates of the probable cost. We all know our town is quite level, and it is almost impossible to tell by the eye which direction the water will run in some parts.

In laying out a system of sewerage for a town, engineers generally proceed something like this: The town is divided into districts which are made by nature, just as our continent is divided into various districts by water streets each of which district is drained by some river that divides and sub-divides until we reach its fountain head, so a sewerage system has its main sewers, sub-sewers, house and street connections. In order to get the positeon of these, that we may have the least amount of digging, and they at the same time be the most effective it is necessary to make a topographical survey at the first. This survey gives the relative heights of all the points of the town, from which, after determing where the main outlet shall be, we can easily see the depth and grade, we can get at all other points.

After locating our sewers, then comes the question of their size. This of course is determined by the area of the district drained. The Wabash is larger than our Ceedar Creek. It drains a much larger extent of country. A sewer to drain 4000 acres must be larger than one to drain 400 acres. But the size of the sewor does not depend entirely upon the surface to be drained—its grade must be taken into account. Other questions sometimes come in, such as, house sewers, etc., but these are so small compared with the rainfall, that they need not be taken into account.

After planing the position, grade, depth and size of our sewers, then we must plan the position and size of our man holes and catch basins. These man holes are places built up from the sewer to the surface of the street at a point from 300 to 500 feet apart, so that a man can get down and examine the sewer.

The catch basins are placed at or near the street corners to take the surface water. This water is not allowed to run directly into the sewer filled with dirt and rubbish as it generally is in case of a shower but the outlet from the basin into the sewer in some distance from the bottom so that the heavy particles that would lodge and obstruct the sewer, are deposited in the basin and easily cleaned out.—Sometimes the bottoms of the man holes are sunk below the bottom of the sewer so in case any heavy particles should be washed in, they will lodge at these points and then be cleaned out thus insuring against the least possible damage from obstructions.

There is now an end to the painful Walworth tragedy, the parricide having been sentenced on Saturday to imprisonment for life at Sing Sing. He showed no emotion—on the contrary signified his gratification that Judge Davis did not subject him to a long lecture. It is not believed that Walworth will long remain in prison, much less serve out the entire term allotted him. If Dix refuses to pardon him, the next governor in all probability be more lenitent. Thus far operations of justice have been swift but they are scarcely lasting. If he be not to old when released, Walworth will no doubt receive the distinguished consideration of society, and particularly the adulation of silly women for killing his father. Such is life—and such society.

A woman in town wished to know if Shakspeare is 'gone died.'

A large crowd of people in town last Saturday evening.

We were greatly annoyed by the non-arrival of our paper this week, which has been delayed for some unknown reason.

We saw farmers last Sunday gathering the golden grain, and others turning their hay. But who can blame them.

The Weaver house is almost completed. In a short time Auburn can boast of a first class hotel building.

Plenty employment of almost description can be had at this place There is no need of anybody being idle.

The agricultural implement dealers are doing a rushing business. Some of the articles ought to be manufactured here.

"Make hay while the sun shines," says St. Paul, and our farmers obey the injunction, Sunday or no Sunday.

We think we may safely say that the bridge west of the village is in an abominable condition.

Tommy Leasure will add to his ice-cream rooms many things in the way of cigars, tobaccos, pipes, etc., in the course of several weeks.

John L. Davis has just fitted up a fine vehicle for the purpose of hauling spouting He has a large trade in this line, and is highly recomened for doing good work.

There was a remarkably small amount of drunkenness assembled on the streets last Saturday. Its different from what it "used to was."

A. W. Meeks with his "Common sense farm gate," is doing a good trade in this place. Every farmer should look at it. Sample gate opposite the bakery.

The europathist, a monthly magazine devoted to the interest of reform in medicine has reached us for this month. It is a work that every family should read.

We expected a communication this week from the editor, giving a brief statement of the far west, but it will come out when he returns home. You bet.

On last Saturday a gent. from the country came to town and after hiding considerable corn juice felt better than he smelled. He was unfortunate; that's all.

The Shaffer building is laying still on account of brick. We see no reason why more brick yards would not pay a good revenue. Many would build could this kind of material be had.

Young man, the next time you meet that 'feller' with your gal, don't walk along on the other side of her, with your head down, looking foolish, but bravely tell him, 'You git!'

Harvesting is the central interest on all hands. The golden grain is ripe for the sickle, and this week, with go weather, will witness the gathering of one of the finest crops of wheat we have had for years.

We noticed a splendid assortment of flowers in front of one of our groceries, the other day, which is far ahead of any thing, in this line, we ever saw.

The mails on the Saginaw road will get to Waterloo in time for the mail going east, and the mail from the west will arrive at Waterloo in time to come here the same day.

Mr. Roth our popular drayman, was very badly hurt last week by falling from his dray. He was loading from one of our groceries, and in pitching a barrel he lost his balance and fell.

Jep Lamb, Esq., agent for the Howe Sewing Machine is selling more machines than any agent we know of. He has a good substantial machine and the people are fast finding it out.

Mr. Burrier will not teach the Butler school as a communication stated in last week's issue. We received an article regarding the reason, but have forgot what we done with it.

Wm. Latson Esq. in the employment of S. W. Sprott & son, is undoubtly the best workman in Northern Indiana. We would ask those who doubt what we say, to call at the store and see some of his work.

Work has been commenced on the Eel Briver road near the cemetry. A large force has been put at work all along the line, and in a short time the iron horse will be going "full tilt" from this place to Butler. All rejoice.

A change in the running time of the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R. took effect July 13, 1873 The trains will leave going south. Mail 4:09, 12:47, 8:40, 5:03 1:18, and going north, mail, 12:13, 3:33, 6:08, 9:10, 7:50.—Next week we will correct the time card.

J. C. Loveland, of Sandusky, Ohio, gave us a brief visit on last Monday morning. Joe is running the Telegram at the above place, a spicy sheet, and he is the "little rooster" who can make a newspaper "get up and dust."

A grand musical jubilee will be held at Butler, Ind., on the 1st day of August.—A good time will be had, and our citizens should turn out. There will be a balloon ascension in the evening, and a display of fireworks.

"Come, my boy, go with me a hunting, and you will have more fun than you will at school," said one of our men to a little boy. The little boy replied, "I don't go to school, sir, for fun." A good answer and we hope a good warning.

We fully concur with an exchange when it says the village youths that are constantly climbing on moving trains about the station should be laid across one's knee and the foundation of their trowsers fanned with a narrow shingle.

Workmen are engaged in grading the Eel River track between Auburn and Butler, and it is the intention to push the work forward at the earliest day possible. This will leave the Waterloo folks out in the cold again. Tally one for Auburn.—Angola Republican.

A case of the old story has transpired here, in which the mother died and the son used to sit on the verandah and sing, "I'm lonely since my mother died." But now the father has married again, and the new ma makes it warm and lively for him.

Harvest has commenced in earnest.—Everybody is employed who wants employment, but if wages were double what they now are, and the necessity for labor ever so imperative, a certain number would still be wearing out the seats of their breeches upon hitching racks. No wonder so many additions are being made at our poor farm.

The LaGrange Standard says, two young men, indulging in liquor in Marshall county, on their way home lay down on the railroad track and fell asleep. A train came along, severed one in twain, and cut off a leg and arm of the other, killing both immediately. Their names were, Geo. Mechlin, aged 19, and Henry Broom, aged 18.

The Auburn Schools will commence on Monday, September 1st, in charge of first-class Normal Teachers. The Trustees are making arrangements to accommodate a large number of foreign students. Classes will be organized in the languages and higher mathematics. Special attention given to those who intend teaching. Tution moderate.

Mis Orpha Bodine has returned to our place, and will engage in the dress making business Miss Orpha has been under the instruction of a first-class workman for several months, and those wanting a neat fit, and good work can have their desire fulfilled by giving her a call. Shop on main street, two doors south of the Weaver House.

J. E. Rose and E. D. Hartman formerly of Waterloo, but for the last two years a resident of South Bend Ind. have formed a partnership for the practice of their profession in this place. They are both old residents of the county and are well known by the people generally.—Their office is on the corner opposite the Weaver House, where they will at all times be pleased to meet their old friends and patrons. See their card in to-day's paper.

The friends of the M. E. Church gave a Raspberry Festival at the Odd Fellows' Hall last Tuesday evening, which was a splendid affair. Young men are too backward in patronizing these occasions, and a new spirit, in this direction, is very much needed among the older ones.

It has already been determined to celebrate in Angola on the 4th of July 1874 An ox will be roasted and such a time as will be had will be astonishing No gambling horse races will be tolerated, and the people will be expected to celebrate in a manner becoming the patriotic, Christian people of America.—Angola Times.

Among many of our exchanges we notice the accident of Quinn on the 4th inst., but of all the outrageous lies we ever heard is related in the Kendalville Standard, but owing to that paper having a reputation of being a lying sheet, no one we hope, will believe their statement. It may be, however, that a dead beat at Corunna furnished them with the details, as it sound a great deal like his way of telling it.

Francis Picker & Son, have completed this season, so far, several fine dwelling houses, and now they are [illegible] at work on the Ensley and Snyder block. Although their material is bad to work with they are doing a good job of work. Mr. George Pi[illegible], for some time past, had the reputation of being the fastest and best brick layer in the county, and the credit is justly due him. Harley Bumpus and master Charley have now reached the point of journeymen, and are said to be first-class workmen. In a short time the new brick block will be finished when all can have a fair chance to criticise their work.

Good Time Coming.

Last evening a lady was seen promenading on Jackson street, leaning lovingly on the arm of her escort with a jaunty air, but pen de l'abandon of the "girl of the period." On her left side flashed a d—. No! 'twas in her hand. We thought it was a diamond, but the light from a window told us that it was a vulgar cigar!—The last we heard of her was a sigh—'I'm sick,' "Home, sweet home!" We love the girls—all of them. We love cigars—good ones. A happy blending of the two would make man's terrestrial heaven.—How we long for the millennium; when woman—according to Anna Dickinson—shall smoke, drink and vote. Sublime thought! Then young men can go to see their girls, have a spittoon between them, and everything handy. A "feller" can kiss his girl without throwing away his tobacco, or soiling his hat by an unpropitious deposit. It would save a great deal of unnecessary expense in the way of perfumery, fancy candy, etc. There are other salient points; but give them a rest.

Like all small rural villages we have some finely organized of very aimiable people of both sexes. A villiage standing north-west of here has a small portion of men and women, who imagine that the world pricincipally rests on their shoulders. These very worthy people discovered an accident in their village on the 4th. As the phrenologist would say, imagination is largely developed in these good, kind-hearted souls, and having but few ideas spontaneously, they cling like grim death to one (right or wrong) if by any means it gains entrance into what they are pleased to call their heads. The accident that happen on the Fourth, who no mortal man could have prevented, is magnified by these dear creatures into a first-class fourth-proof villainy of the largest dimensions. There was perhaps a grain of truth in the matter, though we apprehend that no serious breach of either good morals or good manners was committed. "Lo, what a great fire a little smoke kindleth." So much for the dear old gossips, those delightful blister-plasters along life's pathway, who are always stirring the waters to make them clear, and who are so solicitous for the welfare of others that they often fail to notice their own footsteps too closely. Kind friends reflect upon your boyhood days, and then think, if there was ever any bouyant energy about you, how you would have felt, were a brigade of dead beats using every effort to scar your name, and lessen the hold upon the confidence of a few who know you not. I tell you, old fogies, we'd hate to settle your account when Gabriel toots.

There are among us suffering from derangment of the Liver and Bowels. Fever and Ague. Billious Fevers and diseases arising from a torpid or imperfect action of the Liver To all such we would recommend the use of "Liver Stimulant and Cathartic," which is advertised in our columns. It has been used with wonderful success in sections where these disease prevail, and we feel confident it will prove a blessing to many a household. As a medicine to be kept in the family, to be used in the place of pills, it has no equal.

It is for sale by all our druggist and dealers in medicine.—Nashua Telegraph.

June 26th 4t.

The Terre Haute Express says, "an Idiot was found on Sunday, in the woods in Riles township, and taken to the county poor Asylum. He had nothing on when captured except a shirt and pants, and had doubtless strayed from some family near where he was captured. He is apparently twenty-two or three years old, perfectly harmless and entirely unable to give any account of himself."

At the festival, last Tuesday evening, you could get for a quarter of a dollar, raspberries, ice cream, and so forth. On such occasions we think it would be right to charge a little more.

000,000 in sums averaging about $18. The money are sent all over this country, Great Britain, Germany, Switzerland, and the civilized world. It is as [illegible] is cheap. Out of 2,500,000 orders carried during the past fiscal year, Government was defrauded out of $75. The tendency of these money orders is toward local centers of business. Thus most of the orders obtained in Michigan flow toward Detroit, those in Ohio toward Cincinnati. But a deep stream all over the sparsely-peopled [illegible] flows eastward to New York and Philadelphia. The smaller offices receive more money than they pay out; at larger offices the payments exceed income. Thus California

A ride over portions of our county has enabled us to note the improvements which have taken place within the last year. Farms which would not yield sufficient to pay taxes and keep up fences are now tenanted by good, practical farmers who are erecting new fences, barns and dwellings. When we ask what has brought this about we are informed that it is the healthy market afforded by our railroad towns. And thus it is, the thorough farmer who will put his hands to the plow and his shoulder to the wheel will find in DeKalb county a good location. East of town we noticed some very nice new brick dwellings. Also a new brick school house.

TO THE FARMERS.

Which is the most profitable cattle to raise? Our common stock or the short Horned Durham? Our native common cattle in this section of the country have become almost worthless. It will not justify any one to buy them to ship. We are compelled to sell them in an eastern market for less than they cost. We hear men say cattle are plenty, so they are. we admit, but they are not saleable cattle. Good cattle always bring a good paying price. Look at our eastern markets and you will see what good cattle are worth, now we find it essential that our cattle stock must necessarily be improved in order that it may become profitable to the cattle raiser

I have 15 cows in calf now that are bred by my pure blooded Bulls that will come in this fall. I expect to have some good half bloods that I can spare. If any of our farmers wish to purchase a thorough bred young bull or heifers I can give all the information necessary in regard to prices, payments and shipping.—for any other information address the undersigned.

How to Secure a Good Instrument.

The introduction of the renting plan in our own city and vicinity has proved a wonderful success, demonstrating its usefullness in providing families with instruments.

We can refer to hundreds who would have never had an organ or piano in their house but for this plan. It recommends itself to the mechanic, clerk, school teacher, laborer and others who have a state salary, part of which they can devote to the payment of an instrument. It has also been found convenient to merchants who have all their capital actively employed, and do not wish to draw the full price of instrument from their business at one time. The success of this plan leads us to extend the limits to which the plan has been confined, and we are now prepared to furnish instruments to all who want one, on the best terms we possibly can. For the purpose of giving information we annex some of the usual terms for for an instrument on this plan.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

[illegible] Ashton, Mass., a few days ago, [illegible] aged 8 years, took a boy named Lane, 3 years of age, into the woods, and there beat him with a club in a most shocking manner. Lane was soon discovered, but died of his injuries four hours after. The child-murderer fled, but was subsequently arrested....A young man and a young lady, accompanied by an infant brother of the latter, went out on the Niagara river on the Fourth for a boat ride, and, getting in the current, were carried over the falls and dashed to pieces. The man and woman were to have been married the next day.... Buffalo has been shaken by an earthquake. No damage, but considerable scare....Frank H. Walworth, the young man who shot his father at New York, and was convicted of murder in the second degree, has been sentenced to imprisonment for life. The youthful parricide listened unmoved to the dreadful sentence, and walked from the scene of the trial with a firm step, and in an apparently cheerful frame of mind. On his way to the Tombs, after sentence, he said: "I am glad I did not have to endure the long lecture I had anticipated Judge Davis would inflict upon me. I thoroughly understand my position, and did not desire any instruction in relation thereto. I simply wish time to arrange my affairs, and I shall then submit myself to my fate with all the equanimity I can command."

THE young parricide, Frank Walworth, has taken up his quarters in Sing Sing Prison.... The repairs to the steamer Tigress at the Brooklyn Navy Yard has proved such a bungling job that the vessel is less seaworthy than when she entered the docks, in consequence of which the search for the Polaris is indefinitely postponed....It is probable that the steamship City of Washington will be floated and repaired. Had she struck 200 yards farther to the left, on the Little Gull Rock, her 700 souls would, beyond a doubt, have followed the victims of the Atlantic. At the time of the disaster she was running at the rate of nine knots an hour, notwithstanding a dense fog prevailed, and the Captain evidently had not the least idea of his [illegible].

POOR'S Railroad Manual for 1873-4, just issued at New York, gives some statistics that possess considerable value in connection with a subject of great present interest, being a detailed statement of the returns from 425 railroads of the United States. These lines have an aggregate length of nearly 60,000 miles, and cost over three billions of dollars. It is shown that the total earnings of all the railroads in the United States during the past year were $110,000,000, being more than the receipts of the United States Treasury, and the net earnings, $48,000,000, more than the interest account of the Government....A man named King made a balloon ascension from Morristown, Vt., on the Fourth, and when two miles up encountered a snow-storm, which covered his balloon an inch thick, and sent it down rapidly. He descended in a forest, where he wandered about for 48 hours without food. He was finally discovered, much exhausted from cold and hunger, but otherwise uninjured....Laura Keene is dying of consumption in New York.

The West.

A TWO-STORY house fell in Mt. Carroll, Ill., the other day, and three persons were injured, it is feared, fatally....Capt. Randall, of the Twenty-third Infantry, and command, with 50 Apache scouts, recently surrounded a camp of Apache Indians in Arizona, and captured twenty-five warriors, with squaws and children. The next day, Delchay's camp was surrounded, and he, with the remainder of the once formidable band, to the number of 131, surrendered. Delchay says it is impossible for the Apaches to evade their own traitors. They follow night and day....Sickness is reported among the Modoc prisoners at Fort Klamath. Close confinement is commencing to tell on Capt. Jack and Curly-Headed Doctor. The former is weak, gaunt, and complaining.... At Green Lake, Wis., on the morning of the Fourth, a picnic party went out on the lake in the sailing yacht H. B. Harshard, on a fishing excursion, and had proceeded but a short distance when a squall struck the boat, capsizing it. The following persons were thrown into the water and drowned: Mrs. A. P. Carman, Mrs. Geo. Harding, Miss Jennie Olis, Mrs. M. C. Russell and child, Wm. Bloxham, wife and child, Mrs. John Baird, and a child of the Rev. Mr. Allen....The number of Modoc captives has been increased by the surrender of three more braves, with their women and children. ....A vast amount of property was destroyed by the recent storms in Illinois, Iowa, Missouri, Ohio and Indiana. Houses, fences and bridges were demolished, and in some sections serious loss of life is reported. The grain fields have suffered serious injury, the damage in Ohio alone being estimated at upward of $2,000,000.

A COMPANY with $300,000 capital has been organized in Cincinnati for the establishment of a zoological garden in that city....At Pioche, Nevada, the other day, a desperado named Harrington shot and killed four men because one of them killed his dog....W. H. Hazleton, a prominent Indianapolis lawyer, has squandered the funds in his hands belonging to various trusts, and sloped for parts unknown, leaving his friends and bondsmen in the lurch....A lively contest is going on for the Pacific terminus of the Northern Pacific railroad. Seattle offers, by way of donation, land and money estimated at $1,000,000, and is still adding. Taco offers the entire control of the water-front of the city, and a large amount of land in case Seattle does not get the terminus....Gen. Stanley, in charge of the military expedition escorting the engineers of the Northern Pacific railway, reports that the survey of the road has been made to a point seventy miles west of Bismarck, Dakota. The route traverses a finely-watered and fertile country, and cuts through ample coal deposits twenty-seven miles west of the Missouri river.

LORD GORDON, who was lately robbed of $41,000 in bonds, supposed by detectives to lure him over the border, was seized recently, near Fort Garry, by two officers from Minneapolis, and brought to disputed territory near Pembina, where he was rescued, and the officers arrested by a squad of troops from Fort Dufferin. It is said Gordon was made drunk and gagged by his captors. The plan for Gordon's arrest was laid at Minneapolis, where Marshall O. Roberts, of New York, and representatives of the estate of Horace F. Clark have been for some time. Roberts and Clark some time ago gave bonds ($37,000) for Gordon's appearance in the suits with Jay Gould. Gordon is also wanted by New York parties on other accounts.... A half mile of the Missouri Pacific railroad track near Kickapoo, Kansas, dropped into the Missouri river a few days ago. It sank out of sight in the flooded stream in one lurch, and without any warning. It seems that the river undermined the track without the knowledge of railroad men. The water where the track was situated is now 40 feet deep. Railroad men say it is the most fearful rent ever seen. The escape of trains was almost miraculous....A St. Paul dispatch of the 8th says: The steamer Aunt Betsy from Kalamazoo river, Michigan, by way of the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, arrived this noon. She left Kalamazoo June 27....The Chicago Tribune, of the 10th inst., prints reports of the crops in various sections of Illinois, Iowa, Ohio and Indiana. In the two first named States, notwithstanding the recent heavy rains, the prospect is exceedingly flattering. In those sections of Ohio and Indiana that were visited by the late storms every species of grain have been irretrievably damaged, and the crops will prove almost a total failure in some localities.

FOUR Indian prisoners were recently shot dead at Fort Hall, Idaho, while attempting to escape from the guard....The Joliet (Ill.) Methodist Conference has granted a license to Mrs. Jennie F. Willing to preach the Gospel. ....Over 250 barns were demolished in one county of Wisconsin by the storm on the 4th of July....The women tax-payers of Ohio are making a strong and concerted movement toward securing a recognition of the equality of woman before the law in the State Constitution....Stanley's Yellowstone expedition recently encountered a terrific wind and hail storm near Fort Lincoln. Every wagon was overturned by the gale, and hail-stones of fabulous size fell, causing a stampede of horses, mules and men. No damage....The trial of the Modoc assassins before the military commission commenced at Fort Klamath, Oregon, on the 5th of July.

The South.

A DISPATCH from Houston, Texas, says the weather is more favorable to the crops, and worms no longer appear in Texas. Two-thirds of the crop of cotton and cereals are very fine.

THE statement telegraphed from the South that the cholera was raging in Alabama was wholly false. It has appeared in but one or two towns....Reports to the Agricultural Department at Washington from the cotton regions indicate that the crop of this staple this year will at least be equal to that of last.

THE farmers are moving in the Old North State. At a meeting in Raleigh, the other day, a State Grange was organized....A project is on foot at St. Louis for the consolidation of all the steamboat lines of the lower Mississippi river, which, if carried out, will constitute one of the largest and most powerful transportation companies in the world.

Washington.

THE HON. WM. B. ALLISON and other distinguished citizens of Iowa have petitioned the Attorney-General to compel the Union Pacific railroad to operate its road in connection with its branches as a continuous line in the manner required by acts of Congress. It appears an unjust discrimination is made by the Union Pacific against the Kansas Pacific and other branches in charging heavy local freight and passenger rates on all business from their branches, thus practically cutting them off from the through traffic. The Attorney-General's decision will have an important bearing upon the finances of the Union Pacific....There is $78,000,000 in coin and coin certificates in the Treasury....A Washington dispatch of the 4th says: The Government counsel have not yet decided what to do to offset the combined movement of the Union Pacific railroad for the purpose of defeating the Credit Mobilier suit, and the matter remains in a very unpromising condition.

IT is authoritatively stated that neither the President nor Secretary of the Interior will interfere in behalf of the Modoc prisoners, but that the finding of the court-martial will be approved.

A DEFICIT of nearly one million dollars having been discovered in the accounts of ex-Secretary of the Interior Jacob Thompson, who resigned his position in President Buchanan's Cabinet, in 1861, to join the rebellion, an examination has revealed the fact that the defalcation was committed by one of his clerks. ....It is stated that the civil service rules, as modified, are being strictly enforced in all the departments....The committee appointed to investigate the financial management of the Howard University have submitted their report, in which they completely exonerate Gen. Howard from the charge of misappropriation of the funds of the institution. They say: "The recorded proceedings of the Board of Trustees will show that no single dollar of the university money was ever voted as a gratuity to Gen. Howard, nor any money at any time, under any pretext, to which he was not justly entitled, in consideration for valuable and indispensable services faithfully rendered."

A SPECIAL dispatch to the Chicago Times states that the President has tendered the Chief Justiceship to Senator Conkling, but that it is doubtful whether he will accept.... Gen. Howard is declared by the Attorney-General to be responsible for all the losses sustained in the Freedmen's Bureau by the Government through himself or any of the subordinates he appointed under the act of 1867. They may be prosecuted criminally for any defalcations which happened not longer than two years ago; and prosecuted civilly without any limitation as to time. Gen. Howard and any of his assistants who are army officers are also subject to trial by court-martial....The Secretary of War has designated three officers of the army to select a site and examine plans for the military prison at Rock Island....President Grant denies that he has any aspirations for a third term....Mrs. S. S. Farrell has been appointed to succeed Jesse R. Grant as Postmaster at Covington, Ky....The new postal treaty with Japan is nearly completed....The plates having been completed, the work of printing the new fifty-cent note will commence in a few days. The new note will be a quarter of an inch shorter and a quarter of an inch wider than the one now in circulation.

Foreign.

EX-EMPRESS EUGENIE has been interviewed by a correspondent of the New York World. She predicts that France will speedily return to Bonapartism, and that she will become the conservator of European peace and order, and the extirpator of all communistic and anti-Christian societies. France will again lead the world, will restore the Pope to his old dignity, and pulverize Germany into insignificant States....Another foreign steamer has been wrecked near the baleful Sambro Light, which drew the Atlantic to its destruction, but there is, happily, no loss of life. The Inman steamship City of Washington, from Liverpool for New York, struck on Gull Rock, 70 miles west of Sambro, on Saturday, the 5th inst. There was a dense fog at the time. All the passengers and crew, with their baggage, were landed safely. The ship will become a total wreck....A duel was fought on Luxembourg territory, on the 7th inst., between M. Ranc, a member of the French Assembly, and Paul de Cassagnac, the famous fighting editor of Paris, in which the latter was seriously and the former slightly wounded.... The New York Herald's dispatches confirm the arrival of Sir Samuel and Lady Baker at Khartoum, on the Upper Nile. An important geographical discovery is said to have been made by Baker which will astound the scientific world, as it pretends that Lakes Tanganyika and Albert Nyanza prove to be one and the same water, and a magnificent inland sea 700 miles in length.

COL. MACKENZIE's invasion of Mexico in pursuit of the Kickapoos seems to have occasioned even less excitement there than in this country. The newspapers of the city of Mexico refer to the matter only to chronicle the absence of any feeling on the subject among the Mexicans....True bills have been found against George Bidwell, Austin Bidwell, George McDonnell and Edwin Noyes, the Bank of England forgers, and they will be tried at the Old Bailey in August....Eighteen Norwegians, belonging to the German Arctic Navigation Company's service, who were left on one of the Spitzbergen group of islands, were found dead by the party which went to their relief. ....Don Carlos has ordered the arrest of the Cure of Santa Cruz.

FRANCE has just paid to Germany the second installment of 250,000,000 francs of the last milliard of the war indemnity. There now remains to be paid only 50,000,000 francs, which is due Sept. 5, 1873....The Spanish Government has issued another manifesto declaring that the rebellion must be crushed at once, and, availing itself of the extraordinary powers granted by the Cortes, avows a determination to keep all soldiers in service until the end of the war, whether their terms of enlistment have expired or not....An attempt was recently made to burn the Vienna Exposition building....How strangely this reads, coming from Spain, lately the land of chivalry and punctilio: "The Lieutenant-Colonel of a regiment stationed at Tarifa has been cashiered for challenging Senor Campos to fight a duel." ....The Canadian Pacific railway scandal continues to agitate our northern neighbors. It has transpired that Smith and McMullen, of Chicago, obtained the contract for building the road on the basis of a subsidy of $10,000,000 gold, $20,000,000 of Dominion bonds indorsed by the British Government, and 50,000,000 acres of land.

Death of Jesse Grant.

The late Jesse Root Grant, father of the President, died of softening of the brain and spinal column. Th

[illegible] winter, encamped on the Trenton, Benton, expecting to reach that e next day with their packs of pelts. ng the night, however, some In s stole their horses, and were far reach when morning came. e men came to Benton, procured horses, ammunition, etc., and ten em left in pursuit of the thieving ns, vowing as they started that would recover their property even had to go to the Saskatchewan it. Each man was armed with a y rifle and two large revolvers, was mounted, and five good pack animals were taken along with the party.

Whig State Convention [illegible] and drafted the platform adopted. Had he been ambitious to fill a political position, he could have though a stout Whig, he kep his business, and left the others. When the Whig part he was out of his political ele acted with the moderate I His Republicanism was of p origin. He was, however, patriot, a firm Union man, a hater of rebellion and rebels.

His appointment as Postr Covington was first made by Johnson, with whom, in hi with Congress, he heartily syn —at least till about the close ministration and the break be President and the pro tem. Se War. He took sides, as was been expected, with his son, that time forward voted with publican party, sometimes atte conventions and making speech were noticeable for concise direct force.

Mr. Grant had a knack of and threw off his verses, some had a good deal of dry wit, ease. Some of his lines ha their way to print. He amuse by writing rhymed letters, man of his advanced age car pretty extensive corresponden only writing for the press was of autobiographical and family printed in the New York Led years ago. Mr. Grant was citizen and a pleasant neighbo a man not to be compelled thwarted. He had tenacity of and a stubborn will, which itself and carried its own points in spite of opposition, and it was to this strong will-power as much as to his constitutional endurance that he so long resisted disease and the shadow of the pale messenger, who knocks with equal hand at the door of the palace and the cottage.—Cincinnati Commercial.

The Ocean Depths.

Until a few years past nothing had been ascertained with certainty concerning the character of the ocean depths. It was the popular idea that they were wholly incapable of sustaining animal life. Men conceived of them as a desolate waste, shrouded in eternal darkness, and subjected to such stupendous pressure as to make life of any kind impossible. Even men of science shared in the prevalent idea. They were unwilling to accept the instances of animals, comparatively high in the scale of life, that were reported to have been brought up on sounding lines from great depths. The great ocean slumbered beneath the moon, covering a region apparently inaccesible to human research and experimment. Dr. Carpenter and his colleagues, however, found that it was possible to work with as much certainty, if not with as much ease, at a depth of 600 fathoms as at 100. Their operations were carried to the depth of nearly three statute miles miles with perfect success. The bed of the ocean, comprising an area of 140,000,000 square miles, is now added to the legitimate field of natural history. It is no longer a barren waste, but a nursery of rich and varied life. Its fauna in many cases exhibits a series of most elaborate and delicate organisms, of exquisite beauty in their soft shades of coloring, and the rainbow tints of their marvelous phosphorence, far surpassing the invertebrate forms which teem in the belt of shallow water that fringes the land.

Electricity and Blasting.

The Aberdeen Free Press says that an experiment was made with electricity as a means of firing blasting charges in Mr. Fife's quarries at Kemnay. A huge breast of rock, calculated to weigh about 2,000 tons, was bored in eleven places, charged and fired almost simultaneously by a current of electricity from a battery which was under the care of Mr. David Wright, electrician, Aberdeen. The huge mass was started with little noise from the report, but with a rumbling noise like that of distant thunder. A second blasting was fired the next day, and though the ground was covered with snow, and a heavy storm was falling, wires extending 1,500 feet in length being laid, and a current of electricity being put on, in an instant a tremendous explosion was heard, which shook the ground like an earthquake. Great masses of granite were upheaved in the air, and about 5,000 tons were displaced. It is the largest blast which has ever been witnessed in these quarries, effected by means of electricity applied by a new apparatus most ingeniously constructed.

THE CABLES.—It may be interesting to note the lengths of each of the Atlantic cables. That of 1865, which has recently broken, is 1,896½ miles long, and the cable of 1866 is 1,868½ miles. The French cable of 1869, from Brest to St. Pierre, is 2,557 miles in length; while the line about to be laid will be about the same length as that of 1865. Since the latter cable broke, the French cable parted 208 miles from Brest, in about 500 fathoms of water. The accident was repaired by the Hibernia, a length of 100 miles having been cut out and replaced by a similar length of new cable

AN INQUIRING SUBSCRIBER IN DANBURY.

A Man Visits the Editor to Find "Who Printed that Piece."

He came in with an interrogation in one eye, and with a stick in one hand. One eye was covered with a handkerchief, and one arm was in a sling. His bearing was that of a man with a settled purpose in view.

"I want to see," said he, "the man that puts things into this paper."

We intimated that several of us earned a frugal livelihood in that way.

"Well, I want to see the man which cribs things out of other papers—the fellow who writes mostly with shears, you understand."

We explained to him that there were seasons when the gifted among us, driven to frenzy by the scarcity of ideas and events, and by the clamorous demands of an insatiable public, in moments of emotional insanity plunged the glittering shears into our exchanges. He went on calmly, but in a voice tremulous with suppressed feeling and indistinct through the recent loss of half a dozen or so of his front teeth:

"Just so. I presume so. I don't the man that printed it, just a few moments. You see John Smith lives next door to my house, when I'm to home, and he gets how-come-you-so every little period. Now, when he's sober, he's all right, if you keep out of his way; but when he's drunk he goes home and breaks dishes, and tips over the stove, and throws the hardware around, and makes it inconvenient for his wife; and sometimes he gets his gun and goes out calling on his neighbors, and it ain't pleasant.

"Not that I want to say anything about Smith; but me and my wife don't think he ought to do so. He came home drunk yesterday and broke all the kitchen windows out of his house, and followed his wife around with the carving-knife, talking about her liver, and after a while he lay down by my fence and went to sleep. I had been reading that little piece; it wasn't much of a piece, and I thought if I could pour some cold water down the spine of his back, and make him sober, it would be more comfortable for his wife, and a square thing all around. So I poured a bucket of spring water down John Smith's spine of his back."

"Well," said we, as our visitor paused, "did it make him sober?"

Our visitor took a firmer hold of his stick, and replied with increased emotion:

"Just so. I suppose it did make him sober as a Judge in less time than you could say Jack Robinson; but, mister, it made him mad. It made him the maddest man I ever see, and Mr. John Smith is a bigger man than me, and stouter. Bla—bless him, I never knew he was half so stout till yesterday, and he's handy with his fists, too. I should suppose he is the handiest man with his fists I ever saw."

"Then he went for you, did he?" we asked, innocently.

"Just so. Exactly. I suppose he went for me about the best he knew; but I don't hold no grudge against John Smith. I suppose he ain't a good man to hold a grudge against. I want to see the man who printed that piece. I want to see him bad. I feel as though it would soothe me to see that man. I want to show him how a drunken man acts when you pour water down the spine of his back. That's what I come for."

Our visitor, who had poured water down the spine of a drunken man's back, remained until about 6 p. m., and then went up street to find the man that printed that little piece. The man he is looking for started for Alaska last evening for a summer vacation, and will not be back before September, 1878.—Danbury News.

Manna.

Science has, so far, failed to discover any way by which the Israelites could be supplied with nutritious food short of a miraculous dispensation. But no one has yet discovered any source of supply bearing a proportion to the quantity gathered by the sojourning Hebrews. Several kinds of trees yield something analogous, but it is glutinous —a sort of viscid exudation—whereas that which was found every morning in the desert was a clean, well-defined, dry substance like a coriander seed, says the sacred chronicle. A grove of tamarask trees, near Mount Sinai, in the valley of Farran, furnishes what the monks in that vicinity call manna. They are bushy, about ten feet high, from which drops of a sweetish thick fluid ooze. If taken early in the morning, before the sun is up, it may be kept in earthen pots a considerable time. It is used in lieu of sugar in the convent. Therefore, the disbelieving in the miracle must extend their researches still further if any expectation is entertained of explaining away the positive testimony of the great lawgiver Moses.

FARM AND GARDEN.

How to Raise Carrots.

I usually take grass ground which has been plowed the fall previous; plow and harrow thoroughly in early spring. I then strike up into ridges, say from 18 to 24 inches apart, running the plow in the same furrow, to insure deep plowing. I manure in the furrows between the ridges.

I then prepare the seed, which is done by putting it into a bag and dipping the bag into water, thoroughly wetting the seed. I leave the seed thus wet in a warm room, say in the kitchen, for about thirty-six hours, or until the seed is nearly ready to sprout. The time required will depend upon the temperature of the room. I then spread the seed out on a cloth or some convenient place, and stir occasionally until it is dry enough to run through a seed-planter without sticking together. The seed is then ready to plant.

I now run a plow through the ridges (as already prepared), splitting them and forming a new ridge over the manure which has been placed between the ridges. I level off the top of the ridge with a rake to about six inches in width, e same time removing any small or lumps of earth. I plant with planters.

eed is good the carrots will come fore any weeds. As soon as the s show plainly, I dress over the d with hoe or rake, thus preventweeds coming up; and, in fact, have any weeds. I always have crops of carrots, and with little secret lies in bringing the seed to the germinating point, and preparing the ground as stated, so t the carrots get the start of weeds. und is prepared and lies a few before the carrots are planted, the will get the start of the carrots, ill require a great deal of labor. seen people hunting for carrots weeds, while mine were kept free weeds with less than half the labor. r plant carrots until the ground med by the sun. They then come ickly and are easily taken care of. respondence Country Gentleman.

Waste Paper.

housekeepers are aware of the uses to which waste paper may be After a stove has been blackened be kept looking very well for a ime by rubbing it with paper morning. Rubbing with paper is h nicer way of keeping the outside tea-kettle, coffee-pot and tea-pot and clean, than the old way of ng them in suds. Rubbing them paper is also the best way of polknives and tinware after scouring them. If a little flour be held on the paper in rubbing tinware and spoons, they shine like new silver. For polishing mirrors, windows, lamp chimneys, etc., paper is better than dry cloth. Preserves and pickles keep much better if brown paper instead of cloth is tied over the jar. Canned fruit is not apt to mold if a piece of writing paper, cut to fit each can, is laid directly upon the fruit. Paper is much better to put under carpet than straw. It is warmer, thinner, and makes less noise when one walks over it. Two thicknesses of paper placed between the other coverings on a bed are as warm as a quilt. If it is necessary to step upon a chair, always lay a paper upon it, and thus save the paint and wood-work from damage.

Lines for Three Horses Again.

A Buckingham, Iowa, man says in the Prairie Farmer:

In your last issue, I see a subscriber wishes to know how to adjust lines on three horses. I will give him my method, and if he don't receive a plan from some better horseman, he can adopt mine.

First of all, I stand my three horses together. I put a line on the off and one on the nigh horse. I take each inside part of the lines and snap them into the middle horse's bit, each side of his mouth, then take each outside horse's hitching strap and tie them to the middle horse's harness; so by this plan you take "all three horses in one hand." If he has a quiet horse that will "walk up," he can just tie him into the middle horse hook on the tugs, and all is right. This plan is a great deal better if a man has a quiet outside horse. This is so arranged that if he wants to hitch to the wagon, he has the two horses together with the lines already adjusted by the other plan. If you wish to use two horses alone, you have either to change one line, or remove the middle horse.

To Make Court-Plaster.

Soak isinglass in a little warm water for twenty-four hours; then evaporate nearly all the water by a gentle heat, dissolve the residue in a little proof spirits of wine, and strain the whole through a piece of open linen. The strained mass should be a stiff jelly when cool. Now extend a piece of silk on a wooden frame, and fix it tight with tacks and pack-thread. Melt the jelly and apply it to the silk thinly and evenly with a hair brush. A second coating must be applied when the first has dried. When both are dry, cover the whole surface with two or three coatings of balsam of Peru, applied in the same way. Plaster thus made is very pliable, and never breaks.

A Good Apple Dumpling.

Peel and core the apples and put them in a two-quart basin. Make a crust of either sour cream and soda or with baking powder, the same as for rice biscuits. Put water enough to cook the apples, and cover with the crust. Put an over-lapping cover over the basin, and cook on top of the stove, or bake in the oven if you prefer. A sauce made of butter, sugar, water and nutmeg, or lemon, is excellent, as is also sweet cream where the apples are not acid. Twenty-five minutes is long enough to cook ordinary apples. This is sometimes called a "Brother Jonathan." Peach cobblers are made similarly with peaches instead of apples, and are best with cream for sauce.

Bread of Brown or Graham Flour.

Measure one teacup of flour into the pan the bread is to rise in, and on that pour one quart of boiling water, and let it cool till you can bear your finger in it; then add a dessert-spoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of brown sugar, a piece of lard as large as a walnut (the lard must be perfectly sweet and nice), two tablespoonfuls good yeast, and as much more flour as you can stir in with a stick; put in a warm place to rise all night; in the morning grease well a cast-iron baking pan (sheet iron burns too readily), pour the risen dough into it, smooth it nicely on the top; bake in half an hour's time, just one hour.

Keeping Leather Harness Pliable.

It is well known that leather articles, kept in stables, soon become brittle in consequence of ammoniacal exhalations, which affect both harness hanging up in such localities and the shoes of those who frequent them. The usual applications of grease are not always sufficient to meet this difficulty; but it is said that by adding to them a small quantity of glycerine the leather will be kept continually in a soft and pliable condition.

Washing Woolens.

If you do not wish to have white woolens shrink when washed, make a good suds of hard soap, and wash the flannels in it. Do not rub woolens like cotton cloth, but simply squeeze them between the hands, or slightly pound them with a clothes pounder. The suds should be strong, and the woolens should be rinsed in warm water. By rubbing flannels on a board, and rinsing them in cold water, they soon become very thick.

Head Cheese.

Boil in water somewhat salted the ears, skin, feet, and a proportion of the sides of hogs, till the meat drops off, or the flesh is quite soft. Take out and chop not so fine as for sausage; season with pepper, salt, cloves, and herbs; mix well together and put in a pot or vessel with a weight on it. When needed it can be cut in slices and eaten cold.

WINNING GOLDEN OPINIONS.—Perhaps no man living has won more golden opinions than Dr. Walker, as the enormous and widely increasing sale of his CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS attests. We never look into one of our exchanges, but there is a panegyric of the Bitters staring us in the face. Our readers will say that there must be a reason for all this praise. They are right. The efficacy of this celebrated medicine is established by evidence which it is impossible to doubt. Among the thousands who have borne testimony to its excellence, there is not one dissentient voice. In very many phases of inorganic disease it seems to be unfailing. All diseases arising from a vitiated state of the blood are surely eradicated by it. It is an effectual remedy for pulmonary complaints, bilious, remittent and intermittent fevers, rheumatism and dyspepsia. It purges the body of all unhealthy humors, gives tone to the system, and where the vital powers are enfeebled, restores their functions to vigorous and healthy action. All this it does the more effectually because its operation is not interfered with by the presence of alcohol. The VINEGAR BITTERS is perfectly free from any such hurtful ingredient. We have always believed that plants contain the true remedies for disease, and all the remedies necessary. Dr. Walker is on the line of real progress, and we hope that he will not rest on his present discoveries.—[Com.

Modern Egypt.

The land of the Khedive is likely soon to rival in greatness the ancient kingdom of the Pharaohs and the Ptolemies. Modern Egypt cannot, it is true, compare with ancient Egypt in the number of its inhabitants, for Diodorus tell us that the latter contained 30,000 towns and villages, while Herodotus says that in the reign of Amasis there were in Egypt 20,000 cities. What successive sovereigns, however, from Sesostris to the caliphs failed to effect, or accomplished only in part, has been completely achieved under the rule of the Khedive by the opening of the Suez canal, while Alexandria and Cairo are fast becoming cities of palaces, and the wealth of the country is every day increasing.

Moscow and Chicago.

A writer in the Lakeside Monthly for July draws a comparison between the burning of Moscow and the Chicago fire. In 1381, Moscow was burned by the Mongols, who slew 24,000 of its inhabitants. It was again consumed in 1536 and 1547. In 1571 occurred its greatest fire, which, judged by its disastrous consequences, was probably the greatest fire of modern history. At that fire the Tartars surrounded the city, and in the flames consumed 200,000 of its inhabitants. Thirty years later the city was visited by a terrible famine, by which 127,000 of its citizens perished. Ten years later it was taken by the Poles and Cossacks, and again burned, with 100,000 persons. Thus within the period of seventy-five years the unfortunate city was four times burned, and lost 400,000 of its inhabitants. The energy and skill displayed in rebuilding their city by these rude people, was worthy of the stalwart race, who two centuries later had the nerve and the patriotism to apply the torch to their own homes, and splendid palaces, and again destroy the city of their love, rendering themselves houseless and homeless, in the midst of a terrible winter, in order that a haughty and vigorous invader might be driven by famine and the rigors of an icy climate from the land he had almost conquered. Moscow was at that time of precisely the same size as Chicago at the time of the fire. The city was then one of magnificent distances, being eight miles in diameter, and twenty-four miles in circumference. It contained 12,000 buildings, of which only 700 remained as a nucleus for the recuperation that followed the burning. A hundred thousand of her citizens perished by the flames, and the subsequent exposures and privations. Forty years ago Moscow contained not less than 1,600 chapels, churches and convents. It contained five different quarters, subdivided into circles, the central and highest of which, the Kremlin, lay at the fork of the two rivers. There was the palace of the ancient Czars, Boris Godonnoff's palace of granite, the patriarch's palace, the arsenal, town hall, and several churches and monasteries. The city was filled with fine houses and streets, and the rapidity with which the Muscovites restored their burnt city, was on a par with the recent gigantic efforts of Chicago.

A Great Railroad Sold.

A sale of railroad property in California, which is said to have been recently effected, is one of the most gigantic private financial operations which has ever occurred in this or any other country. Four-fifths of the extensive lines and vast properties of the Central Pacific California Railroad Company has been sold to the Southern Pacific road, of which Tom Scott is the head. The Central Pacific owns more lines of railroads than any other in the United States. They include the western half of the Pacific railroad, from Ogden to San Francisco, about 900 miles; a second line from Sacramento to San Francisco, nearly 100 miles; lines north and south through the center of the State of California, stretching toward Oregon on the north, and to a connection with the Southern Pacific road on the south, and amounting now to nearly 400 miles of completed track; and the Napa Valley railroad of 50 miles—in all, something like 1,500 miles. Besides this, the company owns the steamboats on the Sacramento river and San Francisco bay, and valuable ferry privileges and wharves and real estate, both in San Francisco and at Oakland and Alameda, opposite. In addition to all this, the company has a line of 150 miles of road due south from San Francisco through the coast valleys, extending in the direction of Los Angeles and San Diego, where, by connection with the Southern Pacific railroad, it will form the San Francisco end thereof. All the other main properties of the company, save a one-fifth share, which is still held by Leland Sanford, one of the original owners, and the present and continuing President, have been transferred by C. P. Huntington and Mark Hopkins to a company of San Francisco capitalists.

Thirty Years Lost and Found.

The two Canadian cities, Montreal and Quebec, have a romance to share between them. Thirty years ago this summer a 3-year-old boy was left without his nurse to play upon his father's door-step in the latter city, and when his parents searched for him he was nowhere to be found. Detectives were placed on his track, advertisements were inserted in the journals, and rewards were offered, but the little wanderer could not be found, and his family have since mourned him as dead. The father of the child was named Richards, and a friend of his recently visiting Montreal, and having occasion to buy a hat, went into the store of a hatter named Richmond. The resemblance of the proprietor to his friend at home struck the purchaser, and he questioned him concerning his history. The man said that when a child he had been stolen from Quebec by an Indian woman whom he had regarded as his mother, until on her death-bed she confessed her act, and gave him a name as near like that his father bore as she could remember. After the squaw's death the youth tried to find his parents, but bearing a different name, and having but a vague clue, he was unsuccessful, and settled himself down to the business in which he was found. The mother came on to Montreal, and by certain birth-marks—the strawberry mark, perhaps—identified him as her son, which is the latest development of the romance up to date.

RAIN.—It will doubtless surprise many to learn that the mean rainfall of New York city exceeds that of London in the proportion of 47.62 inches in New York to 25 inches in London, from which may be estimated the relative importance of continual "drizzles" and occasional "pours." It is stated by a Prussian horticulturist that when the leaves of the common chickweed unfold and its flowers remain open and erect till midday, bright weather may be expected; but when the plants droop, and the flowers do not open, then look out for showers.

Taking Cold.

Prof. Rosenthal gives the following explanation of the pathogenic action of exposure to cold: Suppose an individual to have been subjected to an elevated temperature, such as that of a ball-room or theater, or to have engaged in violent muscular exercise; the cutaneous vessels are dilated, and in a state more or less akin to paralysis, and in all cases more slow to contract than usual. If at this moment the same person be exposed abruptly and without any intermediate transition to a low temperature, especially to a current of cold air, a considerable loss of heat will be observed upon the surface of the body. The blood which has been thus cooled externally comes back into the internal organs and cools them suddenly, which circumstance alone may, in an organ predisposed to disease, become the active cause of some severe malady. The cutaneous vessels, on their part, become contracted, driving out the blood which they contained, and thus produce a kind of hyperæmia, which in itself may exercise a morbid action. This cause, however, is usually only an accessory one, at least in cases where the temperature has been much elevated. The vessels have lost their tenicity, and do not contract suddenly. But if the danger from collateral hyperæmia is thus diminished, that from refrigeration is increased.

Ants.

An observer of the habits and instincts of ants relates that a vase on the mantel-shelf in his sitting-room, which was usually filled with fresh violets, was haunted by very small red ants. The insects issued from a hole in the wall above, and gradually increased in number until they formed an almost unbroken procession. He brushed them to the floor for several days, but, as they were not killed, the result was that they formed a colony in the wall at the base of the mantel, and, ascending thence to the shelf, the vase was soon attacked from above and below. "One day," says the writer, "I observed a number of ants, perhaps thirty or forty, on the shelf at the foot of the vase. Thinking to kill them, I struck them lightly with the end of my finger, killing some and disabling the rest. The effect of this was immediate and unexpected. As soon as the living arrived near where their fellows lay dead and suffering, they turned and fled with all possible haste. In half an hour the wall above the mantel-shelf was cleared.

Peculiarity of the Waters of Lake Tahoe.

We believe it is a well-established fact that the bodies of prsons drowned in Lake Tahoe have never been recovered, the clear cold waters of the lake absolutely refusing to give up their dead. This circumstance, which at first thought appears strange, is accounted for upon the hypothesis that the waters at the bottom of the lake are so icy cold as actually to arrest decomposition and consequent expansion of a dead body, one of the conditions under which it would be expected to return to the surface. Whether the victims who repose at the bottom of the pellucid waters of this far-famed lake undergo petrifaction, or are transformed into mermen and mermaids, is a secret which will never be known until they come to the surface at the summons of Gabriel's trump.—Gold Hill News.

The Arkansas River.

The Arkansas river, says an exchange, one of the longest in the Union, in its winding course measures nearly 2,000 miles. Its source is in the Rocky Mountains, at an altitude of about 10,000 feet. One peculiarity of this stream is, that its banks are often full, but never overflow. This is accounted for in that its bed is composed of sand and gravel, and the subsoil of the adjacent lands of the same material. The water spreads itself through the ground, instead of overflowing the country, as would be the case if the subsoil was composed of clay. Water for family use is abundant, pure, and soft. A pipe is driven in the ground twenty to twenty-five feet, a pump attached, and in working order, in a few hours, at an expense of from fifteen to seventeen dollars. This soil will produce, in great abundance, corn, oats, wheat, cotton, sweet and Irish potatoes, broom-corn, peanuts, tobacco, and fruits.

Power of the Press.

Rev. Dr. Stone, of San Francisco, speaks truthfully as follows: "The newspaper is more feared to-day in Congressional halls and the high places of corruption and villainy than laws and courts, the stings of conscience, and the thunder of Divine wrath. God is a great way off, and the judgment waits; but the ubiquitous reporter thrusts his sharp gaze into all covert and hidden schemes, and in an unerring detective. The pestilent spy will tell all he sees, tell it on the house tops, print for a nation of readers. Good! Give us more of this! Long live the reporter! Let every man who meditates a little piece of gainful fraud understand he is 'shadowed' at each step by this unbought espionage, and though he may not be converted, he will be restrained."

SENDING A SUBSTITUTE.—A German settler in Ohio, found guilty of selling liquor, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the county jail for thirty days, protested as follows: "Chail! Go to chail! Me go to chail! But I can't go! Dere's my piziness—my bakery. Who pakes my bread when I ben gone?" Then casting his eyes about the court appealingly, they fell upon the good-natured face of jolly Chris. Ellwaner, a fellow-countryman, who had no "piziness," and forthwith a brilliant idea struck him. Turning to the Judge, he said, in sober earnest: "Dere's Chris. Ellwaner! He got nothing to do; send him!"

AN alligator is rather smart about some things. He knows as much about strategy as a major-general of militia. He will poise himself on a log, open his mouth wide by elevating his upper jaw, and remain perfectly quiet. In a short time his mouth will fill with musketoes and flies, when down will come his jaw, taking every musketo and fly prisoner. He swallows them, licks his chop, and elevates his jaw to catch another floor full. This dish is regarded by the alligator as the most delicious that the country affords.

Forty Lodges of Redskins Wiped Out.

The Helena (Montana) Herald says: Our agent, just returned from Benton, brings the particulars of a recent fight between the whites and Indians, which terminated as fatally to the latter as did the engagement of Col. Baker and troops with the Piegans three years since. Some ten days ago a party of wolfers, who had been out in the Whoop-up country during the entire past winter, encamped on the Trenton, near Benton, expecting to reach that place next day with their packs of pelts. During the night, however, some Indians stole their horses, and were far out of reach when morning came.

The men came to Benton, procured other horses, ammunition, etc., and ten of them left in pursuit of the thieving Indians, vowing as they started that they would recover their property even if they had to go to the Saskatchewan for it. Each man was armed with a Henry rifle and two large revolvers, was well mounted, and five good pack animals were taken along with the party. The trail was soon found, and the pursuers pushed forward night and day, with but short rests, until they arrived at a small trading post at Cyprus Mountains, two hundred miles within the British borders. Here they found forty lodges of North Assinaboines, who met the whites with bows strung and guns cocked, saying that they knew the whites were after a fight with the Indians who had stolen their horses; that the Crees had stolen them, and left their camp the day before, but that the Crees were the Assinaboines' friends, and that the whites might have what fight they desired right there.

The whites took shelter within the trading post, which contained half a dozen white traders. By these they were also told that the stolen horses had passed the day previous, that the Assinaboines were aiding the Crees, and had fired several shots into the post. It was determined to attack this encampment of Assinaboines, and to do it on the Indian plan. Accordingly, at the first break of day the next morning, the sixteen or seventeen whites attacked and effectually wiped out the forty lodges, very few escaping. Only one white man was killed, and he was shot through the heart by a wounded Indian, whom he pursued into the brush.

How an Emperor Lives.

The activity of no sovereign in Europe can be compared to that of the Emperor of Austria, as he imposes upon himself about the hardest life one can imagine. In winter as in summer he rises at five in the morning, walks until seven, almost alway alone, then takes his coffee, and transacts business for two hours with the Councilor of State, Braun, and the other secretaries of his private chancery. He then gets into his carriage and drives from Sconbrunn or Laxenburg to Vienna to accord audience to the ministrs or deputations which have given the proper notice of their wish to obtain an interview. Afterward he goes out to pay visits in the city. At eleven he takes a very frugal breakfast and dines between four and five. His Majesty eats little and drinks still less. He prefers the national dishes to all others, and his dinner rarely lasts more than half an hour. In the evening, after having been to the theater or to a soiree, he works for some time with his ministers, never going out later than ten. If a fire breaks out he is always first on the spot. During the sporting season he takes the train at nine at night for Reichenan or Murzzschlag, dressed in the costume of a mountaineer, and passes the night on the highest rocks to hunt the chamois, or in the thick woods to shoot black-cock. He is at the same time, like his ancestors, a man of the cabinet, and fond of strong exercises in the open air.

Woman's Writes.

An exchange asserts that the best paid of the American correspondents at Vienna is Miss Olive Harper, who was sent there by the San Francisco Alta, but who also corresponds with the St. Louis Globe. Miss Harper is incurably lame, and cannot move, except on crutches. Yet she is very enterprising, and is an interesting writer. She was posting off to the lava beds to report the movements of Capt. Jack, when the Alta countermanded the orders it had given her, and sent her to Vienna. Though lamed by anchylosis of the knee-joint, she is a splendid horsewoman, and even on her crutches she glides along gracefully and easily. She is thirty and a widow—Miss Harper being merely her literary pseudonym.

Microscopic Worms.

Some time ago, Assistant-Surgeon Lewis, of the British army, having been assigned to special duty under the Sanitary Commission for the Government of India, in examining the urine and blood of certain patients, discovered the existence of living, active worms, hitherto unobserved. These worms are 1-75 of an inch in length, and they have a transverse diameter of 1-3,500 of an inch. They are so numerous as to be found in blood drawn from any part of the body, and so persistent that they may exist in the system for months or years without any marked evil consequences being observed. It is said, however, that they may give rise to serious diseases, and ultimately cause death. These worms appear, through the microscope, like incompletely developed snakes; they move incessantly, coiling and uncoiling themselves, and rush about among the corpuscles in all directions. They do not appear to exist anywhere but in the blood and urine.

FORCE OF IMAGINATION.—At a large dinner party once, the poet Rogers was speaking of the inconvenience of having windows formed of one sheet of glass. They look as if there was no glass, he said. A short time ago, as I sat by the table with my back to one of these panes, it appeared to me that the window was open, and such was the force of imagination that I actually took cold. Dear me, said Babbage, who sat opposite, how odd it is, Mr. Rogers, that you and I should make such a very different use of the faculty of imagination. When I sleep unexpectedly away from home, and consequently have no night-cap, I should naturally catch cold. But by tying a piece of pack-thread tightly around my head, I go to sleep imagining I have a night-cap on, and catch no cold at all.

Money Orders.

Appletons' Journal says: "Few people are aware of the great convenience to the public of the money-order office." It is the only national bureau that pays a profit to the Treasury. The Patent Office is self-supporting, but the money-order office nets an annual profit of over $100,000. In each year it transmits $50,000,000 in sums averaging about $18. These moneys are sent all over this country, Great Britain, Germany, Switzerland, and the civilized world. It is as safe as it is cheap. Out of 2,500,000 orders carried during the past fiscal year, the Government was defrauded out of only $75. The tendency of these money orders is toward local centers of business. Thus most of the orders obtained in Michigan flow toward Detroit, those in Ohio toward Cincinnati. But a deeper stream all over the sparsely-peopled land flows eastward to New York and Philadelphia. The smaller offices receive more money than they pay out; at the larger offices the payments exceed the income. Thus California buys 41,000 money orders a year, and pays only 92,000; New York buys 186,000, and pays over 500,000. The device by which this safe and gigantic business is carried on and fraud prevented is a simple one—merely the omission of the names of payer and payee. This information, given by the party presenting the order, is the great check on wrong payment. The business continues to increase, and about three new offices are established every year.

Voudou Festival.

The annual celebration of the heathenish Voudou rites in New Orleans took place this year on the eve of St. John's day, as usual, and created a great excitement among the colored population of that city. Voudouism, which is simply the worship of the devil, has many followers among the blacks of Louisiana, and the recurrence of the annual saturnalia is an event which creates a general interest among all classes of negroes, including those who do not acknowledge to a belief in the superstitions it commemorates and encourages. The believers in Voudouism hold that the devil has supreme power to punish, and that he must annually be propitiated with a gift and a festival held in his honor. At the same time it is believed necessary to entice the demon by songs and dances to take possession of the worshipers, after which by a sudden rush into cold water he is driven away, taking with him all the sins the believers have committed during the past year. This year the festival was held at an elbow on the lake shore, near Bayou St. John, on the edge of a noisome swamp. It took place after dark, by the light of bonfires, and the beastly orgies, of a nature too shocking to describe, were kept up by a great crowd of negro men and women during the entire night.

What Breaks Down a Young Man.

It is a commonly received notion that hard study is the unhealthy element of college life. But from tables of the mortality of Harvard University, collected by Prof. Pierce from the last triennial catalogue, it is clearly demonstrated that the excess of deaths for the first ten years after graduation is found in that portion of the class of inferior scholarship. Every one who has seen the curriculum knows that where Æschylus and political economy injures one, late hours and rum punches use up a dozen, and the two little fingers of these are heavier than the loins of Euclid.

Dissipation is a sure destroyer, and every young man who follows it is, as the early flower, exposed to an untimely frost. Those who have been inveigled into the path of vice are named legion. A few hours' sleep each night, high living and plenty of "smashes" make war upon every function of the body. The brains, the heart, the lungs, the liver, the spine, the limbs, the bones, the flesh—every part and faculty are overtasked and weakened by the terrific energy of passion loosened from restraint, until, like a dilapidated mansion, the "earthly house of this tabernacle" falls into ruinous decay. Fast young men, right about.

Whipping the Yankees.

A good story is told of Judge Rice. About the commencement of the war he made a speech in North Alabama, in which he said the Southern soldiers could whip the Yankees with pop-guns. Since the war he happened to make another speech in the same place. A big double-jointed fellow was present, who heard and remembered the former speech, and being in an unamiable frame of mind, concluded to go for Sam. Rolling up his sleeves and putting his fist in the palm of his hand, he propounded the fearful question: "Sam Rice, didn't you make a speech here in 1861?"

"I did," said Sam.

And didn't you say we could whip the Yankees with pop-guns?"

"Certainly I did, but the rascals would not fight us that way!"

MANIA FOR DIAMONDS.—According to a London letter, "diamonds are more common in private society than they ever have been. Many ladies are crazy about them. Let them get as many as they can, some night or other they meet with a dowager who eclipses them, and their happiness is gone. A lady of rank, who had a good collection, and who does not often leave many at home, was asked, the other day, the actual cost of those upon her person. She replied, with perfect truth and much complacence, 'They cost rather more than £20,000.' 'Ah!' said a nobleman who was present, 'Lady Coutts' collection are worth nearer half a million.' From that gallery one woman, at least, went away distressed. A friend who was by told me she turned very pale, and he thought she would faint."

THE court suit of Prince Esterhazy was covered with pearls, and was estimated at a quarter of a million; the Shah's is studded with diamonds and emeralds. The tradition runs that the ladies of those days generally contrived to corner the prince at the levees, and to engage him in conversation while their confederates were operating upon him with a penknife and a pair of scissors. The result was that the Prince so often returned from court short of his buttons that he at last asked to be relieved of his mission and to return home.

Centenarians on the Pension Rolls.

In 1870 a list of the widows of soldiers of the Revolutionary war who were alive Jan. 1, 1870, was prepared at the Pension Office from data carefully collected from the rolls, and also from information derived from Government officers residing in the districts where the pensioners lived.

Twenty of these were 100 years old in 1870, and 11 were 97 years of age at that time. A number of the latter, as well as those in 1870 had passed 100, are living, but how many cannot be ascertained exactly without examination of the records.

Those who had reached 100 in 1870 were:

Hannah Andrews, Center Lovell, Mo.; died Aug. 29, 1871, aged 101.

Mary Bersil, Pillar Point, N. Y.; died May 27, 1871, aged 111.

Lydia Bleviers, Troy, O.; died March 6, 1870, aged 100. (Cincinnati agency.)

Peggy Evans, Stockton, Tenn.; died Sept. 2, 1870, aged 100.

Chloe Flatford, Independent Hill, Va.; died Sept. 18, 1871, aged 116.

May Fogg, Belmont, N. H.; died Nov. 29, 1871, aged 101.

Anna Gross, Amherst, N. H.; aged 100; living 1870.

Rachel Griger, Perintown, N. Y.; died Aug. 7, 1870, aged 101.

Charlotte Harris, Stone Mountain, Ga., aged 101; living in 1870.

Rebecca Smith, Killingworth, Ct.; died March 7, 1872, aged 104.

Phebe Sofield, Richmond, Ind.; died June 4, 1873, aged 103.

Saluda Thrasher, Hoge Mountain, Ga., aged 103; living in 1870.

Mary C. Traut, Corydon, Ind.; died Sept., 1870, aged 104.

Elizabeth Truber, Reedsville, N. C.; died 1871, aged 109.

Dinah Vick, Nashville agency; died Oct. 20, aged 109.

It will be noticed that several in the above list did not die until two years after the time their ages were recorded. —Cor. Cincinnati Gazette.

Heffren, the Victim of the Salem (Ind.) Lynching Affair.

Delos Heffren was about 40 years of age, was fine-looking, and powerfully built, as are all of his family. He was a man of considerable talent; and, had those talents been employed in a different and more useful channel, he might have risen to a high position in the State. In 1860, he was Deputy Secretary of State under his uncle, Judge Cyrus L. Dunham. When the war broke out he joined the Fiftieth Indiana Regiment, and was Second Lieutenant of Company I.

The mother of Heffren, two sisters, and a brother, Col. Horace Heffren, are living. His eldest sister is a beautiful and accomplished woman, and the wife of Capt. A. H. Miller, of St. Louis, Mo. His youngest sister is at her home in Salem A brother of the deceased dropped dead some years ago, near the place where the fearful scene was enacted yesterday morning.

Heffren was, beyond any question, a dangerous man, of strong passions and prejudices. When his passions were aroused he was a perfect madman, and was feared by all who knew him. In 1866 or 1867 he became angry at his uncle, Judge C. L. Dunham, of Jeffersonville, and, without a word of warning, pulled out his knife and made a murderous assault upon that gentleman, cutting and stabbing him severely.

De Halstead is the second man he has killed. Several years ago he got into a quarrel with the Johnson family, of Salem, and one night at a saloon he pulled out his revolver and fired upon the father and two sons. His first shot struck the elder Johnson, but only slightly injured him; the second struck the eldest son, Wm. R. Johnson, killing him instantly, and the third shot, aimed at Esmond Johnson, missed its mark, and the latter, drawing a Smith & Wesson revolver, fired at Heffren, the ball striking him in the head, glancing, and only making a slight wound. Heffren was arrested and tried for the murder of Johnson, but was acquitted by a jury on some ground that we never could learn. Singular as it may appear, only eight months after Heffren killed Johnson he was married to his victim's widow, who is still living. In the few last years Heffren has been keeping a drinking-house in Salem, and his habits have been very dissipated. He was surrounded in Salem by a class of men who would swear and die by him, if necessary; and they have on several occasions thrown the quiet people of the town of Salem into a panic by their unlawful acts and open defiance of law.

The jury that acquitted Heffren of the murder of Johnson, as soon as they did so, advanced to the prisoner's box and carried him on their shoulders to a saloon near by, and drank his health and long life. The action of this jury was commented upon at the time by the law-abiding people of the county, and, after the second murder, they had reason to fear that his trial would result as it did before.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

An Australian Yankee.

An Australian millionaire named Dykshon is receiving a deal of attention in Paris on account of his wealth. He is a Yankee, and his doings in Melbourne that brought his riches are thoroughly expressive of the cuteness of a New Englander. When money was plenty and hotel accommodations were sparse, he was an innkeeper. When the demand was great he would put up his rooms at auction, and thus get greater prices than otherwise. Lola Montez came to Melbourne and was put to use by "mine host," who advertised that the notorious actress would dine at his table d'hote every evening. The rush to dine at his hotel was tremendous, and, as he doubled his prices, of extraordinary profit to Dykshon. In these instances are indicated the methods of Mr. Dykshon to make money.

JEFF. DAVIS was, at last accounts, referee in a pending duel between Memphis gentlemen.

MRS. ABRAHAM LINCOLN is at St. Catherines, Canada, where she will pass the summer.

THERE is a tree standing in front of the Dyersburg, Tenn., Presbyterian Church that has been struck by lightning nineteen times; and it is a good tree yet.

LAST February there were thirteen granges in Georgia; now there are sixty, and by next Christmas it is believed there will be two hundred. The movement is gaining in volume and strength every day, though it encounters some opposition from the middlemen.

NEARLY all of the $350,000 worth of bonds stolen from the Falls City Tobacco Bank, in Louisville, Ky., last February, have been recovered, by compromising with the thieves, at 25 per cent. The negotiations were conducted in New York.

A FEW days ago one of the attaches of the Spanish Legation entered a barber shop at Providence, R. I., to get a shave. He was politely shown the door with the exclamation, "We don't shave no niggers hyah!"

A WELL-KNOWN physician of New York recommends dancing for old people, who, he says, require it more than the young. He would not have them tread the mazes of the courtly minuet, but inclines rather to jigs and hornpipes, and such other dances as require gentle physical exertion. Under his direction a dancing class has already been formed, the junior member of which is a lady of sixty-five, and the senior a lively old bachelor who has just completed his eightieth year.

WHILE Thiers was President of the French Assembly, it is said that he generally received seven hundred letters a day. The usual proportion of the different classes was: Application for assistance, 250; petitions having a political object, 150; others against some prejudice suffered, 100; complaints against functionaries, 100; abuse, 80; menaces of death, 20. They do not seem to have hurt him any, and he could doubtless be threatened with death forty times a day, and be as alive as ever at the end of the year.

IMMIGRATION to Brazil has succeeded in a single instance, that of German colonization of the southernmost province of the Empire, where the climate is temperate enough to be propitious. In the northern provinces immigrants will be killed by the climate sooner or later on the coast, and if they go far inland to a better climate they find themselves isolated in a wilderness, without roads and without a market for their produce.

THE citizens of a Georgia town were surprised to read in their local journal, the other day, that perhaps it was not worth while for them to attempt to raise boys. The afflicted editor insists that he wrote hogs.

MISSISSIPPI papers record the death in that State, on the 27th of May last, of John Owens, at the age of 114 years, 8 months, and 6 days. He was a remarkable man; for although he admitted that he used whisky occasionally, and that he had smoked and chewed for 103 years, he never claimed that he had seen Washington.

THE California people are wondering how they shall vote. The new election law is very particular in requiring that the tickets shall be twelve inches long, and that the printed matter shall be "single-leaded" and in long primer type. Now, in San Francisco, sixty-two officers are to be voted for, and their names and those of the offices which they seek cannot possibly be printed on a 12-inch ticket in legal form. It is simply a typographical impossibility.

GEN. MOSBY, the Confederate cavalry man, predicts that Gen. Grant will be the candidate of the Southern white people for President in 1876. He announces that as his ticket.

A WASHINGTON reporter having been struck with the familiar gait of two zebras exhibited by a traveling menagerie there last week, made friends with their keeper, and extorted from him a confession that they were only painted mules.

EDMUND YATES describes Leon Gambetta as a fat, gross man of middle height, with reddish brown complexion and decidedly red nose, with a queer louche or cock-eye, which gives him a half jovial, half sinister expression. He wears a curly-brimmed, grease-stained hat, a tortoise-shell double eye-glass hanging loose round his neck, shining coat and trowsers, into the pockets of which his hands are thrust up to the wrists.

THE CHIEF-JUSTICESHIP.—A Washington letter says, that in a conversation recently the President limited the number of those from whom he will nominate a successor to the late Chief-Justice Chase to five individuals, to wit: William M. Evarts, Mr. Attorney-General Williams; ex-Attorney-General Hoar, of Massachusetts; Judge B. R. Curtis, of Massachusetts, who was Associate Justice of the United States, at the time of Judge Taney's Dred Scott decision, and who resigned in consequence thereof, and Senator Howe, of Wisconsin. The friends of all these gentlemen claim for their especial aspirant or candidate all the qualifications necessary to decide the selection, and all express hopes of the appointment of their favorite. The choice will not be made until Congress shall meet.

THE PLASTER VIPERS OF PARIS.—You know the Italian proverb: "Let your enemy occupy your house the first year after it has been completed; let your friend inhabit it the second year; live in it yourself the third year." The truth of this proverb is so universally believed here that thousands of families live without paying house-rent. They are called "plaster vipers." They occupy houses the first year they are built. Owners are glad to give them lodgings free, for the house looks habited, and the walls are dried, and it is generally considered the "plaster vipers" pay dearly for shelter in the way of colds, bronchitis, rheumatism, and other ills superinduced by humidity.—Paris Letter.

THE BRIDE OF AN EVENING.

Yesterday Justices Pratt, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, confirmed the report of the referee dissolving an alleged marriage between Sallie Rothermel and August Brucks and decreeing that Sallie is free to claim her own name, and get married again. Sallie Rothermel is a prepossessing young miss about sixteen years of age, and August Brucks is the proprietor of a cigar store. Both live in Williamsburg.

On the 22d of December last there when a christening at a house in South Fourth street, Willamsburg, and among the guests was Sallie and August. Five bottles of Rhine wine was disposed of by the company, and Sallie had her share of the same. She became dizzy and remembered nothing until the next morning, when she found herself at home with her parents. That morning she called upon Mr. Brucks to collect money for news papers which he had been served with and then she learned from his lips that the previous evening she had been married to him by Pastor Neander, who was at the christening. Surprised, though not dismayed, she took counsel, and began proceedings on the 17th of May last for a divorce. No appearance was put in by the bridegroom, and the case was referred to Theodore F. Jackson, Esq., to hear the report to the Court.

At the hearing Sallie testified that she remembered attending the christening, and that she drank several glasses of Rhine wine, after which she became dizzy, and did not know what took place. She remembered nothing more until the following morning, when she found herself at home. She was in the habit of serving Mr. Brucks with newspapers, and he had invited her to the christening. She had never talked marriage with him previous to the christening, and if she had been sober she never would have married him. The morning after the christening she called to collect money served on Brucks he said:

'How is that? Your are married.' She said. 'To whom?' He said, 'To me.' She said, 'How did that come?' He said, 'You were down to the christeing last night, and then it happened. A number of people have told me of it since. He then asked whether she would live with him, and she said 'No.

Pastor Neander testified that he, on the 22d of December last christened the child of Mr. Ellenburger at a house in South Fourth street, and that on the same evening, at the same place he united August Brucks and Sallie Rothermel in the bonds of matrimony in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. Ellenburger and the step-father of August Brucks. He had seen wine and cake on the table, but did not partake of either.

The step-father of the bridegroom being examined, said that he was present at the wedding, and that all in the room had been drinking wine; that the house where the marriage and christening took place was his place of residence. He had provided for the christening five bottles of Rhine wine, all of which the guests drank. Sallie never said a word in answer to the minister's questions and never lived with August as his wife.

The referee, on these facts, reported in favor of giving Sallie her diverce, and Justice Pratt confirmed the report leaving Sallie free to get married again, drunk or sober.

Hard Work.

'What is your secret of success?' asked a lady of Turner, the distinguished painter. He replied, 'I have no secret madam, but hard work.'

Says Dr Arnold, 'The differeuce between one boy and another is not so much in talent as in energy.'

'Nothing,' says Reynolds, 'is denied well-directed labor, and nothing is to be attained without it.'

'Excellence in any department.' says Johnson, 'can now be attained only by the labor of a lifetime; it is not to be purchased at a lesser price.'

'There is but one method,' says Sidney Smith, 'and that is hard labor and a man who will not pay that price for distinction, had better dedicate himself to the pursuit of a fox.

'Step by step,' reads the french proverb, 'one goes very far.'

'Have you ever entered a cottage, ever traveled in a coach, ever talked with a peasant in the field, or loitered with a mechanic at the loom,' says Sir Edward Bulwer Lytton, 'and not found that each of those men had a talent you had not, knew something that you knew not?'

The most useless creature that ever yawned at a club, or counted the vermin on his rags under the suns of Calabra, has no excuse for want of intellect. What men want is not talent it is purpose; in other words not the power to achieve, but the will to labor. I am no believer in genius, but I believe that labor, judicously and continuously applied, becomes genius.

It is reported of a large city wholesale dealer, that he regularly took the local papers from the town where he had creditors. He said he watched the advertising columns, and so long as he found his patrons advertising with some show of spirit he was satisfied that they were all right, but the moment he missed the advertising he sent on the collector and got either his money or his goods, for he was satisfied that a man who didn't advertise was a failure in business.

The duty of every man is to subscribe for his local newspaper, no matter what other papers he may take. In his city weekly he can get the news of the world, elaborate editorials, essays, stories, agricultural hints, and the matter of general interest; but he cannot find there the news which he will prize most of all, and he will find in his local paper, and that is the news of his neighbors. The local paper tells him that his neighbor Higgins has bought a new farm; that neighbor Thomson has sold two extra heavy hogs at an unusal price; that a new school house is to be built down in the hollow, and there is to be a new minister in the old white church. Four columns out of every five that contains reading matter in a local papers should be devoted to items that are of interest to every body in the neighborhood, for it requires no very deep intellect to see that such news is the very life and soul of the local paper, and those who have done this are the ones that have been most successful.

No man should take a city paper in preference to his local paper. If he is too poor to take more than one, let that by all means be the one published nearest his home. A man may possibly, endure without knowing all that is going on in Spain or South America; but he would be a poor ignoramus without knowledge of his own town or neighborhood. Take your local paper and do all in your power to make it a credit and honor to the town—Pomeroy's Democrat.

How Young Walworth Received His Sentence.

[From the World, 3d]

Slowly the procession entered, the accompanied by Mr. Sparks, his clerk leading. Then the jury filed into their seats, and everybody awaited the coming of young Walworth. In a few seconds Frank, his mother, and brother had taken their accustomed seats. Contrary to expectation the female friends of the family came into Court, followed by the prisoner's counsel. During the unbroken silence, while every one held his breath, the clerk called out suddenly. "The jurors will blease answer to their names." Young Walworth turned deadly pale, then turning in the chair, he braced himself up and gazed fixedly at the jurors. His mother raised her veil, disclosing a set of features as white as marble, and with her lips tightly compressed, looked resolutely at the twelve men who were to decide the fate of her son. The little boy craned his neck, and with starting eyes and hands tightly grasping the chair in front of him seemed unconscious of every thing passing around. In a firm voice each juror answered to his name and then, the question, "Have you agreed upon a verdict?" was asked. The foreman in his nervouseness answered, "We have—a verdict of the second degree." "Of what?" "Of murder!" Mrs. Walworth who had sat rigid while this conversation took place, turned in her chair and smiled upon her son. Frank's breast heaved, and taking three long breaths he threw his head back suddenly and seemed about to faint. He recovered himself however and looked straight at the Judge, expecting his sentence. Charles O'Conor, with his head bowed, advanced, and when within a few of Judge Davi asked, that sentence might be deferred. The Court was inexorable, but General Davies and ex-District-Attorney Garvin joined in the plea, and Assistant Dittriot-Attorney Rollins having interposed no objection, Frank Walworth was led from the Courtroom to a carriage and driven to the Tombs.

It is sometimes not exactly comfortable to be toadied. Presidents have receives of manner of gifts—houses horses, hats, big cheeses, and canes. President Grant has not, at least, shown himself an unwilling recipient; but mournful must have been his feelings when an alligator was sent to his house at Long Branch directed to his son, and with a bill for expressing of fourteen dollars. With or without tears. His Excellency paid this but he refused to have anything to do with the alligator. He couldn't eat it, or drink it, or wear it, or live in it, or ride in it. The poor thing is since dead.

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Getting a Jury in New Oleans.

[From the New Orleans Picayune.]

Whilst the jury in the case against Melvin M. Cohen and Charles R. Railey charged with assault with attempt to murder the usurping Governor of Louisiana, was impaneled yesterday in Carrolton.

Thomas Hendricks, colored, testified that he was born in "the State of the North," the year that "the great battle had been fought by Gen. Jackson."

Being interrogated by counsel for the defense, witness said he did not know "whether the general was Stonewall Jackson or Washington." It was "the man who fought the battles of the North."

David Smith colored, evidently sixty or seventy years old, swore that he was only forty-seven. He testified he had 'heard of the shooting of the General of the city.' He 'did not know his name.'

Harrison Shields, colored, testified that he had lived in Carrollton for the last four years. He had voted at the last election, but did not know who he voted for. The ticket had been given to him.

Henry Glover, colored, testified that he did not recollect his age. He did not know who was Governor of the State.

Isaac Washington, colored, testified that he was a member of the Church but did not know to what church he belonged. He did not know there was a Governor.

Another colored juror said that 'the Presidents was the man who had been shot at.'

Another stated with great candor that he 'lived on Red river, but came occasionally to Carrollton, where he had registered as a voter.'

These jurors were of course challenged by the defense and ordered to stand aside, after they had been taken by the state.

Messrs. John Straidler and George Clocke, native Germans naturalized in the parish, and Mr. Thomas L. Breston, a native American, belonging to one of our most respected families, were peremtorily challenged by the prosecution

Early visitors to the White mountain region this summer will find a greater amount of snow about the ravines than has remained until so late a date for many years. Prof. Huntinton, in a recent journey through the White mountain Notch, found only one snow drift in the road, and that a short distonce from the Willey House. At the beginning of the present month there was a drift ten feet deep, twenty feet wide, and thirty feet long, in the rear of the profile House and in close proximity to the dining room. Mr. Clement, landlord of the Prospect House. On the summit of Moselake went up that mountain a a few days ago and reports the snow to be fifteen feet deep for a half a mile near the spring, part way up.

Catching a Tartar.

John the New York Sun's fool writes from Raleigh, N. C.:

Some of the fellows who live in the woods are so thin they have to lean against a tree to swallow; they are yellower than blind man's buff, and so darned lazy they keep tame squirrels to shave 'em. They train the squirrels to dip their tails in soap suds, lather them then scratch the hair off with their claws. I said there is plenty of tar in North Carolina, and so there is. I caught a Tar-tar there myself. I saw a fellow who looked so green that if he hadn't stirred just as he did I'd been temted to pour oil and vinegar on him and cut him up for cold salad. He was whittling a stick.

Says I, 'Halloo.

Says he, 'Halloo yourself.'

Says I, 'Boy, if hens lay eggs for nothing, and those eggs sell for sixteen cents a dozen, what's the percentage os profit?'

Says he, 'Mister, it it would take a prophet to tell, I reckon.

Says I, 'That's so; what are you making.'

Says he, 'Its a whistle out of willer, and I say, mister, can you make a whistle out of a bowl of soup?

Says I, 'No sir.'

Says he, 'Then you ain't smart. I can.'

Says I, 'Do you mean to tell me that you can make a whistle out of a bowl of soup?'

Says he, 'Yes I can. That there is a whistle ain't it?'

Says I, 'Yes it is.'

Says he, 'Well, I didn't make in a bowl of soup, die I?'

Says I. 'No.'

Says he. 'Well, then, I made that there whistle out of a bowl of soup, didn't I?'

That made this Northern gentleman mad, and I started to leave when he he yelled: 'I say mister, if you'd lived in the days of the ark you'd gone in through the window.'

Says I, 'Why?'

Says he, 'Because you're so green that dove would have lit on you first, sure.'

I left under the impression that North Carolina boys are smart. Perhaps it's the turpentine that accounts for it, for that will make folks smart. I saw a touching picture yesterday. It was so touching I touched it. It was a man in the woons sitting upon a trunk under a big umbrella. He was eating chewing gum and his trunk had more locks on it than the Erie Canal.

A FIEND'S CRIME.

A Child Eight Years of Age Outraged and Then Killed.

[From the Pittsburg Leader, 12th.]

A revolting tragedy took place Saturday night, the 5th inst., between the hours of nine and ten o'clock, at the Fall creek Coal Mines, Bradford county Penn. The deceased a child scarcely eight years old by the name of Bridget McCloskey, was abducted at the hour and place above mentioned from the house of her parents who were temporaily absent. On the return of the parents, search was immediately instituted for the missing child. Monday morning at seven o'clock, a systematic method of searching was adopted. About two hundred miners formed themselves in a line about five paces apart and moved in a northerly course. At nine o'clock they came upon the body of the slain child, lying in the shallow waters of a small brook, that coursed its way through a deep morass, and thrown into the swampy thicket.

It may well be imagined that about this time the excitement had reached a high ebb. Curses, long, loud and deep went up among those begrimed determined, underground toilers. Vengeance the most fearful was threatened the offender, who was yet non est inventus. Suspicion at lenght fell upon a man named Jones, supposed to be a Welshman, who had for a brief period worked in the Barclay Coal Mines, and made his home at Fall Creek Blood was on his garments which he could not account for. These circumstances coming to light prompted a delegation of good strong-armed miners to wait upon him from a gallery in the Barclay Mines, where he was apparently industriously cutting coal. When brought to the witness stand a non-committal and somewhat confused statement was given. Several witnesses were sworn, and the general opinion seemed to be that he was guilty. All the evidence adduced at the inquest was circumstancial, and not positve. After the result of the inquest was announced, and directions given for his removal to Towanda jail the wildest excitement prevailed. It was not dark. Two or three hundred men surrounded the house in which the prisoner was guarded. At the suggestion of some one a vote was taken whether, upon the evidence given and bearing in mind the facts in relation to the prisoner's previous behavior, he should suffer death then and there. The vote was almost unanimous in the affirmative. With this unanimity of feeling a rush was made for the door which soon yielded to such resistless force. The guards were thrust aside and the prisoner roughly seized. A rope was placed around his neck in which condition he was brought forth viewed by the excited multitute as a debased murderer. By some it was though advisable to cast him upon a burning log-heap near by. Finally, under the muzzle of scores of revolvers and guns, he was marched to the spot where the murdered girl was found, and there told to repent and confess. upon an inprovised scaffold with hands pinoned, the black cap was drawn and a rope around his neck he averred his innocence

In the solemn stilness of death, in darkness, in time of awful suspense, the silence was broken and a voice was heard: "My countrymen, no doubt in our minds the wretch is guilty but we have no sworn proof, our evidence is only circumstancial; let the law take its course." Whereupon the prisoner, so sudddnly snatched from the opening grave, was quickly transferred to the proper officers, and at midnight conveyed to the Towanda jail where he now awaits trial.

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, JULY 24, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

The wrecked steamer City of Washington has broken in two and gone to pieces. The officers and crew were on board at the time, but escaped in boats. One of the passengers of the ill-fated vessel published in the New York papers a five-column account of the disaster, and says that it is due to the criminal carelessness of the Captain, who rushed on through the fog day after day at full speed, although warned by passengers and subordinates that he was going too far north. The Canadian Government has ordered an investigation into the matter.....Frank Walworth is probably the most cheerful-minded criminal inside of a penitentiary wall. On donning his prison togs at Sing Sing, he laughingly remarked: "I have gained seven pounds in clothes since I came here. I feel now like engaging in a base-ball match. An officer in the army told me the other day that the only difference between this suit and the West Point uniform is, that in one the stripes are round about, and in the other they are up-and-down." He whiled away the time of the journey to prison by pleasant allusions to events as they happened, and said of the handcuffs which linked him to Gillem, the wife-murderer, "They are the starchiest cuffs I ever wore."....Tom Scott has gone to Europe to place the bonds of the Texas and Pacific railroad, to settle the French claims against the El Paso Company, and at the same time to vindicate Gen. Fremont, the former official representative of that company....Utica Brooker, sister of Woodhull and Claflin, died the other day in New York, from the effects of long indulgence in intoxicating liquors.

All the Union Pacific stock which was tainted, directly or remotely, by the Credit Mobilier, has been posted in the New York Stock Exchange as no longer negotiable, on account of the Credit Mobilier suits now in progress at Hartford....The dark mystery surrounding the murder of Charles Goodrich, a wealthy citizen of Brooklyn, who was found dead in his room on the morning of the 22d of March last, has at last been unraveled. He was murdered by Minnie Waltham, alias Kate Stoddard, who, strange to say, has been living all the time within a few rods of the house where the deed was committed, notwithstanding the detectives have been professedly ransacking the whole country in search of her. When arrested, she made full confession of her guilt, and gave a circumstantial account of the killing, explaining many of those curious features of the deed which gave some color to the theory that Goodrich had committed suicide. Although more than once on the verge of starvation, the murderess had kept sacred in her trunk the money and jewels she took from her paramour. Among these articles was found the six-barreled revolver with which the murder was done, and which had, apparently, not been touched since. Three of its barrels were still loaded; the other three she had emptied into her lover's body. The only plea she makes for herself is, that, after living with her for a long time, he wished to throw her off, and that she could not bear. So she "killed him for love."

Rebecca W. Easterbrook, a well-known authoress and contributor to Harper's Magazine, is dead....A shocking tragedy was enacted recently at Harmony, Pa. A young man and woman who were betrothed drove to the hotel in the place and engaged a room. Shortly after shots were heard in the room, and on repairing thither it was discovered that the man had shot the woman through the head, inflicting a death wound, and then committed suicide by shooting himself....The steamer Tigress sailed from New York in search of the Polaris survivors on Tuesday, the 15th inst....Suit has been commenced at New York against Duden, Freres & Co., the lace importers who are charged with having defrauded the revenue....It is charged that the steerage passengers by the City of Washington received the most shameful treatment at the hands of the officers of the steamer after the disaster. They were left for five days on the beach without any shelter; were given such food as putrid beef and a scant allowance of hard crackers; and, in addition, many of them were robbed by the crew. The cabin passengers, officers and crew, on the other hand, fared sumptuously.

Gen. Amos Pillsbury, a prominent citizen of Albany, N. Y., is dead....Frank Walworth has gone to work as a clerk in the shoe department of Sing Sing Prison. Mrs. Walworth and family have taken up their residence in Sing Sing village, and regularly attend Catholic service in the prison chapel....July 14 was the centennial anniversary of the first Methodist Annual Conference in America, and the event was celebrated by the Methodists at Philadelphia, in the same building (St. George's M. E. Church) in which the first Annual Conference was held. Bishop Janes presided, and the exercises were of an interesting character.

One thousand Mormons from Europe arrived at New York the other day. Another large cargo will follow....Five of the six students sent to this country by Japan two years ago have been recalled, and left New York for home last week....One theory submitted by the officers of the City of Washington, in the official investigation, to account for the accident, is the deviation of the compass. One of them testified that he had known the presence of a large installment of sewing-machines in the cargo to give the compass a serious misdirection....The Court of Errors of New Jersey has decided, by a vote of 7 to 1, that the lease of the New Jersey railroad to the Pennsylvania Central for 999 years cannot be consummated under the laws of that State....The case of Lizzie Lloyd King, alias Kate Stoddard, who is charged with the murder of Charles W. Goodrich, of Brooklyn, continues to attract a large share of public attention. Crowds flock to the jail to see her, but very few succeed in doing so. She is dumb on the subject of the murder. She will not talk, except to counsel, and for him she is writing a full statement of her case, and her history from her childhood up to the present time. She is now 26 years of age; was born in Plymouth, Mass., and lived there until she was 18 years of age. Her father's name is Isaac King. He is still alive, and carries on the trade of a mason. She has one sister, named Augusta, married, and living at Walbridge, Mass. The family is in comfortable circumstances. Opinion is divided in regard to her sanity, many believing her crazy, while others contend that her insanity is all assumed.

Oakes Ames' will, as probated, amounts to $5,754,254....Advices from Springfield, Mass., indicate a decided improvement in the production of postal cards, although it is said the contractors have not come fully up to their repeated promises. Two Hoe presses are running day and night, and printing from 800,000 to 1,000,000 cards daily....The first bale of cotton of this year's crop was sold in New York at 36c per pound. The cotton was grown in Cameron county, Texas.

The West.

A sharper named John W. Young, formerly a Chicago postoffice clerk, has been counterfeiting money orders quite extensively in the West. His latest operations were in Indianapolis. Detectives are after him....Parricide item: In Jeffersonville, Ind., James Murphy, aged 18, quarreled with his father, and, drawing a revolver, fired two bullets at him, both of which grazed the parental head. The would-be murderer was seized and disarmed. ....The following is the indictment against the Modoc assassins, whose trial commenced at Fort Klamath on the 5th of July:

1. That they, Indians, called and commonly known as Capt. Jack, Schonchin, Boston Charley, Black Jim, Barncho, and Slatuck, members of a certain band of Indians known as the Modoc band of Indians, which band, including the Indians above named, was at the time and place hereinafter alleged, engaged in open, flagrant war with the United States, under command of Capt. Jack, did, as representatives of said Modoc band, meet under a flag of truce and suspension of hostilities Brig. Gen. E. R. S. Canby, U. S. A., commanding the militia department of Columbia, captain of the peace commissioners on the part of the United States, E. Thomas, A. B. Meacham, L. S. Dyar, citizens of the United States, all representing the Government of the United States, for the agreed purpose of discussing and arranging terms upon which the hostilities existing between the United States and said band of Indians might cease, did therefore, in wanton violation of the sacred character of a flag of truce under the laws of war, wilfully, feloniously, and with malice aforethought, murder Brig. Gen. Canby, U. S. A. near the lava beds, situated near Tule Lake, in the State of California, within the territory of the United States, on the 11th day of April, A. D. 1873. The second specification is very near a copy of the above, except the name of Dr. Thomas is substituted. Charge second is assault with intent to kill A. B. Meacham and L. S. Dyar.

The first three witnesses examined were T. F. Riddle, his Indian woman Toby, and L. S. Dyar. Toby swore positively that Capt. Jack shot Gen. Canby, Schonchin Meacham, Boston Charley Dr. Thomas, Hooka Jim tried to kill L. S. Dyar, and also that Barncho knocked her down with a gun and tried to take her horse. The testimony of Riddle corroborates that of his wife. The testimony of Riddle amounts to nothing. He could swear to nothing positively except that he was present when the firing commenced, and that he was chased by Hooka Jim.

A curious turn has been given to the Gordon-Gordon kidnapping case. It is shown that when the Minneapolis party were arrested by the pursuing Britishers, they were on American soil. The indignation of the Manitobans about disregard of extradition treaties and international comities may now be fairly retorted upon them....Work on Iowa's new Capitol is almost at a stand-still again, the State contractors at Quincy, Ill., having failed to furnish stone according to contract....The Western crop reports, except from the localities devastated by the storms and floods of the first week in July, are generally favorable....The trial of Capt. Jack and his fellow-assassins by Military Commission was concluded at Forth Klamath, Oregon, on the 9th. The evidence for the prosecution was of the most positive character, leaving no doubt of the guilt of the prisoners. The only witnesses produced for the defense were Scar-Faced Charley, Dave, One-Eyed Mose and William. Their evidence amounted to nothing in favor of the prisoners, but was simply a recital of what the Klamath Lake Indians had done and told them (the Modocs) since this trouble commenced. There is no doubt but the Commission will find them guilty on all the charges and specifications.

Grand Rapids, Mich., was visited by a disastrous conflagration on the 13th inst. One hundred dwellings and a number of stores, mills, hotels and other buildings, the whole covering six of the most thickly built squares in the city, were destroyed. The loss is nearly half a million, of which $100,000 is covered by insurance....The Arizona Mormon mission projected by Brigham Young to settle in that Territory and build that section of Tom Scott's Southern Pacific railway has proved a disastrous and complete failure. The entire colony of over 700 are on their way to Utah again. The emigrants experienced terrible suffering. The character of the country was completely misrepresented. It was sterile, with no water and pasturage scarce. The condition of the people and train is extremely sad, and it is said the result has shaken the faith of the Mormons in the infallibility of the head of the church as an inspired prophet.

The losses by the fire at Grand Rapids, Mich., will not exceed $300,000....Keokuk, Iowa, has been agitated by a terrible domestic tragedy. A man named Dennis Hayes was murdered by his wife and stepson, aged 16, and, to conceal the bloody deed, the body was buried early the following morning. Upon disinterring the remains, the skull was found fractured in several places. The weapon used was a potato-masher....Prof. Marsh and the Yale exploring party have returned to Fort McPherson from Niobrara river. The trip was successful, and many interesting discoveries were made. Many new and extinct animals were found, and among them several fossil horses, camels, and rhinoceroses....The wheat crop of Iowa promises a larger and better yield than ever before.

Tacoma, in Washington Territory, has been chosen by the Commissioners of the Northern Pacific as the terminus of that road....The Industrial Congress of the United States, composed of delegates from the various trades organizations, was in session in Cleveland last week. Over 100 members were present, representing a constituency of 125,000 workingmen....The State Temperance Union of Illinois met in Jacksonville last week. Only fourteen delegates being present, the body adjourned sine die, without transacting any business...A two-year-old child died in Dubuque, Iowa, the other day, from the bite of a rat....There is great scarcity of farm laborers in Iowa. In the northern part of the State farmers are unable to get help enough at $3 a day.....It is reported that the Indians, to the number of 3,000 or 4,000, are concentrating on Powder river to dispute the further progress of Stanley's Yellowstone expedition.

Two more Modocs—the last of Capt. Jack's band—have been captured.....Mormon circles in Utah are greatly scandalized by the desertion of Brigham Young by one of his wives. She is his seventeenth wife, and has left him, taking with her a large amount of furniture and personal property. She has retained eminent counsel, and intends to sue for divorce and generous alimony. The suit may be expected to give glimpses never before revealed of the harem-life of Salt Lake City.

The South.

The first bale of this year's cotton crop was received at New Orleans on the 12th inst., from Brownsville, Texas, on its way to New York.....All the seconds in the late Richmond (Va.) duel have been indicted for murder.....The $100,000 prize in the Louisville lottery was drawn by three parties in that city, all poor men.

Trouble is again reported in Pope county, Ark., between the citizens and militia....Three men were instantly killed, and several badly injured, in a coal mine near St. Louis, by an immense piece of slate falling upon them.

Crop reports from Alabama, North Mississippi and West Tennessee are very encouraging....Four young men were drowned at Baltimore, last week, by the capsizing of a boat.

Jacob Thompson has written a letter, which appears in the Memphis Avalanche, in reference to the story of a deficit of $821,000 in his accounts as Secretary of the Interior. His explanation does not differ from that which has already been given. The defalcation was the crime of a clerk in the Department, and is in no way to be charged upon Mr. Thompson. A committee, consisting exclusively of political opponents, declared the Secretary, twelve years ago, to be guiltless in the matter, and their report was unanimously approved by Congress....The ticket drawing the capital prize ($100,000) in the Louisville lottery was held by L. H. Keith, of Kingston, Mass. Willis Morley, of Giles county, Tenn., drew the second prize of $50,000....A large meeting of citizens of New Orleans was held last week, at which the Beauregard unification resolutions were indorsed....The caterpillar has appeared in the cotton fields in portions of Alabama....Louisville was visited by four fires on the 15th inst. A high wind prevailed at the time, and so great was the alarm that Cincinnati and Indianapolis were appealed to for aid. The losses were over $100,000....Cotton was planted more widely this year than usual in the Southern States, and if all the conditions had been favorable the crop would have overtasked the labor available for handling it. As it is, the Department of Agriculture reports that wet weather has reduced the yield to an average figure.

Leaders of the colored people of the District of Columbia have put themselves on record as opposed to the policy of mixed schools....The statement is reiterated by Washington correspondents that Roscoe Conkling is the coming Chief Justice....Associated Press telegram: "The internal revenue receipts for the year of about $5,000,000 in excess of the estimates will enable the Internal Revenue Bureau to make a good showing in its next report to Congress, but the exhibit ought really to be two per cent. less than it is."....The Bureau of Agriculture has given orders for the purchase of 400 bushels of Chilian wheat, and the same quantity of French wheat, for the purpose of meeting requests from various parts of the country. The demand for seeds has latterly been so great that the treasury of the institution is exhausted.

Mrs. Dr. Mary E. Walker has been appointed to a clerkship in Gen. Spinner's office....The Commissioner of Customs has just prepared a report for the use of the Secretary of the Treasury on the amounts of customs frauds on the Government for the fiscal year ending the 30th of last month. These frauds represent cases settled by the department, and show to what an alarming extent the system of swindling is carried on. The total amount of the frauds for the year is $1,432,100, of which $1,110,000 is credited to the port of New York. Taking into account the fact that but a comparatively small proportion of the frauds committed are discovered, the exhibit is truly a serious one....Reports of the condition of the national banks of the country show them generally in good condition, and disclose an easy money market....Indian Commissioner Smith has started on a visit to the Western tribes of Indians.

The Hon. Caleb Cushing is plaintiff in a novel suit before one of the Washington courts against one Kelly, who, it is set forth, did wrongfully keep a dog which was used and accustomed to bark continually by day and night, and that, on Saturday last, the defendant did then and there allow the dog to bark incessantly from early in the day through the whole day and night following, and did thereby hinder and prevent the plaintiff from studying and transacting his lawful business by day, and deprived him of his sleep during the night so as injuriously to affect his health and the peaceful use of his property. The second count alleges the keeping of the same dog, and that said dog was a dangerous one. On the first count $1,000 and on the second count $3,000 damages are claimed....A dispatch from Washington states that the headquarters of the National Grange of the Patrons of Husbandry will soon be removed to that city from Georgetown. Some interesting statistics are added showing the rapid growth of the organization throughout the country. From these it appears that there are now State Granges in eighteen States, and that the membership of the local Granges numbers 350,000. The applications for charters to form new Granges are so numerous that the National Grange has been compelled to send out additional agents to assist the work of organization.

Bold Attempt to Rob a Bank.

A San Francisco dispatch of the 11th says: A bold attempt was made to-day, at Marysville, to rob the bank of Decker & Jewett. Frank Whipple, one of the three robbers, entered the bank and presented a pistol to Jewett's head, saying, "Don't move." Jewett fell down, and made his way to the place where Chief Clerk Bingham was writing. Whipple jumped over the counter, followed by Bingham, who instantly shot Whipple in the neck. A general desperate fight ensued. Several shots were fired and pistols clubbed. Whipple finally turned to run out of the bank. Bingham and Jewett fired on him, simultaneously with double-barreled shot-guns. He fell mortally wounded on the sidewalk. Whipple says he had two confederates, John Toney and W. Winklesy. They escaped, and the people and officers are pursuing. Whipple was shot through the body in many places.

The Code in Omaha.

In Omaha there is a paper called the Bee, edited by Mr. E. Rosewater, and another paper called the Republican, edited by Maj. Saint A. D. Balcombe. Maj. Balcombe refuses to recognize, editorially, the existence of Rosewater, but permits his local editor to refer to that person in the local columns. Rosewater having denounced this local editor several times, has been repaid with interest. On July 8, a more than ordinary offensive personal paragraph having appeared in the local of the Republican, Mr. Rosewater, in a note to Balcombe, demanded "ample public apology." This Balcombe took no notice of, treating it as a quarrel between Rosewater and the local writer. On the 9th we quote the Bee: "About 11 o'clock, having completed his editorial labors, Mr. Rosewater purchased a common cowhide," and proceeded to the most public part of the city to wait for Mr. Balcombe, "in order to disgrace him as publicly as possible." The result was that when Balcombe appeared, Rosewater attacked him with the cowhide; Balcombe jumped on Rosewater, knocked him down, and while upon him, beating him, they were separated, and the affair terminated. It seems that physically Rosewater is much smaller than Balcombe, and when the latter fell against Rosewater, the latter sunk under the weight. The most unfortunate part of the affair, perhaps, is that the disgraceful controversy is continued in the two papers.—Chicago Tribune.

Story of a Lost Heir.

The following story of a lost heir is told by a Tasmanian paper, the Cornwall Chronicle: About seven years ago, in the city of London, a cheesemonger died, leaving cash to the tune of £100,000 to be quarreled over, fought and disputed for by the reputed heirs-at-law. Advertisements were inserted at different times in the English newspapers, and many a claimant a la Tichborne was forthcoming. The lawyers, however, were not satisfied that any of the numerous claimants were the "right men," and what has just transpired proves they were correct in their judgment, as the "right man" has turned up in the person of the deceased cheesemonger's brother, George Huntley, who arrived in this colony about forty years ago. He was discovered by Mr. F. Stevens, a Victorian barrister, splitting, up in the ranges of that colony, taken to Melbourne, shipped on board a steamer and brought to Lancashire, and then taken to Hobart Town, where he was identified as the veritable Geo. Huntley, who arrived in Tasmania some forty years ago. After all the necessary documents are procured to prove without a shadow of doubt the man's identity he will proceed to England to claim his inheritance.

An Interesting Game.

A gentleman from New Haven, Conn., lately exhibited some sweet little games for children. One of them, called the "Fly Leaf," is done in this way: Take a sheet of writing paper; cover it on one side with gum mucilage; then catch a fly; turn the fly over on his back; stick the back of the fly on to the paper; and then catch another fly and do likewise; put the flies close together, heads all one way; keep on doing this till you get the sheet full; then turn the paper over, and you'll swear that paper is alive. It will run all round the room. When you tire of this sport, turn the paper over and admire the movements of the flies' legs. It will be a perfect facsimile of grass swayed by a zephyr. This will be cheaper than taking the children to the country to see it.

"What are you drawing, Anna?" "I's making your pictur'." So the gentleman sat very still, and she worked away very earnestly for a while. Then she stopped, compared her work with the original, and shook her little head. "I don't like it much," she said. "'Tain't a great deal like you. I dess I'll put a tail to it and call it a dog."

CHOLERA.

What You Had Better Do if You Don't Want to Die With it.

Buffalo, N. Y., suffered more from the cholera of '49 and '51 than any other city in the United States, with perhaps the exception of Sandusky. During those two memorable years I was practicing my profession in Buffalo, and treated more than a hundred fatal cases, and perhaps an equal number that recovered, besides two or three hundred cases of cholerine, so called. I published some papers on the "causes, prevention and treatment of cholera," the result of my observations during those unhappy years. Now that we are again threatened with the fearful malady, I will suggest some preventive measures.

During the year 1348, not less than twenty-five millions of human beings perished, in Europe alone, from the plague. England was almost depopulated. Various preventive measures were adopted. One much resorted to was hanging a cross on each house, with "God have mercy on us!" inscribed upon it. Another means in which those wretched populations cherished unbounded confidence was a peculiar employment of prayers. Ten persons cried "God have mercy on us!" all at one time, until they were hoarse and exhausted. But before they gave out, ten others began, so that day and night the cry of agony ascended unceasingly to Heaven. Meantime their yards and streets were hummocked with indescribable filth. Kitchen offal, dead cats and dogs, and every other conceivable kind of filth, sent up a reeking, sickening vapor. In reading the history of those fearful times, we are apt to think that if, in addition to their prayers, they had cleaned their houses and streets, it might have been better. Prayer is a good thing, but as a means of preventing the plague or cholera, cleanliness is, to say the least, a very important adjunct.

Pure air and water are pretty sure preventives of cholera. Of the hosts who died in Buffalo during the years referred to, there were not twenty-five cleanly, intelligent people. A peculiar diarrhœa known as cholerine attacked our better class of native citizens sometimes, but with the exception of a few invalids and old people among this class, few died of cholera.

IMPORTANT SUGGESTIONS.

Clean your cellars, and distribute lime in all the corners and damp places.

Make sure of your drains, traps, cesspools, and privies, and use lime and copperas freely.

Clean your yards and streets, and keep them clean. Use lime in all doubtful places.

Use whitewash all about your houses, your passage-halls, your closets, and then ventilate thoroughly day and night.

Keep your skins clean by frequent bathing, and change your flannel underclothes frequently.

Let your diet be the usual beef, mutton, bread, potatoes, and garden vegetables, though cucumbers are not fit to eat under any circumstances.

Go to bed early, and, in brief, take care of yourself.

The cholera is a blessing. During the cholera years, the general health of the community is better than usual, because of the more thoughtful attention given to personal habits.

I remember that, in a short street in Buffalo, there was one large old house occupied by twelve poor families. This was at the foot of a slight elevation, while in the same street, but little removed, there were fourteen neat cottages, occupied mostly by thrifty mechanics. During the cholera season there were thirty-six deaths in the tenant-house—the largest mortality in any house in the city; while in the neat double row of cottages there was not a single death. Cleanliness and a judicious diet saved the mechanics. Nastiness, whisky and a bad diet killed the others.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

The Fighting Editor of New Orleans.

Col. R. Barnwell Rhett, Jr., the surviving duelist, is well known among the journalits of the United States as the editor of the now defunct Charleston Mercury, anterior to and during the war. Probably no paper in the South contributed so much to bring on that terrible struggle, and few men wielded a more trenchant pen on his side of the line. He is a son of ex-Senator Rhett, of South Carolina, and is about 40 years of age. Inheriting from his family and home surroundings the peculiar feelings of honor that find redress in the dueling code, he has never hesitated to hold himself responsible for all the language uttered in his journalistic columns or elsewhere, and more than once has been involved in controversies that found settlement only at the muzzle of the pistol. Some of his brothers have each likewise "killed his man" in duels. Personally Col. Rhett is represented to be a high-toned, gentle and chivalrous—a quiet, low-spoken man, and the last either to court a quarrel or recede from it at the expense of his own honor. After the suspension of the Mercury he retired to his Alabama plantation, whence he was called about a year ago to the editorial chair of the New Orleans Picayune.—Cor. New York Herald.

The fury of a woman scorned has become proverbial; but we are not sure that it exceeds the demonstrativeness of a jealous husband. We read of a Kansas gentleman—a member of the City Council of Atchison—who entered the dining-room of the principal hotel, where a hundred persons were assembled, revolver in hand, and fired a number of shots with the intention of putting a period to the existence of a Mr. Marburg, because that gentleman had paid some marked attention to the Alderman's wife. One of the shots shortened the nose of a negro waiter, and another severed a curl from a young lady's head. Out of the large number of people in the room there were really very few who enjoyed the scene.—Exchange.

A Negro Murderer Executed.—Jim Brown, the negro who last June murdered Mrs. Dazier and Mrs. Jones, two old women residing in Nansemond county, Va., was hanged on the 11th inst., in the Court-House yard at Suffolk, in the presence of 4,000 or 5,000 people. Brown was convicted upon his own voluntary confession of guilt. He lately professed to have experienced religious conversion, and passed much of his time in singing and praying.

Queen Victoria's Income.

Queen Victoria either is, or ought to be, a very wealthy woman. Her income was at the beginning of her reign fixed at £385,000 a year. This sum, it was understood, would, with the exception of £296,000 a year, be divided between the Lord Steward, the Lord Chamberlain, and the master of the horse, the three great functionaries of the royal household. Of the residue, £60,000 were to be paid over to the Queen for her personal expenses, and the remaining £36,000 were for "contingencies." It is probable, however, that the above arrangements have been modified, as time has worked changes. But, besides the previous mentioned £60,000 a year, and what residue may be unspent from the rest of the "civil list," as the £385,000 is called, Queen Victoria has two other sources of considerable income. She is in her own right Duchess of Lancaster. Her revenue from this source has been steadily increasing. Thus, in 1865 it was £26,000; in 1867, £29,000; in 1869, £31,000; in 1872, £40,000. The other source is still more strictly personal income. On the 30th of August, 1852, there died a gentleman, aged 72, of the name of John Camden Neild. He was the son of James Neild, who acquired a large fortune as a gold and silversmith. He received every advantage in the way of education, graduated M. A. at Trinity College, Cambridge, and was subsequently called to the bar. He proved, however, the very reverse of his benevolent father. He was a miser born, and hid all his talents in a napkin, making no use of his wealth beyond allowing it to accumulate. From the date of the death of his father, who left him £250,000, besides real estate, he had spent but a small portion of his income, and allowed himself scarcely the necessaries of life. He usually dressed in a blue coat with metal buttons. This he did not allow to be brushed, inasmuch as that process would have worn out the nap. He was never known to wear an overcoat. He gladly accepted invitations from his tenantry, and would remain on long visits, because he thus saved board. A few days before his death he told one of his executors that he had made a most singular will, but that he had a right to do what he liked with his own. When the document was opened, it was found that, with the exception of a few small legacies, he had left all "to Her Most Gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, begging Her Majesty's most gracious acceptance of the same, for her sole use and benefit, and that of her heirs." Probably vanity dictated this bequest. To a poor housekeeper, who had served him twenty-six years, he left nothing; to each of his executors, £100. But the Queen made a handsome provision for the former, and presented £1,000 to each of the latter; and further raised a memorial to the miser's memory. The property bequeathed to her amounted to upwards of £500,000; so that, supposing Her Majesty to have spent every penny of her public and duchy of Lancaster incomes, and to have only laid by this legacy and the interest on it, she would from this source alone now be worth at least £1,000,000. Be this as it may, even that portion of the public which survives her will probably never know the amount of her wealth, for the wills of Kings and Queens are not proved; so that there will be no enlightenment on this head in the pages of the Illustrated London News.

Antiquity of Umbrellas.

Dr. Morrison, the great missionary to China, states that there is mention made of umbrellas and parasols in books printed in China more than 1,500 years ago, and that that most wonderful traveler, Layard, relates that he discovered on the ruins af Nineveh, in bas relief, a representation of a King in a chariot, with an attendant holding an umbrella over his head. In India, we also find the umbrella has been used in remote ages, and principally as emblems of royalty, its shape differing very little from those in modern use. In Burmah, the princes use a very large umbrella, and it requires a separate attendant to carry it, and his position is a recognized one in the royal household. One of the titles of the King is as follows: "King of the white elephant and lord of the twenty-four umbrellas." The Emperor of China, who never does things on a small scale (if he can help it) has no fewer than twenty-four umbrellas carried before him when he goes out hunting. It is used in that country as a defense against rain as well as sun, and is principally made of a sort of glazed silk or paper beautifully painted. We find umbrellas mentioned as in use, or, at least, known in England 140 years ago. In Cambridge, we read that early in the last century umbrellas were let out on hire for so much per hour, like Sedan chairs. Jonas Hanway, the founder of a hospital in London, had the courage to carry habitally an umbrella. He died in 1776, and it is said that he carried an umbrella for thirty years; so the date of their introduction for general use may be said to date from 1756.

Searching the World for the Kansas Murderers.

The American Register of Paris says: "An agent of the Special Detective Agency of New York is now in Paris in pursuit of the Bender family, who are charged with being the authors of the wholesale murders lately discovered at Cherryville, Kansas. Detectives from the same agency have been sent to London and all the leading European cities. One of the accused, Johanna, or, as she is commonly known, Katie Bender, is quite young, has red hair, and is a person of rather repulsive features, with a furtive and distrustful expression. She was seen on board a steamer which left New York for Havre, and it is supposed that the whole family are at present concealed in the French capital or in the environs. Kate Bender is possessed of some education, and is said to be able to speak a little French. If they are really in France, now that the police are on their track, it will be impossible for them long to escape detection."

"It appears that the world is to be ransacked that these murderers may be caught. It is most singular that, with the strongly marked characteristics of all four members of this infamous family, they have escaped detection so long."

"THE GRAPHIC" BALLOON.

Description of the Monster Air-Ship Now Constructing for Prof. Wise.

[From the New York Graphic.]

In answer to numerous inquiries on the subject, we give the following details as to the dimensions, material, outfit, etc., of the balloon to be used in the great transatlantic voyage. They are from specifications made by Mr. Donaldson:

There will be two balloons, the largest of which will be 318 feet in circumference, 100 feet in diameter, and 110 feet in height. When inflated and ready to start, the extreme height of the apparatus, from the crown of the balloon to the keel of the life-boat, will be 160 feet.

The great balloon will require 4,316 yards of cloth. The material is unbleached sheeting, of a thick, close quality, of the brand known as "Indian Orchard." The crown of the balloon will be doubled for a distauce of 50 feet from the top, with 150 yards of the same materiel, and a third thickness will be added of "Manchester Mills," bleached, of which 250 yards are required.

There will be 14,080 yards, or eight miles of sewing, in which 10,137,600 stitches will be made. The thread used is silk and cotton, the top spool being silk.

The valve of the balloon will be three feet in diameter, and made of Spanish cedar, with a rubber-coated clapper closing on a brass plate.

The network will be composed of three-strand tarred rope, known as "marlin." The width of the net will be 212 meshes, and its breaking strength will be 58,300 pounds. Five hundred pounds of "marlin" will be used. From the netting 53 ropes, ¼-inch in diameter, of Manilla, will connect with the concentrating rings. These ropes will each be 90 feet in length, or 4,770 feet in the aggregate. The concentrating rings will be three in number, to guard against breakage, and will be each fourteen inches in diameter, each ring being of wood, iron-bound. These rings will sustain the car, life-boat and trailing rope, and will bear the strain when the anchor is thrown out in landing. From the concentrating rings 24 Manilla 1-inch ropes, each 22 feet long, or requiring 528 feet in all, will depend, and form the frames for an octagonal-shaped car. They will be kept in place by light hoops, made of ash. The lower ropes will be connected with network, and over the network at the bottom of the car a light pine floor will be laid loosely, so that it can be thrown out if required. The car will be covered with duck, of which 50 yards will be needed. Attached to the side of the car will be a light iron windlass, from which the boat and trail rope can be raised and lowered as may be desired. From a pulley attached to the concentrating rings a heavy Manilla rope will fall down through the car, and thence to a sling, attached to which will be the life-boat. This boat will be of the most approved and careful construction. It will have water-tight compartments, sliding keel, and will be so made that it will be self-righting. The boat will be provided with a complete outfit of oars and sails, and to it will be lashed instruments, guns, lines, etc., and provisions for thirty days, all in water-tight cases.

The trail rope, by which the aeronaut can maintain any desired altitude without resorting to ballast, will be of Manilla rope, 1½-inch thick, and 1,000 feet long.

The car will be fully provided with instruments, provisions, etc., independently of the boat. A number of carrier pigeons will be taken along, and dispatched at intervals on the route with intelligence of the progress of the expedition.

The smaller balloon will be 40 feet in height and 34 feet in diameter. It will be attached to the concentrating wings of the large balloon, and will be used as may be required to test the upper currents or assist in feeding the large balloon.

The balloons will be coated with a varnish made of boiled linseed oil, beeswax and benzine, and of these ingredients 1,000 gallons will be used.

The capacity of the great balloon will be 600,000 cubic feet of gas, but it will be inflated with but 400,000 cubic feet, which, at the height of one mile and three-quarters, will expand sufficiently to fill the balloon. The lifting power of illuminating gas is about 35 pounds to the 1,000 feet, so that the balloon will have a lifting capacity of 11,600 pounds. The pressure will be 1½ pounds to the square inch.

The weight may be summed up as follows:

	Pounds.
Balloon	4,000
Net and ropes	800
Car	100
Boat	1,000
Drag rope	600
Anchor and grapnels	300
Sundries	300
Total	7,100

Then 4,500 pounds will be allowed for passengers and ballast.

Occupation and Products.

The Stockholder has been overhauling the census volumes to some effect, and has made a careful examination of the statistics of labor. It gives the following table of the persons employed and the product per head in agriculture, manufactures, mining and fisheries in the United States:

	Persons employed.	Product per person.
Agriculture	5,923,471	$413
Manufactures	2,053,996	849
Mining, quarrying, etc.	154,328	836
Fisheries	20,504	461
Total net product		4,339,214,408
Average product per head in all pursuits		532

In his speech at the Cobden Club, in England, the other day, Mr. Wells said that if the production of the country was divided among the people, the average per head would not exceed $175. The Stockholder infers, from the various figures it gives, that taking into consideration the cost of living, capital employed, cost of superintendence, and all other elements, agricultural labor is more productive than any other in the country. It also regards labor as more profitable in this country than in any other part of the world.

The Reported Conspiracy to Rob the Shah of Persia.

A London dispatch of July 15 says: The Correspondent publishes the story of a conspiracy to rob the Shah of Persia of his jewels. The party consisted of three remarkable men, criminals of the first water, yet who were totally unknown to the London police, and indeed, though often arrested, had never been convicted of any felony. They were Col. Algernon Bignor Hawkins, the leader of the party and organizer of the conspiracy; Serafino—his other name not known—a Jew diamond broker of Marseilles, and Baron Narses Migraditch Dadian, formerly a seraff, or money-lender, of Aleppo, but lately of London, an Entichian Armenian, and said to be connected with the eminent Oglo-Dadian family which so long has managed the finances of the Sublime Porte. The fourth and last actor in the conspiracy was Toby Spring, a first-class burglar and safe-blower. Toby Spring was left in London while the others went to Moscow and managed to get Narses attached in some capacity to the Shah's suite. Hawkins then hastened to London, rented a handsome furnished house in the neighborhood of Portman Square, hired a retinue of flunkies, and gave himself out for an American nabob, who had come to spend a few weeks in the great city, and especially to give some recreation to his daughter, just finishing her education at a fashionable pension on the Loire. It had been designed to commit the robbery while the Shah was surrounded by his retinue and guards in Buckingham Palace, but this idea was given up for the safer one of inducing the Shah to visit the house, and while there to get possession of his jewels. According to the story, an appointment was made for the Shah to visit Hawkins at his house, his so-called daughter being the attraction. When Narses was made aware of his success, he got intoxicated by smoking opium, and was seen in that condition on the street. A detective followed, that the Persian might not come to harm, and saw him go to Hawkins' office, knock for admittance, and that the door was opened by Toby Spring, whom he recognized. Thinking that Narses had fallen among thieves, the detective got assistance, and forced his way into the house. Tobey was secured, also Serafino. Hawkins made his escape, but Narses in his fright and delirum made straight for the river and was drowned.

Serafino made a partial confession, and surrendered a quantity of burglars' tools and the plot was disclosed.

The heaviest burden of the cheat fell upon poor Gen. Hadji Dschellalleddin, who has been permanently disgraced, and was sent home to Persia by the next steamer of the Peninsula and Oriental line.

Signing the Declaration.

The following gossip about the Declaration of Independence is from Wood's Household Magazine, and is by the Rev. J. B. Wakeley:

In looking at the signatures, not one is written with a trembling hand except Stephen Hopkins'. It was not fear that made him tremble, for he was as true a patriot as any of them, but he was afflicted with the palsy.

But one of the residences of the signers is attached to his name, and that is Charles Carrol. It is said that one was looking over his shoulder when he wrote his name, and said to him, "There are several of your name, and if we are unsuccessful they will not know whom to arrest." He immediately wrote, "of Carrolton," as much as to say, if there is reproach connected with this, I wish to bear my share; if any danger, I am ready to face it. There was genuine patriotism.

It was rather amasing, after they had signed their names, to hear Benjamin Franklin say to Samuel Adams: "Now, I think we will all hang together." "Yes," said Mr. Adams, "or we shall hang separately." Many have supposed that all the names were signed on the 4th of July, 1776. Not so. It was signed on that day only by the President, John Hancock, and with his signature it was sent forth to the world. On the 2d day of August it was signed by all but one of the fifty-six signers whose names are appended to it. The other attached his name in November. The pen used by the signers is preserved in the Massachusetts Historical Society at Boston. What tales that pen could tell if it could speak! What a history there is connected with it!

The signers of the Declaration are dead. The hands that held the pen, and the fingers that moved it when they wrote their names on that original document, now lie cold across their bosoms. They all lived to a good old age. The average of fifty-three at the time of their decease was over sixty-eight years. The last survivor was Charles Carrol, of Carrolton, being over ninety when he died. Fourteen signers lived to be eighty years old, and four past ninety. They all sleep in honored graves.

Stains in Black Goods.

It is sometimes difficult to remove stains from mourning dresses, but this may be done by using a decoction of fig leaves. To make this, boil a large handful of fig leaves in two quarts of water until it is reduced to a pint, remove the leaves and bottle the liquor. With a sponge dipped in the liquor rub the crape or cloth, and the stains will disappear. Fig-trees grew readily from cuttings, and are as easy of culture as oleanders. Crape may be made over new by a simple process. It should first be thoroughly shaken and brushed to remove all dust from it, then held over a steaming kettle or laid on the grass in the dew. Then it must be folded and laid between the lids of a large book or newspaper-file, and a heavy weight placed over it until it is dry. When by any mischance one is caught in a shower, and has a crape vail or other covering wet, if it is removed as soon as taken from the person, folded and dried under a heavy weight, it will look as well as new. Mourning calicoes may be washed repeatedly without losing color if they are placed in boiling hot suds, left there until the water is lukewarm, and then washed in the usual way. Starch used in stiffening them should be mixed with an infusion of coffee rather than clear water, and like other calicoes, they should be ironed on the wrong side.

Noah's Boat—Not so Much of a Craft, After All.

Taking the cubit at eighteen inches, the ark was 450 feet long, 75 feet wide, and 45 feet deep, and would register about 15,000 tons, if measured as a sailing ship, or about 12,000 tons if measured as a steamer, by British rules. The ark was truly the first Great Eastern, and was built to save life, but it was inferior in tonnage and dimensions to the modern Great Eastern built in London, whose purpose was to save money. The wooden ark of Noah accomplished its purpose, but the iron ark of Brunel failed signally. Noah's ark had three decks, and was divided into numerous compartments by longitudinal and transverse bulkheads for the safety and order of its occupants. To this day the Chinese, the oldest people having knowledge of the arts correlative with navigation, use compartments in their vessels.

The ark was built of gopher wood, a species of evergreen timber resembling the pine in length and strength of trunk, and the white cedar in lightness; and at the time of the flood growing abundantly around the headwaters of the Euphrates—(the gopher tree proper perished in the deluge). The trees for the timbers of the ark were, many of them, cut out by the root, and wrought to form with tools of iron in the forests of Northern Mesopotamia. When duly prepared, all the timbers were floated in rafts down stream, and landed in time of freshets on a meadow-ground in front of the Noachian dwelling, where they were tested for integrity, and then combined in the wonder-exciting structure.

The design for the ark was on this wise: For strength it had depth, for stability it had breadth, and for capacity it had length, and these qualities were perfectly proportioned. In model it was all that a great carrier could be—chest-like, with lines straight and angles square, but the bottom and top were elliptical in outline, presenting convexity to the earth and to the sky. The central keel and midship floor were first built on blocks—the floor crossing the keel. Thus was formed the first cross, in which sign alone can a portion of humanity be saved.

The ends of the keel and floor were next raised until the middles ceased to bear weight, when they were blocked in position. The other keels were then laid and the floors put across. The timbering was solid throughout. Every floor timber was in one length, and had its roof shaped as a knee to connect it with a top timber, which was also in one length. Every top timber meeting a floor end having no knee, itself had a knee-end for the purpose of securely joining the floor, so that all the floors and the alternate top-timbers had root-knees down at their ends.

One pair of doors and two pair of top-timbers made a double-timbered frame, in which the floors were seventy-five feet long and the top-timbers forty-five feet on the average. The frames were securely dove-tailed, doweled, and cemented together with melted bitumen, which abounded in the lakelets of the surrounding country. When laid accross the keels, and fastened thereto, the ends of the floors, with the side-keels under them, were raised to a catenary curve of tension, the same as was done with the middle-keel and midship floor, which served to begin the bottom of the ark.

Thus sprung into position, the bottom of the ark resembled the sheet supported at four corners that was seen by Paul in a vision ages after the ark was built. The bottom being duly formed and blocked, the top-timbers were next erected, with the beams for the decks, and every room had its own root-knee at at one end for attachment to the frames; and the beams alternated knee-ends with each other, the same as the floors did, and being laid close together, the beams constituted the decks, without planking.

When the keels, floor-timbers, top-timbers, and beams were erected, then the bottom was covered both outside and inside with logs of great length, laid in bitumen; and they were pinned and dovetailed to the floors with pins and dovetails of shittim wood. Longitudinal and cross bulkheads were next built in the lower hold, and in the lower between-decks, the former being three in number, and the latter nine, making forty compartments in each of those stories, corresponding to the forty days and forty nights that the water poured from the windows of the heavens.

The ark grounded on Mount Ararat, the highest land in that part of Asia, the more surely to prove that the waters had covered the whole earth, and the more certainly to cast it away where it might never more be found by the profane of the world. It is now in a good state of preservation, but lying under an eternal mantle of snow, hundreds of feet deep, at an altitude of 17,000 feet above the level of the sea. Ever since the flood dried up, the climate of Armenia has been colder, and snow always covers the top of Ararat, rendering it impossible for any of Noah's descendents to go up and find the ark—the snow line defends the approach to the sacred relic as the tree of life was defended by the flaming sword in the Garden of Eden.—Nautical Gazette.

Startling Figures.

The assessed valuation of all the property in the United States, in 1870 was $14,000,000,000, which represents the accumulations of four centuries of toil and economy. The assessed valuation of the railways in 1872 was $3,000,000,000, made in but little over thirty years, in the life of one generation, and not a creation of capital, but an absorption of that created by others largely. Taking this ratio of accumulation, how long will it be before the men wielding this immense power will override all other industries in their mad race after wealth and personal aggrandizement? Let the history of James Fisk, Jr., and Black Friday answer. Again, the whole receipts of the General Government for 1872, from all sources, were $383,000,000, and the people groan under the heavy burden of taxation. At the same time this railway interest quietly levies a tax on you of $455,000,000, or $72,000,000 more than the General Government. With these figures as a basis, how long will it be before this becomes a railway empire, ruled by and in their interest? And while we complain of the expenditures of our officials there has never been an industry which has been managed with the same reckless disregard of all the rules of economy as the railways of the United States. They have grown, not because of good management, but in spite of that which has been excessively bad.—Senator Castle's Fourth of July oration at Princeton, Ill.

Glass Cloth—How It is Made—The Wonders of Glass-Blowing.

One little machine interested me, as it pertains to a new art of cloth-making from glass. While in the glass exhibition from view the day before, I noticed a glass case filled with silky-looking articles, such as feathers, children's hats, collars, cuffs, etc., of not very tasteful styles, attracting some attention. Sure enough, here were the articles made of glass of which we have read during the last six months, and also a real piece of cloth of the same material. According to promise, I endeavored to procure some of the latter for a wedding vest for a bachelor friend; but it does not seem to be for sale, being only made for a sample. The feathers were for sale, and not at all dear. I was given some specimens of the silk and of the wool, as it was called, hanging outside the case. The good frau told me the art was an old one from Venice, but had been lost; was now first put to practical use by her "mann," whose spinning machine was in the Machine Hall. So here, to-day, to my surprise, I found the machine, primitive as the Turks' turning-lathe. A small boy turned a wheel having a broad rim of iron, while a girl sat with a few small glass rods before an intense jet of flame. Taking up one of these rods with one hand, and melting the end in the flame, with the other she thrust a little point into it, and threw a thread of glass over the wheel, much as the silk of a cocoon is started upon a reel. This was not always accomplished at one trial, but when once started it would spin off infinitely as long as the glass rod was held in the flame. This silk upon the iron reel had the same appearance as that of one continuous web of a cocoon, though not so strong. The process after this, then, to that of cloth-making, is simple enough, and with proper machinery it may at length be made in quantity. If ever put to practical use, it will be very comfortable to wear in one respect, since it can not be easily soiled. But for a wedding vest, over a burning heart, my bachelor friend, it will never do, since it may surely melt.—Vienna Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.

Tree Planting on the Public Lands.

At the late session of Congress it will be remembered that an act was passed intended to encourage the planting of timber on the public lands of the United States. The first section of this act is as follows:

"Be it enacted, That any person who shall plant, protect and keep in a healthy growing condition, for five years, forty acres of timber, the trees thereon not being more than eight feet apart each way, on any quarter section of any public lands of the United States, shall be entitled to a patent of the whole of said quarter section at the expiration of five years, on making proof of such fact by not less than two credible witnesses: Provided, That only one quarter in any section shall be thus granted."

It will be seen from this section that it is left somewhat in doubt whether or not a planter may go on multiplying the number of quarter sections to be thus entered and finally awarded. The subject having recently been brought before the Commissioner of the Public Land Office, he has decided that while the provisions of the first section of the Timber-Culture act of March 3d, 1873, do not in terms limit a qualified person in the number of entries he may make thereunder, yet the policy of the Government, as expressed in the public land law generally, is so opposed to a speculative monopoly of the public domain that, under the authority vested in him by the said section of the said act, he has ruled that an individual shall be allowed to make but one entry.

A Lightning Tragedy with Something New in It.

A fearful death by lightning occurred during the storm, Monday afternoon, on the farm of Mr. Joseph A. Merrikin, about a mile from from Staunton. Mrs. Merrikin, with two or three servants, was having cherries gathered when the storm came up. She ordered the colored boy, about 10 years of age, who was in the tree, to come down. He started, saying, "Well, my bucket is full," when the flash came The boy was instantly killed in the position he stood, his face and one side being charred to a crisp, and the arm in which he held the bucket torn open to the bone. His clothing was almost entirely burned off. A hog under the tree was killed. Mrs. Merrikin was stunned, and the flame seemed, to those standing by, to run over her clothing and circle around a ring she wore on her finger. Mr. Merrikin, who was some distance off, saw the smoke from the boy's clothing ascending from the tree. When he arrived he found the little fellow's body hanging naked in the tree, in exactly the position in which he had been killed, with one arm hooked over a limb, and the bucket hanging from the other, with the cherries still in it. It is a remarkable fact that Mrs. Merrikin heard no noise at all and saw no flame, while to those around and in Staunton the crash was terrific.—Richmond (Va.) Whig.

Live it Down.

Never flinch before scandal; if your good name is assailed, take it quietly. Breath is wasted in nothing more lavishly than in negations and denials. It is not necessary for truth to worry itself, even if a lie can run a league while it is putting on its boots. Let it run and get out of breath, and get out of the way. A man who spends his days in arresting and knocking down lies and liars, will have no time left for speaking the truth. There is nothing more damaging to a man's reputation than his admission that it needs defending when attacked. Great sensitiveness to assault, on the part of any cause, is an unmistakable sign of weakness. A strong man and a strong cause need only to live an affirmative life, devoting no attention whatever to enemies, to win their way, and to trample beneath their feet all the obstacles that malice, or jealousy, or selfishness throws before them.

Webster's Great Speech.

"An Old Stager," in Harper for July, gives some interesting reminiscences of the public men of the last generation. One of the points he takes is, that a considerable proportion of the grand "extemporaneous" speaking of that day was in fact the product of study and preparation. The idea is, that the "extemporaneous" speaker, looking forward to an opportunity for getting off a speech or making an attack on an opponent, would collect all the material and arrange it into useabl form, then wait for a week or a month, or even for a year until the hoped for chance came about, and then fire off the prepared speech "extemporaneously." It is quite certain that a good deal of this was done at that time just as it is now, and the speeches were none the worse for it. But the "Old Stager" of Harper's ought to give some respectable authority when he intimates (he does not say it squarely) that Daniel Webster's celebrated reply to Col. Hayne, of South Carolina, was of this carefully elaborated style of "extemporaneous" speaking, for Mr. Webster's own account of it was quite to the contrary. Several Philadelphia gentlemen have heard from Mr. Webster's lips the narrative of how he was situated on that occasion. On the day when Col. Hayne delivered the able and eloquent speech to which Mr. Webster was expected to reply, the latter gentleman had a dinner party at his residence, which engaged his whole attention from the time when Col. Hayne ceased speaking until a late hour in the night. His guests were with him until a few minutes before he had retired to bed, and he, as well as they, had been drinking copiously of the wines on the table. He was thus cut off from the chance of anything in the nature of preparation. He said, however, that when he went into his library the next morning, he found a volume of Shakespeare on the table open and marked at that passage in Macbeth which he quoted in his reply: "Thou canst not say I did it; never shake thy glory locks at me." This, he said, was all the research he made, and he had no further recollection even of this, than from finding the book open and marked, and from his habit of verifying his classical quotations so as to have them accurate. He went to the Senate with his nerves rather disordered by conviviality and the late hours of the preceding day, and felt obliged to compose himself by a sedative. After this he had barely time to get his seat before the hour arrived when he was to begin the reply; and in narrating these circumstances he said that when he arose the lack of preparation turned out to be an advantage, for it threw him entirely upon his previously amassed resources, and it seemed to him "that all he had ever read or known was spread out before him like a panorama, and that all he had to do was to select what he wanted for his present purpose." This is Mr. Webster's own account of that great speech, and if the "Old Stager" of Harper has any better authority it ought to be produced.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The will of the late John H. Eastburn of Boston, bequeaths sums of money ranging from $500 to $2,000 to many personal friends and to employes in his office, and his family servants. Also to several persons who had served an apprenticeship in his office. His printing office he gives to three workmen, who had been long in his employ. Among personal friends Thomas Barry, the veteran actor, receives $2,000, and B. P. Shillaber $1,000. Five thousand dollars each is bequeathed to the Franklin Typographical Society, the Home for Old Men, Old Ladies' Home, Boston Asylum, and Farm School and Infant Asylum, Home for Orphans and Destitute Children; $10,000 to the Benevolent Fraternity of the Churches, and smaller sums for numerous other benevolent purposes.

THERE is no accounting for tastes. The jelly-like mass of La Mountain's body was picked up, a procession was formed, and "all who wished passed round to view the remains." Those people were not to be cheated out of their Fourth of July pleasure. La Mountain had agreed to entertain them, and entertain them he must. Was there no friends of the poor fellow's there kind and sensitive enough to throw so much as a cloth over his indistinguishable pulp? Even a dead man has rights. —Detroit Post.

Missouri.

Missouri is not only one of the largest but one of the most productive States in the Union. It contains an area of 13,128,800 acres; only 8,000,000 acres are not yet improved. In the southern part of the State, skirting the Mississippi south of Cape Girardeau, is a marsh embracing about 3,000 square miles, nearly as large as the State of Massachusetts. A movement is on foot to reclaim this marsh, but an Eastern man would think there was no great need of it, considering the vast amount of unimproved and valuable cotton plantations. The iron deposits of Missouri also, are especially valuable, and a large portion of the State is underlaid with coal as well as with iron, and the most useful minerals known to civilization, besides varied crystaline marbles, building stones of many varied colors, and the very finest clay that is found in the world. All the fruits of the temperate zone flourish in Missouri, and as a grain producing country it has no superior; its farms require no irrigation. Last year the State produced 87,300,000 bushels of wheat, 4,056,000 bushels of oats, 13,138,000 pounds of tobacco, 15,008,000 pounds of butter, 1,780,000 gallons of molasses (sorghum), and 5,400,000 pounds of wool. In addition to all this, Missouri raised last year 2,830,000 hogs, 1,451,000 sheep, 303,000 milch cows, 707,000 horses. The State enjoys the navigation of two of the greatest rivers in the world, the Mississippi and Missouri, affording her a comprehensive and economical thoroughfare with the northern areas of the United States, the valley of the Ohio and the ocean ports of the outside world.—Boston Globe.

A Musical Burglary.

The following incident is related of Christine Nilsson:

It was at Madrid. She had returned from the opera, and was in her room, when a ladder was planted against her balcony, which looked on to a garden, and a gentleman with a cloak and mask clambered through the open window, followed by a second, and so on until there were six of them. Christine Nilsson, no doubt, thought they had come for some money, but did not pull the bell-rope, because there was none. She asked them, without screaming, what they wanted, and they exclaimed in very choice Castilian that, being too destitute to pay for admittance to the opera at the increased rate of prices, they had come to hear the songs in which they were informed she excelled. Parley being bootless, there was nothing for it but to sing, and she did it right well. The Castilians bowed to the ground, and assured her, as they retreated through the way they arrived, that they had spent half an hour in paradise. But when they had vanished, they and their ladder, she found they had left a diamond bracelet, worth a thousand guineas, which caused her to wonder, in all probability, why they had not introduced themselves through the front door, as no six men with a bracelet need be ashamed to do.

The First Wagon from Galena to Chicago.

The first wagon that ever went through from Galena to Chicago was sent by Mr. James G. Soulard, in 1829, with a load of lead. From the Galena Advertiser (published by Newhall & Philleo), Sept. 14, 1829, we clip the following. Notice how it describes the location of Chicago, it being a place which most Galenians had never heard of before:

"Mr. James G. Soulard's wagon and mule team returned, a few days since, from Chicago, near the southwest bend of Lake Michigan, to which place it had been taken across the country with a load of lead. This is the first wagon that has ever passed from the Mississippi to Chicago. The route taken from the mines was, to Ogle's Ferry, on Rock river, 80 miles; thence east 60 miles to the missionary establishment on the Fox river of the Illinois, and thence a northeasterly course 60 miles to Chicago,—as traveled 200 miles. The wagon was loaded with 1½ tons of lead. The trip out was performed in eleven, and the return in eight, days. The lead was taken by water from Chicago to Detroit. Should a road be surveyed and marked, on the best ground and the shortest distance, a trip could be performed in much less time. And if salt could be obtained at Chicago, from the New York Salt Works, it would be a profitable and advantageous trade."—Galena Gazette.

She Was the Idiot.

A short time since a gentleman with long fair whiskers, and dressed in the height of fashion, entered a hosier's in Vienna, and requested the shopwoman, who happened to be alone, to show him some colored shirts. Every variety of shirts was brought out, when he made his choice and requested that a parcel be made up for him. This being done, "What an idiot I am," he said; "I have not seen how the shirts look when on. Would you oblige me by putting one on over your dress?" The shopwoman having complied with his request, "Be so kind," he continued, "as to button the collar and wristbands, that I may get a thoroughly good idea of the effect. And now," he added, taking up his parcel, "allow me to wish you a very good morning!" and in an instant he was outside the door and had disappeared, the unhappy girl, apparently stupefied, not daring to follow him into the street on account of her singular costume.

The June Drought.

The following statement of the rain-fall by inches during June for several years past, as recorded at Dudley Observatory, has been obtained by the Albany Express:

Years.	Inches.	Years.	Inches.
1865	3.04	1870	7.48
1866	4.61	1871	7.39
1867	7.57	1872	4.68
1868	3.64	1873	1.42
1869	4.67

The Express says: "The records of the Observatory date back many years, and authorities which give the rain-fall for every month and year of the present century do not show a June as dry as this has been. Its effect upon agriculture has been most disastrous; the hay crop is almost ruined, while oats and rye, and even corn, look poorly, but if we have plenty of moisture during July these will revive, and the crop in this vicinity be as large as it has been in many previous years."

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, July 24, 1873

The cholera is still prevailing in the larger cities. Nashville, Tennessee seems to have suffered most.

A Miss Dunlway is a candidate for office in Oregon. It is thought she will be Dunniway with at the election.

The Radical press is laboring in in Iowa to prove to the farmers that they can only secure remedies for existining abuses by voting the Radical ticket, put by the old wire-pullers of that State. These fellows are extremely disinterested.

At Evansville, on Sunday, a young gentleman and lady went out boat riding, and on returning mistook some foam and drift for the land. They stepped out of the skiff and were immediately immersed in slime and mud, and nearly drowned.

It is estimated that the crop of wheat for 1873 will reach 250,000,000 bushels. It is also expected that it will exceed that of last year. In the South the growing cotton promises great results. Many predict a year of plenty, yet a close and very annoying financial condition.

The Springfield Republican says that with Audy Johnson Governor of Tennessee and Gen. Butler Governor of Massachusetts, there would be great danger that the geaceful and friendly relations now existing between these two sovereign States might be interrupted.

The next Congress is likely to have a lively time of it. Oakes Ames has left his celebrated memorandum book, with all the names, dates, and facts necessary to exculpate his memory and blacken half a dozen reputations. There will be a fearful scattering when this bomshell breaks.

The back salary appropriations only increases the President's pay for the future; that is, the pay of his successor. In other words, it is U. S. Grant himself, who is to receive $200,000 for the next four years, instead of $100,000 which the other Grant received in the four years just expired. That's how the Republican papers explain the matter

It is rumored that the Chicago Inter-Ocean, a paper started in the interests of the Radical party, and for the avewed purpose of ruining the Tribune of that city, is about to suspend on accout of financial troubles. The Inter-Ocean has been an intense and hide bound, partisan, sheet that, when founded had more money than brains. The indications are that it now has neither.

The Northern Indiana Editorial excursionists, numbering over fifty persons, left Chicago on Teusday evening July 8th, on their trip up the lakes to Duluth, Minnesota, on the beautiful steamer Peerless. When last heard from, they were on their way, enjoying themselves hugely, with nothing to mar their pleasure but the usual amount of "Sea sickness," which generally constitutes the initiatory of travel by water.

A systematic attempt was made to destroy the city of Louisville Ky., by fire on Teusday night. Fires were simuntaneouly discovered at five different points in that place, and but for a heavy rain, which fortunately came to the aid of the fire department, a vast amount of valuable propery must have been destroyed. The fire departments of Indianapolis and Cincinnati were telegraphed for and promptly responded with such aid as could be spared.

Faint echoes from the Capitol in the shape of an almost intangible rumor tells us that a subject of a third term has been indistinctly shaping itself amid the fume of smoke within the President's brain. There are plenty of extreme Radicals who would be ripe for his support in an instant, and some of these eccentric champions of Republicanism say they would like see him put into the office for a life time. We can nearly imagine how the President would look upon entering the third campaign and going out of it led by his bull pups and Morton and Conklin & Co. Of course there is nothing serious acout this only it shows what these men would do, if they only had one remote solitary hope of success. There is a growing mighty voice rising from the people all over the country, which in 1876, will sound in thunder tones the end and death of the present corrupt order of men and things. Their doom is certain.

The Editorial Excursion.

The Indiana Editorial Excursion party composed of the editors of Northern part of the State, with a number of ladies and a brass band of twelve peices, arrived on the Peerless this morning and immediately repaired to the Clark House.

The following is a correct list of the members composing the Association:

C. G. Powell, LaPorte Herald, President.

T. C. Mays Auburn Courier Secretary.

Gen. R. Williams, Warsaw Indianian.

H. G. Thayer Plymouth Democrat.

C. E. Toan Plymouth Republican.

J. D. Thayer Wabash Republican.

S. W. Oldfather, Warsaw Union.

F. S. Bedell, Crown point Register.

R. F. Kennedy, Waterloo Press.

D. McDonald, Rochester Sentinel.

W. E. Wadsworth, La Porte Argus.

F. B. Thomas, Winnemac Democrat.

L. W. Flemming, Fort Wayne Sentinel.

W. M. Darwood Goshen Times.

Thos. Fargher, Laporte Theriki.

Miss Laura Ream, Cor. Cinn. Commercial.

M. A. Breed, Angola Republican.

W. A. Hull. Columbia City Post.

A. J. Marble, Huntington Democrat.

S. P. Officer, Elkhart Union.

M. E. Dunnam' South Bend Union.

A. O. Borton Bourbon Mirror.

S. H. Hayes, Fort Wayne Gazette.

R. H. Rerick, La Grange Standard.

J. W. Clark, Angola Republican.

Geo. Moon, Warsaw Indiana.

C. T. Mattingly, Rochester Spy.

Band of 12 members.

On arriving at the Clark House, the party were hospitably received and comfortably provided for. This occupied some little time during, and after which, the party strolled around on the piazza and along the corridors of the hotel, engaging in conversation with and making the acquaintance of many of our citizens.

MEETING OF ASSOCIATION.

About ten o'clock the excursionists assembled in the Ladies' Parlor, accompanied by Mayor Smith Major Seip, Judge Nisbet, Thomas Dowse. Esq., and other prominent gentlemen of the city.

President Powell of the La Porte Herald called the meeting to order and requested Major Seip to inform the Association upon hotel accomodations at Bismark, and other matters relating to the proposed visit to that locality whereupon that gentleman gave the desired information, and concluded by saying that both ladies and gentlemen could be well provided for, and if the party concluded to go to Bismark, they would find it a pleasant place

CONCLUDED TO GO.

A motion was then made and carried that the party go to Bismark, provided that such arrangements could be made with the railroad authorities as would enable them to return by Saturday next. Gen. Williams objected to the arrangement rather dictatorial. He did not know whether railroads could be dictated to in this country. In his own, he was sure they could not.

INVITED TO GO TO CHURCH.

Mayor Smith invited the party to return here on Saturday, and visit the churches next day. Mr. McDonald—I do not think there is a class of men who need churches more than we do (laughter) and I move the invitation be accepted.

MOTION TO RECONSIDER.

Mr. Thayer moved that the resolution just adopted be reconsidered. Some discussions here ensued in which the opinion was expressed that the railroad authorities might consider such a request—to furnish a special train for their accommodation—as rather in the light of dictation.

Mr. McDonald—I have been connected with railroad company for nine years, and I am not much afraid of dictating to them. I know if it is done it don't amount to much. (Laughter.)

Some further discussion took place after which it was finally agreed to telegraph Manager Meade and inquire whether it would be pratical to return by Saturday evening if they should wish to do so, which matter could be better determined after their arrival at Bismarck, provided the party could get back Saturday, the resolution to visit Bismarck was adopted unanimously.

Secretary Mays inquired of Mayor Smith, as to the nature of the proposed courtesies he had offered to extend the Association.

Gen. Williams—Probably he proposes to do it by taking off the police. (Great laughter.)

Mayor Smith—I saw the chief of Police this morning, and told him it was unnecessary to be very particular to-day. (Laughter.)

A committee was then appointed by the chair to draft resolutions of thanks to the Captain and officers of the Peerless for their many courtesies, &c., reported the following;

Whereas, The members of the Northern Indiana Editorial Association, having enjoyed the pleasure of an excursion from Chicago to Duluth, by way of the Lakes, on the steamer Peerless; herefore,

Resolved, That the thanks of the members of this Association are hereby tendered to Captain Allen McIntyre and the officers of the steamer Peerless for their untiring efforts to make this excursion agreeable to our party; and that we will ever cherish the recollection of our trip up the Lakes, as unsurpassed in pleasure and satisfactory in every particular.

Mayor Smith then extended an invitation to the excursionists to attend an impromtu hop to given at the Clark House to-night in honor of their arrival. The Association then adjourned to meet again at 4 p. m.—Duluth Tribune.

JAMES A. BARNS, Prin.

We visited a neighboring town one day last week, and while their got shaved.—The verdant hair backer whitted his knife on a piece of trace chain, and commenced on our jaw. One sweep was enough for us—it would have raised a seven year old corpse quicker than a high note on Gabriel's horn. We would rather have been lathered with brick-bats, and shaved with a cross-cut saw than summitted to the tortures of that barber's hair uprooter.

A prominent young man of this place, while standing talking with a small party on Monday, was observed to have a hair entangled in his bosom-pin. One of the party extracted it, and it proved to be a foot long—rather longer than gentlemen generally wear their hair. This fact, of course, gave rise to a great many interrogations and explanations, not all satisfactory. It looked suspicious, especially on Monday morning.

The wet and stormy weather has delayed the wheat harvest, much beyond the time when it ought to have been in barn or stack. It is thrown down and tangled to such an extent that it will require nearly, if not altogether, double the usual labor to take the proper care of it. But it will be a less serious matter if the grain is not injured before it is taken out of the field to its proper place. The greater portion of it was ready for the reaper before these rains came upon it.

A cross-roads storekeer came into the town, and thus talked to a business man who deals in bottles, cigars, and so on:—

Ye see I come ter town las' night, and the consarned train comes in so late it don't give a feller any chance to do any buzness at night, and it goes out so consarned airly, too, by jingo that it keeps a feller here till afternoon. I would'nt care so much about it, but the feller I got keepin' store for me, he ain't much, an' my wife she is in a blame bad fix, so she can't tend to buzness; an' I tell yer it makes me feel kind o' darned mixed up. Say, Mr., give me a drink.'—The new law has played the devil with us here, said the proprietor, but I can give you a quart." 'That'll do, that'll do."—"What is the matter with your wife," said the proprietor. 'Oh, she's got two eyes sore, and she can't see to make change. Guess she'll go blind. If she does I'll lock her up so she can't stumble over nothin'.'

How to Secure a Good Instrument.

The introduction of the renting plan in our own city and vicinity has proved a wonderful success, demonstrating its usefulness in providing families with instruments.

We can refer to hundreds who would have never had an organ or piano in their house but for this plan. It recommends itself to the mechanic, clerk, school teacher, laborer and others who have a state salary, part of which they can devote t the payment of an instrument. It has also been found convenient to merchants who have all their capital actively employed, and do not wish to draw the full price of instrument from their business at one time. The success of this plan leads us to extend the limits to which the plan has been confined, and we are now prepared to furnish instruments to all who want one, on the best terms we possibly can. For the purpose of giving information we annex some of the usual terms for for an instrument on this plan.

CALDWELL OF SPRINGFIELD.

New Jersey (1780).

Here's the spot. Look around you. Above on the height
Lay the Hessians encamped. By that church on the right
Stood the gaunt Jersey farmers. And here ran a wall—
You may dig anywhere and you'll turn up a ball.
Nothing more. Grasses spring, waters run, flowers blow
Pretty much as they did ninety-three years ago.

Nothing more, did I say? Stay one moment; you've heard
Of Caldwell, the parson, who once preached the Word
Down at Springfield? What, no? Come—that's bad; why, he had
All the Jerseys aflame! And they gave him the name
Of the "rebel high priest." He stuck in their gorge,
For he loved the Lord God—and he hated King George!

He had cause you might say! When the Hessians that day
Marched up with Knyphausen they stopped on their way
At the "Farms," where his wife, with a child in her arms,
Sat alone in the house. How it happened none knew
But God—and that one of the hireling crew
Who fired the shot! Enough!—there she lay,
And Caldwell, the chaplain, her husband, away!

Did he preach—did he pray? Think of him, as you stand
By the old church to-day;—think of him and that band
Of militant plowboys! See the smoke and the heat
Of the reckless advance—of that straggling retreat!
Keep the ghost of that wife, foully slain, in your view—
And what could you—what should you, what would you do?

Why, just what he did! They were left in the lurch
For the want of more wadding. He ran to the church,
Broke the door, stripped the pews, and dashed out in the road
With his arms full of hymn-books, and threw down his load
At their feet! Then, above all the shouting and shots,
Rang his voice—"Put Watts into 'em—Boys, give 'em Watts!"
And they did. That is all. Grasses spring, flowers blow
Pretty much as they did ninety-three years ago.
You may dig anywhere and you'll turn up a ball—
But not always a hero like this—and that's all.

THOMAS BLUMBLE.

HOW HE GOT MARRIED.

Blumble boasted of being a confirmed bachelor, and took pride in being called a woman-hater. I mean Thomas Blumble, of the importing house of "Hood, Stiver & Blumble." He was very fond of letting the people know that he disregarded the charms of the softer sex, and was frequently heard to say that he would like to see the woman that could get him under her thumb. There was a time, of course, when Bumble was susceptible to the overtures of Cupid; because when he was plain "Tom," of fifteen of age, and left "Rock Cove," came to the city and entered the employ of "Menser, Tigby & Hood," he left behind him a young "Polly Ann," with many a sigh and tear, and more vows than both put together, to be true till death. For two years he wrote constantly to his Polly Ann, repeating the manifold vows of boyhood love; then he was promoted from boy to entry clerk, and soon after was introduced to a very bewitching young lady, whom we may be allowed to call Hattie Elton. Then he forgot his Polly Ann down in Rock Cove, and became very intimate with Miss Elton; he accompanied her to the theater and made her presents; he got trusted for his new coat, and with the money that should have been paid for it they took a sleigh-ride to Brighton and feasted on hot chickens and champagne; to please her he learned to polka and waltz; the schottische and varsovienne were not in vogue then. Things had sped along very smoothly for about a year; so Tom, thinking he might as well have the matter settled at once, popped the question. Miss Elton appeared very much surprised; for a moment she remained silent, then lifting up both hands, she exclaimed:

"Why, Mr. Blumble—she had constantly called him 'Tom' for six months previous—I've been engaged these two years—didn't you know it?"

"Know it? No," replied Blumble in utter astonishment.

"Why, yes, I've been engaged to Charley Dudley for a long while, and I thought you knew all about it, and was only paying attention to me out of politeness. Charley is in New York, now, but we are to be married next Christmas."

"Married next—"

We may guess what Blumble was about to say, but we shall always be in doubt, for instead of finishing his sentence, he took his hat and rushed out of the house, not even waiting to make the parting salutation of "good evening." Perhaps he was afraid to trust his gnashing teeth, for fear they would change his well-meant words into some wicked expression.

Then in the privacy of his own chamber, with his door locked, his elbows upon his light-stand, and his face quite buried in his hands, reverted to the year's time and the many dollars he had thrown away on Miss Elton; then he thought of poor Polly Ann, whom he had "cut" so shamefully, down in Rock Cove, and he decided to write to her, to offer pressing business as an excuse for not having written before, to sue for pardon for past negligence, and to assert that his affections were still unaltered and unalterable. So he unburied his face, and penned the tender missive full of falsehoods and of stale love, which he dispatched with the fullest confidence that Polly Ann would be very happy to receive it. But alas for poor human expectations! Polly Ann's letter came. It was brief; she told Blumble she had heard of his attentions to the city lady, that she had almost forgotten him, and was going to marry Jerry Smike, the village blacksmith, the next week. She returned to Tom his earliest efforts in love-letter writing and a lock of his hair, and requested him to return to her sundry articles in that line that he had received from her.

From that day Blumble announced himself to the world as a woman-hater. He had been false to one woman, and one woman had tricked him. So he cried down the whole sex. The time which Blumble had heretofore divided between love and business was now devoted to business, and in consequence he received one promotion after another until he had the pleasure of seeing his own name the third on the sign over the door which he had entered as an errand boy. I don't believe he remembered that there was any such person in the world as Hattie Elton or Polly Ann, the first day the new sign was raised.

It was as the junior member of the firm that Blumble had traveled through the New England States last fall with samples, receiving orders. During his tour he remained in the pretty village of P., N. H., one fine night in October. He sat in the bar-room after supper, smoking his cigar, until it became filled with villagers, discussing politics, smoking their pipes, talking of their crops and ogling him, all of which was quite uninteresting to him, so he concluded to walk out and view the village by moonlight. He had hardly stepped into the entry, and before he could close the door, ere he heard a voice inquire:

"Who is that gentleman?"

"His name is Blumble; he's from Boston," chimed in a third voice, and then added: "You don't say so!" followed by a long low whistle of astonishment.

Blumble stepped off the piazza and walked up the village street. He had scarcely walked twenty yards before he was aware of being followed. Giving the matter but little thought, however, he turned from the road into a pleasant lane that wended its way toward some half-dozen farmhouses until he came to a rustic seat, upon which he threw himself and was soon oblivious to all the world excepting the business affairs of "Hood, Stiver & Blumble." He sat until his cigar was consumed, when he was aroused to the world around him by the village clock striking out ten. Buttoning his coat closely around him, he hurried down the lane toward the hotel. As he turned from the lane into the great road he was suddenly and not very softly seized by the throat, by the shoulders, and by the coat tails by at least a dozen hands. He was rather too much surprised to speak, even if he had a chance to; the hands so closely clenched around his throat would have prevented his speaking if he had not been so greatly surprised. As he could not speak, he listened very patiently to some half-dozen exclamations of "Now we've got you!"

Something desperate must be done; so Blumble struck the fellow that held him by the throat full in the face, knocking him down, and then cried out as though he expected that this would be the last chance he would ever have to speak.

"What in the deuce are you about?"

The striking question had a miraculous effec upon the numerous hands distributed about his person, and Blumble was free. He waited a few moments to regain his breath; then looking around, asked very energetically:

"What does all this mean?"

"It means that if you don't promise to leave town and not go to see Mary Gay again, we'll just hide you, and then ride you out of town on a rail," said the young man, the recipient of the blow, who had regained his feet.

"Leave town? Mary Gay? Why, I do not understand what you mean," remarked Blumble, consideraly mystified.

"Well, sir," interrupted another voice, "we mean that you've come here from Boston to court Mary Gay, and you mean to cut out Billy Higdy here; now if you don't give up Mary and leave town to-morrow night, we'll pitch you into the mill-pond."

"Hold on a moment," said Blumble; "I think you have got hold of the wrong person, as I have not the acquaintance of Miss Gay, nor, in fact, of any other lady in this place. But I want you to understand one thing distinctly, and that is, I shall not leave town until I get ready."

Something about Blumble's manner seemed to convince the young men that he was in earnest, for they uttered various expressions, such as, "That's a likely story!" "He's gassing!" "I don't believe that," etc. Men invariably express doubts when being convinced of something they had rather not believe.

For a few minutes the whole party remained in silence; then one of the young denizens of P. broke the spell by asking:

"Ain't your name Blumble?"

"Yes, sir."

"And you are from Boston?"

"Yes, sir."

"And don't you know Mary Gay?"

"No, sir."

"Well, that's strange! She said his name was Blumble, and that's your name; he belongs to Boston, and so do you; and you've been right up by her house, and we believe you've been there to see her. Don't we, Bill?"

"Yes, we do," replied Higdy.

"Well, young men," said Blumble, "if you don't believe me, go ask the young lady herself."

This proposition was met with approval by the whole party, so Blumble started back up the lane, accompanied by a large escort before, behind, and on each side of him. They filed into the yard, and crowded on the steps of a neat-looking farm-house, and Higdy knocked at the door. In a few moments one of the chamber windows was opened and a protruding head asked:

"Who's there?"

"Come down to the door a minute, Squire, will you?" asked Bill.

"Why, what do you want?" inquired the voice in the chamber window above.

"We want to see Mary a minute," replied a voice from the crowd below.

"Why, she has been abed these two hours. Is it anything important?"

"Yes; we want to see her just a minute."

"Well, I'll speak to her."

In a few minutes Mary appeared at the door. She was very good looking, notwithstanding her being called out of bed at such an unseasonable hour—and so thought Blumble. For some moments the whole company remained speechless. At last Blumble, tiring of his conspicuous situation, and the "nothing-to-say" spirit of the party, broke the silence by asking the young lady if she had ever seen him before.

"Not that I remember of," she replied.

"I only asked you to satisfy these young men," said Blumble.

"Then he ain't your city beau?" asked Higdy.

"No!" as short as though it had been but one letter.

"Then we were mistaken," said a voice in the yard, and two or three of the party slid out at the gate.

"I am very sorry that I have been the indirect cause of this annoyance to you; but it is no fault of mine. This gentleman," pointing to Higdy, "and his party seized me, and would not allow me to proceed to my hotel until I had proved to them that I had not been visiting you. I must now leave them with you to make their own explanations, and bid you good evening."

"Good evening," said the young lady, in a very sweet voice.

Somehow Blumble didn't sleep very sound that night; he was in a very strange place, and he kept constantly thinking of his strange adventure, and of the good-looking strange young lady; and the more he thought, the more he wondered who she was; and, when at last he determined to inquire about her in the morning, he fell asleep and dreamed of her.

Blumble was an early riser—bachelors generally are—and the next morning, before the village were astir, he had walked out and passed the house of Squire Gay; but he did not see Mary, so he returned to the hotel and inquired of the landlord concerning her. The landlord must have praised the girl, for the bachelor decided to remain another day and be introduced to her, then to remain a third, and finally he concluded he might as well stop the week out, and so he wrote to his partners, informing them that he should remain there a few days to himself. The professed woman-hater walked up that same lane each evening, and walked into the house, too. He was not disturbed again by Bill Higdy, for the Squire had threatened that if he came within gun-shot of the house again to put a dose of cold lead into him. So the wise but jealous Higdy kept out of the way.

There was a great reform in the manner and habits of Thomas Blumble, merchant. He left his bachelor clubs, notwithstanding the jeers and taunts of his former companions, and he became circumspect in his remarks on female character. For a number of months he spent his spare hours writing to Mary, and choosing appropriate gifts for her, and for a long time the Boston and P. express considered him one of their best customers. But ere long there was a brilliant wedding party at the house of Squire Gay, and P. lost its most charming belle, for Miss Gay became Mrs. Blumble. A few weeks ago Mr. and Mrs. Blumble went down to Rock Cove, and visited the old Blumble homestead. While there, Mr. Thomas Blumble introduced his wife to Mr. Jerry Smike, and Mrs. Polly Ann Smike and all the little Smikes. It would be impossible to tell which are most contented with their lot, Thomas or Polly Ann. One thing more and I am done. In answer to Blumble's advertisement for a chambermaid, who would assist in plain sewing, who do you think applied for the situation? You'll never guess, so I'll tell you. It was Hattie Elton! Her New York beau had heard of her flirtations with Blumble, and for that reason broke his engagement with her; and she, who might have been Mrs. Thomas Blumble, must be content to be Mrs. Blumble's servant.

Ladies as Bee-Keepers.

A Des Moines lady, writing to the Department of Agriculture at Washington, says the following upon this subject: "Within the last four years many women have turned their attention to bee-keeping as an occupation—pleasant, easily managed and remunerative. We are glad to know that in every instance which has come to our knowledge success the most marked has attended the undertaking. From reports that have been made to us we condense the following instances: One young lady who had been teaching for several years, and whose health had failed, undertook the care of her father's bees, twelve colonies in number—that had never been profitably managed. Under her care the first year they increased to thirty colonies, and the third year after she took them in charge she sold $1,200 worth of honey, and had in the fall fifty-four strong colonies in good hives. She says: 'The time I devoted to them I did not miss, and the pleasure afforded by the work was so great that I would enjoy it even if no profit were derived.' A widow of scanty means invested $50 in ten poor colonies, and about as much more for ten good hives for her bees. She got her money back the next season and $36 over. The next year she received $900 for honey sold, and had thirty strong colonies in the fall. The largest apiary in all the West is managed entirely by women, who rear for market Italian queens at a large profit, besides producing honey in a wholesale manner. A lady at Jefferson, Wis., managed one of her father's apiaries of 180 colonies, which she soon doubled in number, and sold $2,033 worth of honey one year and $1,694 worth the next. She is a school-teacher, and says from her experience a person can earn ten times as much by keeping bees as by teaching school."

A Fact Worth Knowing.

Set a pitcher of iced water in a room inhabited, and in a few hours it will have absorbed nearly all the perspired gases of the room, the air of which will have become purer, but the water utterly filthy. This depends on the fact that water has the faculty of condensing and thereby absorbing nearly all the gases. At ordinary temperature, a pint of water will contain a pint of carbonic acid gas and several pints of ammonia. This capacity is nearly doubled by reducing the temperature to that of ice. Hence water kept in the room a while is always unfit for use, should be often removed, whether it has become warm or not. And for the same reason the water in a pump should all be pumped out in the morning before any is used. That which has stood in a pitcher over night is not fit for coffee water in the morning. Impure water is as injurious to health as impure air, and every person should provide the means of obtaining fresh, pure water for all domestic uses.

AUTOMATON STREET-CLEANER.—A New Haven man has invented a street-cleaner that will clean a mile of street a day, doing the work of six men. The contrivance consists of ten small hoes placed side by side and mounted on wheels, each one rising or falling, as the nature of the pavements may require, independently of each other, the pressure being produced by the weight of the machine and regulated by springs, the whole thus easily adapting itself to the surface of the street. The machine weighs 150 pounds, and is worked by one man.

GOOD rule for July—Never strike a bed when it's down.

The Way the Thing Works.

Whenever the subject of a reduction of rates of freight and passenger travel is broached to a railway official, the response is, that railroads, as a general thing, pay a less per centage on the capital invested than almost any other class of investments. He will affirm, for instance, that among the great number of roads constructed and doing business in this State, there are but two or three that pay a living profit to the stockholders. The farmer is astonished at this fact, for fact we suppose it to be. But when he looks around among the men who operate and control the vast railway system of the country, and examines into their personal pecuniary condition, among the men who have constructed, manned and equipped these roads, and sees how comfortably most of them are "fixed," what expensive habits of life they are enabled to indulge in, the wonder ceases. When he learns that Tom Scott receives from some fifteen different companies a salary of from $6,000 to $25,000 each per year, and sees the commerce of a State side-tracked, while his gorgeous palace car train goes whirling across the continent, laden with costly wines and rich viands, on which his fellow spoliators, his satraps and toadies, revel and feast, on their way to the Pacific coast for the traffic of the Golden State, that he may lock the whole nation in the monopolists' soulless embrace, there is no more wonder at small open dividends upon railway stocks. Vanderbilt and Drew trying to scale the walls of heaven over church spires and seminary roofs, erected out of the "pittance" they have been able to save in the railway business, are ridiculous sights in the eyes of the honest yeoman who reads in his Bible about the camel and the needle's eye. And Vanderbilt's frugal son-in-law, who died the other day, leaving ten millions for probate and division, is another startling proof of the difficulty that is experienced in making a decent living out of so precarious and unpromising a venture as the railway business of the United States. But, all these exceptional cases aside, why should a road constructed where there is no demand for one, or where there is only prospective business for it to do, be expected to pay, from the start, on its capital stock? What other business dependent upon future development and patronage is expected to do it? The argument is flimsy and without weight. If high rates are based on such a foundation, it is a feeble one in the eyes of justice and common sense.—Prairie Farmer (Chicago).

The Melancholy Death of Victoria Woodhull's Sister.

Mrs. Utica V. Brooker, age 31, born in Ohio, died at the residence of her sisters, Woodhull and Claflin, at No. 6 East Thirty-fourth street, at 11:30 p. m., on Wednesday. She had been sick in bed twelve days, and several physicians, by whom she had been attended, having failed to agree as to the cause of her death, Coroner Herrman went to the house, at 4 p. m., yesterday, to hold an inquest. At the request of the sisters, autopsy was performed by Deputy Coronor Cushman, in the presence of several physicians. Tennie C. Claflin expressed a strong desire to witness the dissection of her sister, but Coroner Herrman kept her out of the room. The autopsy clearly indicated that death had resulted from Bright's disease of the kidneys, superinduced by prolonged intemperance. Several of the relatives of the deceased testified that she had been very intemperate for ten or twelve years, drinking brandy, gin, whisky, beer, or whatever liquid she could procure, and that she had been known to drink bay rum. While suffering from excessive nervous excitement, she had used 1,000 grains of bromide of potassium in a week, and had been known to use 300 grains in a single day. While suffering from delirium tremens, or its incipient stages, she has often jumped from her bed and chased her relatives about the house. Her sisters stated that she was married, but that her husband is in Chicago. The jury rendered a formal verdict in accordance with the statement of Dr. Cushman.—New York Tribune.

Vegetable Instinct.

If a pan of water be placed within six inches of either side of the stem of a pumpkin or vegetable marrow, it will in the course of the night approach it, and will be found in the morning with one of the leaves on the water.

This experiment may be continued nightly until the plant begins to fruit. If a prop be placed within six inches of a young covovules, or scarlet runner, it will find it, although the prop may be shifted daily. If, after it has twined some distance up the prop, it be unwound and twined in the opposite direction, it will return to its original position or die in the attempt; yet, notwithstanding, if two of these plants grow near each other, and have no stake around which they can entwine, one of them will alter the direction of the spiral, and they will twine around each other.

Duhamel placed some kidney beans in a cylinder of moist earth; after a short time they commenced to germinate, of course sending the plume upward to the light and the root down into the soil. After a few days the cylinder was turned one-fourth around, and again and again this was repeated, until an entire revolution of the cylinder was repeated. The beans were then taken out of the earth, and it was found that both the plume and the radical had bent to accommodate themselves to every revolution, and the one in its efforts to ascend perpendicularly, and the other to descend, they had formed a perfect spiral. But although the natural tendency of the roots is downward, if the soil beneath be dry, and any damp substance be above, the roots will ascend to reach it.

BURYING THE HATCHET.—In the city of New York, two crippled soldiers of the late war, representing each of the contending armies, have established a union of their own for mutual aid and support, and are making an humble livelihood on the street-corners by means of a hand-organ. Mutilated by shot and saber, these poor fellows who, in vigorous manhood, would have taken each other's life on the battle-field, have joined hands at last in good will as though they had been messmates instead of enemies.

THE LONDON PRESS.

Mr. Waterson Shows Up Another English Fraud.

This highfalutin braggadocio finds constant expression under all sorts of varying forms in the press of London, which is at once a representative of the conventional British ass and an example of the material well-being enjoyed by the better class of Englishmen. Tell an Englishman he can't ride and he will laugh at you. Yet he bobs up and down in his saddle like Jack-in-the-box. Tell him the Times is a wretched old make-believe, and he will consider it a national insult; but that is just what the Times is.

I have been reading this stately compound of poppy-cock every morning now for three weeks, having plenty of time to wade through it, and I must say that of all the illustrations of gammon and presumption furnished by the fogyism of England, it is the most transparent and absurd. It resembles, as far as it resembles anything, one of those fat, well-dressed butlers whom you will meet at any of the great houses in Park lane, all insolence and breeches; but, whereas here is a fitness in the butler's obesity and swagger, the rotund deficiency of the Times is a constant affront to good manners, common sense and ordinary intelligence. The Times is printed on faultless paper, in large, clear type; and to this extent it is worthy of imitation. It has another virtue, also, which is still higher and rarer—it does not belong to the advertiser; and is, on the whole, to be trusted in small matters. Like the sleek butler in Park lane, it will neither lie nor steal for the rabble. It is only to be reached and overcome by the remunerative demands of the nobility. Nor is there any occasion to quarrel with its decency. Its cleanliness is undeniable. But when it sets up for the first journal in the world, and by the grace of this pretense divides its supercilious twaddle into two parts, that which is tediously oracular and that which is helplessly silent, one is disposed to look for some solid internal evidence of power. Thus moved to seek, he will fail to find. To-day's Times is, like yesterday's Times, a mess of inadequate gabble about European politics, a repetition of last week's editorial flatulencies, a few scraps of desultory and unimportant information, a line or two from America concerning the cotton crop and the Modocs, and a vast and valuable array of crisp and sparkling advertising matter. You will not catch a gleam of sunshine or a ray of humor in the Times during a twelve-month. It is habitually belated with its news. Written in feeble and finished English it is; but that is all. With faultless typography, its "make up" is a bungle of bad taste and chance-work; with prodigious resources, it has neither variety nor enterprise. Why is it a power in the land? Because it is a representative of that slow-moving, ox-eyed, upper and middle-class Bourbonism which has for years obstinately stuck its head behind the rotten wooden walls of England, refusing to budge out of sheer perversity, and hating progress because it sees and knows that there is good in it. The Times, however, is losing, slowly but surely, its influence with its circulation. It is already exceeded by the Telegraph, and will presently be equaled by the News.

Its competitors, the Telegraph and the News, are brighter. But they are miserably behind the American journals in everything except their moderation and culture, and a certain good faith in the matter of advertising, which they have found profitable, and which every newspaper that adopts it will find it equally so. The Telegraph is certainly better written than the New York Herald, but it is neither so brilliant nor so enterprising as the New York Tribune.

The press of London is certainly much behind the press of New York, Chicago and Cincinnati in enterprise and in power. It is decent, but dull, and strong only as it represents and illustrates the conventional weakness of the English character.—London Cor. Louisville Courier-Journal.

Terrible Family Fight in Virginia.

A horrible domestic tragedy was recently enacted at the residence of Franklin Little, a respectable citizen of Clarke county, Va., in which six brothers—Clinton, Columbus, Gilbert, Wallace, Oscar and Lycurgus—were involved. It seems that the brothers had been at variance for some time, the cause being jealousy that has existed directly between the oldest brothers, Clinton, Oscar and Lycurgus. A few mornings since, as part of the family were at breakfast, Oscar and Lycurgus entered the dining-room, locked the door after them, one putting the key in his pocket. Then one of them took a seat near the door; the other off from the table. Oscar, addressing himself to Clinton, said they had nothing against him, and did not want him to interfere in what they were going to do. Clinton jumped from his seat, but before he could speak Oscar and Lycurgus drew their revolvers and aimed at him and the rest of the family at the table and fired, wounding Clinton and their mother, Mrs. Little. The fight then became general among all the brothers, lasting some minutes. All were severely wounded except Wallace. By this time some of the belligerents had gotten outside the house. Lycurgus and Oscar then started to run. Gilbert, who was standing near, ran into the house and brought out a rifle, fired at Oscar at long range, wounding him in the leg. He was captured by Columbus and Gilbert, and held until the arrival of neighbors. He was taken to Berryville and lodged in jail. Clinton died after lingering a couple of hours in intense agony. The mother is in a critical condition.

OUR MAIL SERVICE.—There are in the United States 63,514 miles of railway mail service, that being an increase of 5,603 miles since the same period last year. Massachusetts is the only New England State in which there are 1,000 miles of railway mail service, that State having nearly 1,700 miles. Delaware has 248 miles, while of the other Middle States, New York has 4,726, New Jersey 1,184, and Pennsylvania 3,670 miles. Of the Southern States, Arkansas, Florida, and West Virginia have less than 5,000, while in the others there are from 1,000 to 2,000 miles. Illinois has the largest railway mail service—6,526 miles; Ohio next, 4,877; New York third, Pennsylvania fourth, and Missouri fifth. In the latter State there are 3,340 miles.

BILLIARDS.

BY A RETIRED AMATEUR.

In the days when I spotted the ball
Where my [illegible]
Many runs did I make at the call
Of her sire, who was great for the pocket.

Nothing less than a Count of three score,
If he'd had his own way, he'd have chosen;
And her cheek grew so chalk-like, I swore
[illegible]

All in vain had I Banked for the lead
With a [illegible]
Yet he made not a point in his greed,
That I didn't surpass with a follow.

Till, at last, an unfortunate break,
For the fortune he'd lost made him mourner;
When a spout at three balls did I take!
To deliver him out of his corner.

Then he gratefully gave me a Miss—
Never barring a push that was tinglish—
And he said: "You may win by a Kiss,
But, be sure, don't put on too much English."

Those were days when a shot off the spot
Was the end of all foul-playing wrangle;
And a miss, made for safety or not,
Came with only a good, honest angle.

They were times of more Phelan than these,
With a tenor not quite so Ubassy;
And the French of a stroke that could please
Wasn't what it is now—"Lor'! a massé!"

AN Essex-street boy exploded a pack of fire-crackers in his sister's piano, Saturday. The intercession of his grandfather saved the youngster a well merited thrashing, and, out of gratitude to his deliverer, he sprinkled the inside folds of the morning paper with cayenne pepper, and the old gentleman on opening and shaking it, as has been his custom for years, was taken with a violent fit of sneezing, and threw both of his knees and one thumb out of joint, before the hired man, whose nose he broke, could control him. The old gentleman has temporarily retired from the business of intercessor.—Danbury News.

A Ride for a Bride.

Monday last a candidate presented himself to the County Clerk, requesting a license to commit matrimony; but when the usual questions were asked, it was divulged that the lady, the intended victim, was under age, and her parents lived fully sixty miles from here, beyond the San Benito. In vain the would-be Benedick asserted that he had the full consent of her parents. The urbane but inexorable clerk, Poole, told him he had no recourse; those mysterious complications of law, inconsistency and absurdity, the code, were explicit upon that one point at least, and the young man must show cause or wait until his "lady love" had arrived at an age when she could be her own as well as his master. "Faint heart ne'er won fair lady yet," so the plucky fellow unhitched one of the horses from the team with which he drove over, borrowed a saddle, and started off. He returned late Tuesday night, and said he would have been back sooner if he had not got lost on the mountains returning the night previous. He had rode the whole 120 miles without rest; but he had obtained the parents' permit, and Wednesday morning early the twain were united and made happy.—Salinas (Mo.) Index.

The War Against Monopoly.

Extract from Senator Castle's Fourth of July oration at Princeton, Ill.:

In this battle against monopolies the people must not get too much work on their hands at once. Take the railways first, and when that is done take the next evil. Nor must the farmers, if they would succeed, claim that this is distinctively their work. It belongs to the people, and while theirs is the industry which most feels the oppression, all must join. A class movement can never succeed in the long run, and to supplant a railway monopoly with a farmers' monopoly might not be a great gain. Instead, let us build on the broad platform, "Antagonism to all monopolies," and invite to our aid all who love their country, be they farmers, merchants, middlemen, citizens, or headmen; and thus, with one banner and one battle-cry, go forth to the conflict, never ceasing until all monopolies are made to acknowledge the supremacy of law, and, as the citizen, bow before the law, until the courts, as well as the law-makers, accept as a principle that all such official legislation as is designed to favor one class above another is not in accordance with the theories of a republican government.

The Goodrich Murder—The Motive for the Deed.

Minnie Waltham, alias Kate Stoddard, the murderer of Charles Goodrich, in Brooklyn, on the 21st of March last, and who has just been arrested for the crime, has made a confession, of which the following is the substance:

She had been living with Charlie, as she called the deceased, and was greatly attached to him. He wanted to cast her off, but she loved him so much that she could not leave him. She entreated on her knees that he would allow her to remain, but he was firm, and, in fact, brutal, in his treatment of her, and the Thursday before the Friday on which the body was found was the day fixed for her to leave him. He threatened her with all sorts of things if she dared to trouble him further. She had remained in the house in Degrand street all the previous evening, and in the morning when Goodrich got up she again besought him not to cast her off. He was very angry, and refused her request, or to hear her at all. He then went into the basement at the front of the house, and proceeded to light the Baltimore heater located there. The murderess said she loved the man so much that she could not leave him. When she saw him determined to discard her, she worked herself up to murder him. She had one of his revolvers in her pocket, not the one which the detective found lying at the house beside the corpse, and while Goodrich was stooping down on one hand and knee in the act of lighting the heater, she drew the pistol, and, extending her hand toward him, she said "Charlie." He looked up and she shot him three times. These were the fatal wounds which the post-mortem examination discovered. After she committed the murder on Thursday morning, she waited all that day and night in the house, watching it. On Friday morning she had occasion to go to New York, and early that morning she washed the blood from the face of the murdered man with the towel which she afterward wrung out, and which was also found damp by the police. She it was who fixed the corpse as it was discovered, and when she had done this she went over to New York for something or other, and was about to return to the house on that Friday evening. She came over the Fulton ferry, and, ere she had fairly put her foot on the street, she heard the newsboys crying out, "Extra—murder of Charles Goodrich." She bought a paper and returned to New York. She states, "I killed him for love—I couldn't part with him."

Railroads and their Cost.

H. V. Poor's "Railroad Manual for 1873-4," just published, gives a detailed statement of 425 different railroads, of which the following is a summary:

Miles of railroad	57,323
Cost	$3,159,423,057
Cost per mile	55,116
Gross receipts	483,241,055
Operating expenses	307,486,682
Net earnings	165,754,373
Dividends paid	64,418,151

The total number of miles in operation is 67,104, of which 6,427, built last year, made no return, and others refuse information. The total earnings are $110,000,000 more than the receipts in the United States Treasury, and the net earnings $48,000,000 more than the Government interest account. The total cost is $900,000,000 more than the national debt. Thirty-three thousand nine hundred and thirty-four miles have been built since 1863.

Cholera!

This terrible scourge is threatening this country again. This fact is well calculated to impress our readers with the necessity and the advantage of life insurance, and will greatly increase, as the war did, the number of persons seeking insurance. It is a good time now for any one fitted therefor, to secure the agency of a first-class company. The National Life Insurance of the United States of America, chartered by Congress, with a capital of one million dollars, and charges for insurance only about three-fourths those of mutual institutions, is a company of which any agent or policy-holder may well be proud, and we cheerfully advise all persons looking for insurance or for employment to address that company at its Branch Office in Philadelphia.—[Com.

THE JEWS.—The press of Vienna, which is very important and influential, is worked, owned, written, and influenced by Jews. In Vienna there are today more Jews than crossed the Jordan with Joshua, and in the Austrian empire there are as many Jews as there were in Judea at the time of Titus. The Jews of Europe play a most important part in music, in money-making, and in politics. They have taken possession of much of the goods of Europe without striking a blow in battle or sustaining the burdens of national life. If ever there was a race specially favored by Providence, it is the Jewish race, for it is the wealthiest, most courted, and most influential in Europe.

THE steamship Atlantic, after having successfully encountered violent storms, was wrecked when almost in sight of the harbor she was seeking. Many a man has acquired a fortune by patient industry and lost it at the last, leaving his family destitute. It follows that every man should insure his life. Life insurance affords absolute protection to the family. Be careful to select a good company—one that you can always depend upon. The New York Life Insurance Company offers every inducement to insurers, having assets amounting to $22,000,000, and every desirable form of policy. Full particulars can be had by addressing the home office, at 346 and 348 Broadway, New York, or by calling on one of their agents. Good agents wanted everywhere.—[Com.

DRUNKENNESS IN ENGLAND.—At Liverpool and elsewhere I have been shocked at the drunkenness prevailing, and among women. One sees much more of it than in the United States. At Liverpool, I saw, at evening, many women lying on the steps of St. George's Hall, dead drunk. One sees in the cities of England an extreme of poverty and wretchedness never witnessed in the United States.—London Cor. Chicago Tribune.

CALIFORNIA'S BIGGEST NUGGET.—How much we owe to California! Her precious metals have enriched thousands of our fellow-citizens, and have proved the main-stay of America in times of national pecuniary embarrassment. Her mining industries have given employment to myriads of mechanics and laborers. She is the land of promise to the fortune-seeker. But the Golden State has lately sent us a new treasure. Her last nugget is DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS. The health-giving principles contained in this curative are a more precious boon than gold. In all affections of the liver and stomach, remittent and intermittent fevers, rheumatism, and pulmonary diseases, it may be relied upon. As a blood depurent and invigorant it is unequaled, purifying the circulation and infusing new vigor into the debilitated frame. It conquers that most unyielding of all complaints, dyspepsia, and we know of no other remedy that can accomplish this. Its entire freedom from alcoholic spirit, which retards and neutralizes the effect of any medicine, and which forms the basis of many of the pseudo bitters and tonics, doubly enhances its value to the sick. The papers of the United States vie with one another in doing honor to Dr. Walker. We, too, add our voice, and say all honor to the man whose science and skill have enabled him to draw from the vegetable kingdom such a balsam for human suffering.—[Com.

A BAD BEGINNING.—The first lottery mentioned in English history began its drawing at the western door of St. Paul's Cathedral, January 11, 1509, and continued day and night until May 6 following. Twenty-five cents a vial, by all Druggists.—[Com.

RHEUMATISM.—Among many remarkable cures by Dr. Trask's Magnetic Ointment, I send you the following: I found my friend Deacon Barber, of this place, prostrate and helpless from a severe attack of Inflammatory Rheumatism. With his consent I made a thorough application of the ointment to the diseased parts, rubbing it on with my own hands. I used one bottle. The next morning he was able to come to the breakfast table, and said he felt like a new man—though a good Providence had sent me there. Within a week he was perfectly well and at work on his farm. CHOLERA AND PAIN KILLER.—Perry Davis' Pain Killer is an excellent regulator of the stomach and bowels, and should always be kept on hand, especially at this season of the year, when so many suffer from bowel complaints. There is nothing so quick to relieve in Attacks of Cholera.

Sold at only 25 cents a bottle, by Merchants and medicine dealers generally.—[Com.

A FACT worth remembering—Five cents' worth of Sheridan's Cavalry Condition Powders, given to a horse twice a week, will save double that amount in grain, and the horse will be fatter, sleeker, and every way worth more money than though he did not have them.—[Com.

PAIN KILLER—ITS MERITS.

ASIATIC CHOLERA IN CHINA.

TUNGCHOW, China, Aug. 23.

Messrs. PERRY DAVIS & SON:

Dear Sirs—During a long residence in China, I have used your invaluable Pain Killer, both in my own family and among the Chinese, and have found it a most excellent medicine. In the summer of '62 and '63, while residing in Shanghai, I found it an almost certain cure for Cholera, if used in time. Indeed, using it in a great many instances, I do not remember failing in a single case. For three years I have been residing in this place, more than fifty miles from a physician, and have been obliged often to fall back upon my own resources in cases of sickness. The Chinese come to us in great numbers for medicine and advice. Though without medical knowledge ourselves, the few simple remedies we can command are so much in advance even of their physicians, that we have almost daily applications. We allow them to come, because it brings us in contact with them, and opens a door to usefulness. In diarrhea, colic, vomiting, cholera, coughs, &c., your Pain Killer has been my chief medicine. Yours, very truly,

T. P. CRAWFORD.

ITS MERITS ARE UNSURPASSED.

If you are suffering from INTERNAL PAIN, Twenty to Thirty Drops in a little Water, will almost instantly cure you. There is nothing to equal it. In a few moments it cures

Colic, Cramps, Spasms, Heart-burn, Diarrhea, Dysentry, Flux, Wind in the Bowels, Sour Stomach, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache.

In sections of the country where

FEVER AND AGUE

prevails, there is no remedy held in greater esteem. Persons traveling should keep it by them. A few drops, in water, will prevent sickness or bowel troubles from change of water.

From foreign countries the calls for PAIN KILLER are great. It is found to

Cure Cholera when all other Remedies fail.

WHEN USED EXTERNALLY, AS A LINIMENT, nothing gives quicker ease in Burns, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Stings from Insects, and Scalds. It removes the fire, and the wound heals like ordinary sores. Those suffering with RHEUMATISM, GOUT, or NEURALGIA, if not a positive cure, they find the PAIN KILLER gives them relief when no other remedy will.

It Gives Instant Relief from Aching Teeth.

From 1840 to this day, 1870 (Thirty Years), PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER has had no Rival.

Every Housekeeper should keep it at hand, to apply it on the first attack of any Pain. It will give satisfactory relief, and save hours of suffering.

Do not trifle with yourselves by testing untried remedies. Be sure you call for and get the genuine PAIN KILLER, as many worthless nostrums are attempted to be sold on the great reputation of this valuable medicine. Directions accompany each bottle.

Price 25 cts., 50 cts., and $1 per Bottle.

The Vital Drain.

It is necessary to the health of the body that its exhausted and refused particles should be carried off by the excretory organs, and it is equally necessary that the waste matter thus expelled should be replaced by new elements derived from digested and assimilated food. It is evident, therefore, that good digestion and perfect assimilation are essential to bodily vigor; and it is because Hostetter's Stomach Bitters powerfully assist these processes, that it is regarded by the intelligent classes, whose opinions are founded on observation, as the only absolute specific for dyspepsia and its attendant ills, at present known. When the system, either from constitutional causes, overwork, excess, anxiety, or actual diseases, is in an unnaturally relaxed condition, something more than its exhausted particles passes through the pores. Vitality leaks through these ventages. Elements which should remain in the blood and enrich it are evolved, and that fluid becomes then watery and incapable of removing the solids of the body as fast as they decay. The consequences are emaciation, debility, nervousness, loss of spirits, and a general, or perhaps a rapid, decline of all powers of life. It is in cases like this that the restorative properties of Hostetter's Bitters are most conspicuous. The first two or three doses sometimes produce a change in the feelings and aspect of the invalid that is perfectly astonishing, and by a persevering use of this superlative vegetable tonic and alterative, the vital drain is sure to be arrested, the strength reinstated, the flesh restored, the constitution reinforced, and the brain relieved of the cloud that obscured it.

THE late Gov. Geary pronounced Dr. Shallenberger's Fever and Ague Antidote a public benefaction. A single trial will establish its merit.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

AYER'S HAIR VIGOR, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens; and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the VIGOR is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft luster and richness of tone it imparts.

The Company has more than 500 miles of its Road built and in operation, including the entire Eastern Division, connecting Lake Superior and the navigation of the Missouri River; it has earned title to nearly Ten Million Acres of its Land Grant, and sales of lands have thus far averaged $5.66 per acre.

SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that

Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.

THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

Not only does the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT excel all known remedial agents in the cure of Chronic, Scrofulous, Constitutional, and Skin diseases; but it is the only positive cure for Ballooning has long been successful upon a small scale, which tested the principle. Why can it not make a revolution upon a large one, and that become practical which [illegible] a theory.

Plantation Life.

A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press, traveling through the south says: As a rule, the negro seem contented with their pay and general treatment, and are happy, as this class has ever been, and, perhaps, ever will be. [illegible] acres being devoted to grain for domestic consumption, the balance to cotton. One hundred and twenty five adults are employed on this plantation, including both sexes. Each of these is paid sixty-five dollars per year in money, and furnished with food and quarters. If they have families these also are provided with quarters, and such as can work on the plantation are employed. Three acres are set apart for each adult hand, upon which they can cultivate what they please, the planter furnishing [illegible] seed, [illegible] and mules. They work five days a week for the planters. Saturday being accorded them for working their own acres, and Sunday being devoted to [illegible] recreation. Some cultivate their acres with decided profit, while others are too lazy or indifferent to do anything to better themselves. This is the prevailing system upon which contracts are made between the planters and the field hands, and it [illegible] to the satisfaction of both parties.

Says the Virginia Enterprise; A horrible accident occurred at Steamboat Springs, Washoe county, which will probably result in the death of C. W. Cullen, proprietor of the springs. For the following particulars in regard to the affair we are indebted to Dr. O. C. Green, of this city, who was summoned by telegraph to assist the scalded man. Mr. Cullen was engaged in erecting a new bath house over [illegible] pool of boiling water to use in giving steam baths. Timbers for the foundation of the structure had been laid across the boiling water to use in giving steam bathes. Timbers for the foundation of the structure had beeg laid across the boiling pool, which is four or five feet in depth, and Mr. Cullen [illegible] to arrange a cross timbor, when he slipped and fell into the water. The water was so deep that it reached nearly to his breast bone, and so hot that an egg was cooked in it in two minutes. When he [illegible] he was either so frightened or felt such pain [illegible] in a [illegible] hardly anything [illegible] he was in the [illegible] minute before he got out, which he did at [illegible] the help of a man who came to his assistance. He was taken to the hotel and stripped, when the greater part of the skin slipped off his body from near the breast bone downward. C. A. V. Putnam, State Printer, James Gray, of this city, and others, who happened to be visiting at the springs, did all that could be done for the suffering man pending the arrival of the physician. They got a large quantity of flour and packed the man in it, and kept him in this condition till the doctor arrived. Dr. Green says the man may be said to be literally cooked alive. As to whether he will live or not he can not say, but appears to think his recovery would be little short of a miracle. Cullen was in such agony that the doctor was obliged to give him frequent doses of opium to keep him at all quiet.

There is now living in the town of Worthington, Mass., the family of Silas Marble, which consists of a father and mother and twelve children. The father is 87 years old and the mother [illegible]. They were married December [illegible], 1808, consequently have lived together as man and wife 65 years. The oldest child is nearly [illegible], the youngest 39.

The experiment of planting pine seeds on the waste lands of [illegible], Mass, is reported to be a complete success. A thousand acres of land are now covered with thrifty trees from seed sown. The land thus covered, but for this protection, would have been a waste tract of shifting sand. As a consequence, the game has increased, and quail, plover, and other birds are plentiful, while foxes are not scarce.

The Tigress Ready for Sea.

The steamer Tigress is now about ready for sea. About two o'clock this afternoon the little steamer will [illegible] Sunday night or Monday morning, adjusting her compasses. Yesterday [illegible] some of the last touches of paint work were put on her. She took on also considerable quantities of stores, in the [illegible] time, as well as a spare rudder, one or two additional boats, a third propeller screw and a life raft. At eight o'clock this morning she will be regularly put in commission as a United States ship, and all hands [illegible] uniform. For the last week her officers have been wearing anything, and at times have looked not unlike coal heavers, knocking around as they have been among coal dust, painters, carpenters and laborers. The vessel has been put in order in great dispatch as was possible, for she has had gangs at work loading, alterin, repairing, painting and rigging her all at the same time. Returning from the United States compass station on Sunday evening or early Monday morning she will proceed to the Navy Yard again for a few additional articles of supplies, to receive final official orders, to take on board the Esquimaux, and will all likelihood set sale on her [illegible] perilous voyage about noon of that day. She will go to sea by way of Long Island Sound.

The U[illegible] Tallapoosa arrived at the Navy Yard early yesterday morning and made fast at the long wharf, close to the Tigress. The Tallapoosa had come from Portsmouth (N. H.) Navy Yard, having on board Secretary Robeson, of the Navy Department, and Hans Christian, wife and two children, the Greenland Esquimaux, and Hannan and her husband Joe, the other Esquimaux natives of Igloolik, all of whom were rescued form the ice floe by the Tigress, and will now return in the same vessel to their dreary native land. These Esquimaux are dull, stolid looking, dark-complexioned, broad-faced people, and look as though they might be the product of a cross between an American Indian and Chinese.—Herald.

General Howard is putting in the time elapseing before his trial by court-martial by making speeches at a Young Men's Christian Association Convention.

A patriotic murder of Meridan Miss., was granted the urgently requested favor of having his execution take place on the Fourth of July, the Judge being the more ready to attend to the petition from the fact that the hanging "would help along the proposed celebration."

The loss entailed upon the government by the defalcation of ex-Paymaster Hodge amounted to $442,000. Yet he was pardoned by the President and clasped to the government bosom, and now draws his pay as regular as if nothing had happened.

It takes a long while for the fact to become generally understood that fighting the newspapers is a losing game. Miss Linda Gilbert, of Chicago, has found it out at last. She sued the Evening Mail for libel. The jury brought in a verdict for the plaintiff placing the damages at six cents.

A new and unexpected turn has been given to the Goodrich tragedy by the testimony before the Coroner last Saturday. The murderess was a few [illegible] an inmate of a lunatic asylum, and [illegible] shows that she is still touched by displaying an insatiable appetite for Goodriches blood. It seems probable that the plea of insanity is to be put forward for once in behalf of a really insane person.

It is strange that President Grant can't live in Washington City upon a salary of $25,000 a year, with house fuel, lights, gardens, stables, servants, &c., free. Wonder whether he can live upon the $50,000 a year voted him?

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

☞ ☞ ☞

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

It used to be stated in old-fashioned books of natural history that the hore was the gift of the Old World to the New. But the whole race of horses lived and perished in America ages before men went down into the sea ships. There are now in Yale Museum the fossil remairs of twenty-one different species belonging to the horse family. These animals varied in sizes that are larger than any now existing down to delicate creatures not bigger than a fox.

The good Studebaker wagon people, of South Bent, talking about running Schuyler Colfax for corone. this shows ther appreciatition of genius, for Schuyler will show be very serviceable in sitting upon Nesbit's ghost. A man of Springfiel Vermont, has invented a new suspension bridge. It consists of a single wire stretched across Black River and a car that will contain two person travel back and forth on the wire. The east end of the wire is the highest, and the momenrum of the car serves to carry it across, a distance of two hundred feet in fifteen seconds. Returning the car travels to the center of the wire without help, and from thence is drawn up by a cord attached to the car, the entire trip only occupying thirty seconds.

Where He Got Ahead.

A man in Portland married a widow. She had a fashion, which is too common among ladies who have buried a man, of giving glowing accounts of the virtues of the dear departed. As the prohibition law is in force in Maine, he could not drown his sorrows in liquor, so he nerved his soul to take a terrible revenge. One night when his wife was sleeping soundly, perhaps dreaming of the "first" victim of her charms, he arose from his bed, took a sledge-hammer, and deliberately raising it to his shoulder, he marched to the graveyard, and smashed the tombstone of his dead rival into little bits. Now, when his wife says anything about the virtues of the dead man, he replies: "It may be all very true, but he can't mash my tombstone; there's where I'm ahead."

A late London letter says: Yesterday the Shah was greatly entertained by the Marquis of Queensberry, who brought to the palace a number of prize fighters. Gen. Hardinge, who was on duty at the time, was quite horrified. "How many have you got?" asked he of the Marquis. "Six," was the reply. "My God!" exclaimed the General, "we can't let six of them in; they might knock us all the head and walk off with the jewels and plate." A compromise was effected; two of the best of the bruisers were allowed to enter with the Marquis. They first fought with each other, and then the Marquis, who is the best boxer in the kingdom, tried a few rounds with each of them, handsomely drawing the claret from one and knocking the other down The Shah was charmed. He said it was the best thing he had seen in England. He gave each of the men a handful of coin and bestowed upon the Marquis a handsome pipe, mounted with rubies and emeralds.

A country schoolmaster began, one morning, the duties of the day, with prayer as usual; but, after prayer he went up and asked a little boy why he hadn't shut his eyes during the prayer, when the boy sharply responded, 'We are instructed in the Bible to watch as well as pray.'

'Love,' says an amorous writer, 'is an internal transport.' The same might be said of a canal boat.

Root Beer.

One of the best drinks for this hot weather is one called root beer. It is in universal use in the East and has been for half a century. It can be made as follows:

Take spruce bough, black-birch bark, sarsaparilla, winter-green leaves sassafras, yellow-dock, and dandelion roots; boil all together in a large kettle, with a handful of hops and two quarts of wheat bran, and two quarts of molasses. When boiled enough—two hours or so—strain through a sieve, cool, and add a pint of yeast. If not very sweet to the taste, add more molasses. Let it work over night, then bottle. Secure the corks tightly and it will foam well. The same can be made in larger quantities, and put into a fifteen gallon cask, and worked from the bung-hole for a few days but it will not foam so well as if bottled.

If some person would engage in the manufacture of this root beer for sale there is little doubt it might be made a profitable business. But if this is not done, it could be made by any good house-wife, with a little assistance.

How to Keep Cool.

Stew around as much as you can before breakfast. Find fault with your wife. Upbraid the help, and jaw the children.

Don't permit yourself to be suited with the morning meal.

On reaching your place of business, fume around because some trifling thing hasn't been attended to.

Make it warm as you can for your partner, and he will probably reciprocate by making it warmer for you.

Run out every half hour and get a drink,

Along about the middle of the day, chase around after delinquent creditors, the more cases the better.

Swear a little.

Growl about the heat.

Work yourself into a lather trying to get full days work out of your men.

Wipe your face vigorously with your pocket-handkerchief every two minutes.

Get into a dispute on politics.

Write dunning letters.

Drink some more.

Go home to cold dinner and have your wife make it hot for you.

Kick up a quarrel with your neighbor.

Mope, growl, swear and drink until bed time, spend the night fighting musquitoes to save expense of a musqui to bars. If by following the above rule faithfully you are unable to keep cool, your case is hopeless.

Cholera at Mt. Vernon.

[Mt. Vernon, Ind. (July 19.) Correspondence of the Louisville Journal.]

To give you some idea of the ruin that has followed close upon the heels of this "Demon of the Ganges," I will cite a few of the more prominent families that it has visited. In a family named Bell, two are left alive out of seven person; in one named Hovey, relations of Gen. Hovey, two died; in that of sheldons, four deaths; in that of the Woodeys, proprietors of the foundry the utmost havoc was made. One of the proprietors died with it; in his brother's family, a wife and two children were buried, and so great was the excitement and fright that I am told the husband had to prepare the bodies for the tomb.

In her fathers family all but two were buried. These are individual cases. But I failed to find a single who has not had cholera symtoms more or less violent in their effects. Every house is pervaved with the odors of disinfectant; every person smells of assafœtida and camphor; cherub looking children give out this nauseating smell from their garments. Certainly it would seem that every thing possible has been done to stay the disease. Rosin, pine tar, and coal were burned by orders of the Borrd of Health, so that one could feel the heat all over the place but in spite of all preventive and science, for ten days the plague carried off its victims. From my room at midnight, I could hear the noises of funerals. You cannot understand to what extremities the citizens and and families have been driven. Medical aid was insufficient. The doctors could not be at all place at all times and many have died who might have been saved had it been possible to have treated them the instant the disease came upon them. Yet the physicians have all acted heroically with a single exception, whose leaving with his family has excited a storm of indignation. But up till to day he had worked hard. For ten days the doctors had scarcely any rest, and been busy in going from house to house, for every dwelling all most had its cheiera patients. Scarcely a business house was open to-day; the streets were deserted, the banks closed, and the depot thronged with citizens fleeing for their lives from the city. I think at least 700 persons have left to-day alone. People living in the lower land, or flats, and who have been unable to leave, have removed to store rooms and warehouses where they are living and hoping to escape the disease. New cases were reported to-day, but the general belief is that the disease has reached its height; at least the symptons of the new patients are reported as less violent and much milder than those of two days ago.

One single fact remains to be cited, and that there is seemingly no reason for this inflicting of the pestilence. The town has had the reputation of being as healthy as Evansville, and one the most healthy in Southern Indiana. The adjoining tracts are not swampy, and the bluffs on which a part of the city is built is the highest between Evansvill and Cairo. Some attribute it to the use of well water; but every house has a sistern, from which the water for cooking and drink is obtained and the water of the wells was probably used here less even than in other place.

They are again agitating the distillation of spirits from the garbage cities. Alcohol, it is well known, can be distilled from anything that ferments, no matter whether the fermenting matter be a loaf of unbaked bread or a reeking garbage vessel. In this new process the garbage is gathered from the houses of citizens, dumped into water-tight vats boiled for several hours, the grease is carefully skimmed off for soap making purposes, and the pulpy mass fermented and distilled. The refuse goes to the cornfield, the peach orchard, or the vineyard. A barrel of garboge yields three pounds of soap-grease, and four gallons of proof spirits. The philosophical and chemical mind may know that whisky distilled from garbage is as pure and cleanly as that which comes from corn; but for a steady beverage the ordinary drunkard will doubtless prefer sound Bourbon or old rye.

The low corsages of summer ball dresses are made to cover the shoulders and point very low in the back and front, displaying the neck to advantage. The conspicuous feature then added is a plaited ruff all around the neck, but much higher behind than in foont. The ruff is of the dress silk, and white silk lining and a stiff muslin interlining to hold it erect. Small half-inch box-plaits, scant enough to spread out at the top like a fan, are used for these ruffs, or else the same objct is produced by small plaits.

The West.

The Chicago Tribune prints crop reports from various points in Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, and Illinois. Grain of all kinds generally promise favorably. The National Congress of Workingmen closed its session at Cleveland on the 18th inst., after having adopted a platform. The resolutions set forth that unless the aggressions of aggregated wealth are checked, they will lead to the pauperization and degradation of the toiling masses; that a system could be adopted that would secure to the laborer the fruits of his toil; that this object should only be attained through a union of labor and united efforts of laborers, recognizing in the ballot-box an agency for the redress of wrongs, yet at this hour the great consideration is the organization and co-operation of the producing masses; resolving to submit to the people of the United States the objects sought to be accomplished by the Industrial Congress; to make knowledge a stand-point for industrial, social and moral worth, the true standard of greatness; to secure to the toiler an equitable share of the wealth which he helps to create, more leisure time, and more social advantages; demanding from the State and National Governments the establishment of bureaus of labor statistics, to arrive at the true moral, educational, and financial condition of the producing masses; the reserving of public lands for actual settlers; the adoption of measures providing for the health and safety of those engaged in mining and manufacturing pursuits; the substitution of arbitration for strikes when practicable; the prohibition of the importation of all servile races, and the discontinuance of contracting convict labor; the reduction to eight hours per day of a day's labor, and providing for a national circulating medium based on the faith and resources of the nation, and issued directly to the people.

On the evening of the 21st of July a passenger train on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific railroad was ditched by robbers near Adair, Iowa, the express messenger robbed and the engineer killed. The bandits placed obstructions on the track at a sharp curve. John Rafferty, the engineer, saw the obstructions and reversed the engine and applied the air-brake. He had no sooner done this than the robbers fired upon him from their ambush and shot him dead. The locomotive and two baggage-cars were thrown from the track, but the passenger coaches remained all right. Several passengers were slightly bruised, none seriously. As soon as the train came to a stand-still, the highwaymen, [illegible] proceeded to open and empty the safe of the express messenger of its contents, after which they rode off on horseback. At last accounts every possible means was being used to secure the arrest of the desperadoes.... The wheat yield of Minnesota is unusually large.

The Cholera at Chattanooga.

Dr. H. V. Redfield writes from Chattanooga, Tenn., under date of the 10th: "To show what cholera can do when it tackles a community it is only necessary to refer to the death-rate here. From the 1st to the 19th of June, the total deaths from all causes were only eight. This in a city of nine or ten thousand was agreeably small. But when cholera came the death-rate went up to about ten a day, and often more. This shows the beauty and advisability of keeping the gentleman with the black rag at a distance by a war on filth and stagnant pools. Here, as at Nashville, the majority of the victims have been colored. This is easily accounted for. The negroes live in low parts of the city in a perfect atmosphere of filth. They exercise no care about the quality of their diet or the character of their surroundings. They cannot understand how it is that filth, when they do not touch it, can make disease. If you tell them that a pool of stagnant water brings cholera they want to know how that can be if they neither drink nor touch it."

DIABOLISM.

Particulars of the Wrecking and Robbery of a Train on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad—One of the Most Daring Pieces of Ruffianism on Record.

Des Moines (July 22) Cor. Chicago Times.

Further details of the robbery on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific train last evening have been received. The train was thrown from the track at 7:35 on a short curve between Adair and Anita, in a cut of about ten feet, where there is an open prairie divide. The north line was loosened, and a line run from that under the south rail, and as the train approached, the rail was drawn. This threw the engine on the ties, and in less than 100 feet it was ditched, turning on its side, throwing the engineer and fireman into the ditch. The fireman, Dennis Foley, found the body of the engineer was upon him, and struggling from the ditch, found he was dead. Some shots were fired, and a man told him he would shoot, and he told him to "shoot and be d—d." He then let the water off, and saved the engine from explosion. The express messenger was ordered to open the safe, with a revolver at his head, and did it. One of the robbers unmasked himself, and looked at the money, and took the same, amounting to $1,700. He was a sandy-whiskered cuss, with a broad-brimmed hat, and two navy revolvers. The jar had affected the men in the express car. Assistant Superintendent Royce being one of them, pitching one over the other, and Royce taking a hard bump on his nose. The two ruffians in the car wanted to know where the balance of the treasure was, and the messenger pointed to the bags of gold and silver bullion, which were too heavy for him, and were not taken.

Superintendent Royce, whom the robbers supposed to be a passenger, was led out of the car bleeding from his wound by the robber, and soon was at work doing the best he could to repair the disaster and report the robbery. Randolph Knight, a prominent merchant here, on the train, says the passengers were thrown from their seats, though none were seriously injured. Although they heard the popping of the pistol shots, they did not at first realize the situation. He started out of the car, and as he landed a pistol was pointed at him from the bank. He was told to get back or he would be shot. He immediately returned. He then attempted to get out on the other side, with the same result. He began to plead for the passengers and the helpless women and children, but they were without pity. In the car the scene beggared description. The women and children were screaming. Some of them got down on the floor and covered their heads. A number of men crowded under the seats to protect themselves. On the train were thirty Chinese, twenty-eight of whom were on their way to Springfield, Mass., to attend school. They appeared to be less scared than the others around them. The number of the men engaged in the robbing is placed at from five to eight, the latter number being about the figure. A number of narrow escappes were made by balls being in close proximity to persons.

The body of the engineer was brought here this morning. He leaves a wife and two children. His body was taken in charge by the Masons. The railroad company offer a reward of $5,000, and it is thought a trail leading south is a good one for the robbers, and is being followed. Other rewards will be offered, and nothing spared for the arrest and conviction of them.

The Governor has offered $500 for the arrest of any one of the robbers.

ANOTHER ACCOUNT.

When about sixty-five miles west of this city (Des Moines), about half-past 8 o'clock, at a sharp curve in the road, and an an isolated spot, with no house within several miles in any direction, the train moving about twenty-five miles an hour, the engineer, John Rafferty, suddenly saw one rail move from its place about sixty feet ahead of the engine. He instantly reversed his engine and applied the air-brake, and while in the act of doing it, bullets came pelting into the engine like hail. The engine ran into the bank and turned over, throwing out the engineer, John Rafferty, and the fireman, the former falling on the latter, dead. It is supposed that he was killed by the concussion, as no bullet wounds were found on his body. The fireman escaped unhurt. The train, being a heavy one, ran about one hundred feet and stopped. The engine ran up into the bank and turned over, and the two baggage cars doubled up and were badly smashed.

As soon as the train stopped, six large, athletic men, masked in full Ku-Klux style, appeared at the express car, in which were the conductor, Wm. Smith, Superintendent Royce; the express messenger, John Burgess, and three other persons, and commenced firing rapidly into the car, yelling: "Get out of there, damn ye!—get out of there!" Two bullets passed through the clothes of the conductor, one grazed the skull of the baggage man, and one the side of the head of the express messenger. The inmates jumped out, when they were ordered to the rear under cover of half a dozen navy revolvers. Two of the robbers marched up and down the train, threatening to shoot any person who showed a head on the train, saying: "Get down out of sight, damn ye, or we'll shoot ye!"

The robbers then took about $2,000 from the express safe, cut open the mail sacks (but took no letters), and mounted each a horse and rode off across the prairie in a southerly direction, the whole being done in less than ten minutes.

They fortunately did not cut the telegraph wires, and Superintendent Royce at once hastened to the nearest station and telegraphed in all directions. Engines and parties of men were sent out from Council Bluffs, on the Burlington and other roads, to intercept the robbers in a southerly direction.

Their dress and voices indicated that they were regular bushwhackers, and they evidently intended to get the usual valuable express matter sent by this route on Mondays, but which went through on an extra train on Sunday night.

The robbers, during the day, stole a spike-bar and hammer from a hand-car house at the nearest station. They drew the spikes from one end of the rail and fastened a small cord to the end of the rail and secreted themselves several [illegible], and, as the train approached pulled the rail out of its place. The promptness of the engineer and the air-brakes saved the passengers from harm, and no one was injured. A track was at once laid around the wrecked cars, and the train resumed its trip, arriving here at 7:[illegible] this morning, bringing the dead body of the engineer, who resided here, and who leaves a wife and three children.

A thousand conjectures are current here in regard to the persons who robbed the train on the Rock Island railroad last night. The most probable one is that the robbery was committed by persons living near where the robbery took place. The valise in which they carried off the money from the express company's safe was found five miles south of the wrecked train to-day. Vigilant parties are scouring Southwestern Iowa, and it is confidently believed the robbers will be caught if they remain within the State.

The Altitude at which Men Can Live.

There has been a great deal of discussion as to the altitude at which human beings can exist, and Mr. Glaisher himself can tell us as much about it as anybody. In July, 1872, he and Mr. Coxwell ascended in a balloon to the enormous elevation of 37,000 feet. Previous to the start, Mr. Glaisher's pulse stood at seventy-six beats a minute; Coxwell's at seventy-four. At 17,000 feet, the pulse of the former was at eighty-four; that of the latter at 100. At 19,000 feet Glaisher's hands and lips were quite blue, but not his face. At 21,000 feet he heard his heart beating, and his breathing became oppressed; at 29,000 he became senseless; notwithstanding which the aeronaut, in the interest of science, went up another 8,000 feet, till he could no longer use his hands, and had to pull the strings of the valve with his teeth. Aeronauts who have to make no exertions have, of course, a great advantage over members of the Alpine Club, and those who trust their legs; even at 13,000 feet these climbers feel very uncomfortable, more so in the Alps, it seems, than elsewhere. At the monastery of St. Bernard, 8,117 feet high, the monks become asthmatic, and are compelled frequently to descend into the Valley of the Rhone for—anything but "a breath of fresh air;" and at the end of ten years' service are obliged to give up their high living, and come down to the usual level. At the same time, in South America, there are towns (such as Potosi) placed as high as the top of Mont Blanc, the inhabitants of which feel no inconvenience. The highest inhabited spot in the world is, however, the Buddhist cloister of Hanle, in Tibet, where twenty-one persons live at an altitude of 16,500 feet. The brothers Schlagintweit, when they explored the glaciers of the Ibi-Gamin in the same country, encamped at 21,000 feet, the highest altitude at which a European ever passed the night. Even at the top of Mont Blanc, Prof. Tyndall's guides found it very unpleasant to do this, though the Professor himself did not confess to feeling as bad as they. The highest mountain in the world is Mount Everest (Himalaya), 29,003 feet, and the condor has been seen "winging the blue air" 500 feet higher. The air, by the by, is not "blue," or else, as De Saussure pointed out, "the distant mountains, which are covered with snow, would appear blue also;" its apparent color being due to the reflection of light. What light can do, and does, is marvelous; and not the least is its power of attraction to humanity.—Chambers' Journal.

Emphasis.

Some years ago there was a student at the Theological Seminary at Andover, who had an excellent opinion of his own talents. On one occasion he asked the professor who taught elocution at the time, "What do I especially need to learn in in this department?" "You ought first to learn to read," said the professor. "Oh! I can read now," replied the student. The professor handed the young man a Testament, and pointing to the twenty-fifth verse of the twenty-fourth chapter of Luke's Gospel, he asked him to read that. The student read: "Then he said unto them, O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." "Ah," said the professor, "they were fools for believing the prophets, were they?" Of course that was not right, and so the young man tried again. "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." "The prophets, then, are sometimes liars?" asked the professor. "No. O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken." "According to this reading," the professor suggested, "the prophets were notorious liars." This was not a satisfactory conclusion, and so another trial was made. "O fools, and slow of heart to believe all the prophets have spoken." "I see now," said the professor; "the prophets wrote the truth, but they spoke lies." This last criticism discouraged the student, and he acknowledged that he did not know how to read. The difficulty lies in the fact that the words "slow of heart to believe" applies to the whole of the latter part of the sentence, and emphasis on any particular word entirely destroys the meaning.—Newburyport Herald.

The Buffalo City Directory, this year, will contain 39,220 names, an increase of 2,392.

Counting the Shingles on a Roof.

[illegible] do not understand. Mr. Coville is such a man. When he heard a carpenter say that there were so many shingles on the roof of his house because the roof contained so many square feet, Coville doubted the figures, and when the carpenter went away he determined to test the matter by going up on the roof and counting them. And he went up there He squeezed through the scuttle—Coville weighs 250—and then sat down on the roof and worked his way carefully and deliberately toward the gutter. When he got part way down, he heard a sound between him and the shingles, and became aware that there was an interference, some way, in his further locomotion. He tried to turn over and crawl back, but the obstruction held him. Then he tried to move along a little, in hopes that the trouble would prove but temporary, but an increased sound convinced him that either a nail or a sliver had hold of his cloth, and that if he would save any of it he must use caution. His folks were in the house, but he could not make them hear, and, besides, he didn't want to attract the attention of the neighbors. So he sat there until after dark and thought. It would have been an excellent opportunity to have counted the shingles, but he neglected to use it. His mind appeared to run into other channels. He sat there an hour after dark, seeing no one he could notify of his position. Then he saw two boys approach the gate, from the house, and reaching there, stop. It was light enough for him to see that one of the two was his son, and although he objected to having the other boy know of his misfortune, yet he had grown tired of holding on to the roof, and concluded he could bribe the strange boy into silence. With this arrangement mapped out, he took out his knife, and threw it so that it would strike near to the boys and attract their attention. It struck nearer than he anticipated. In fact it struck so close as to hit the strange boy on the head, and nearly brain him. As soon as he recovered his equilibrium, he turned on Coville's boy, who, he was confident, had attempted to kill him, and introduced some astonishment and bruises in his face. Then he threw him down, and kicked him in the side and banged him on the head, and drew him over into the gutter, and pounded his legs, and then hauled him back to the walk again and knocked his head against the gate. And all the while the elder Coville sat on the roof, and screamed for the police, but couldn't get away. And then Mrs. Coville dashed out with a broom, and contributed a few novel features to the affair at the gate, and and one of the boarders dashed out with a double-barrel gun, and hearing the cries from the roof, looked up there and espying a figure which was undoubtedly a burglar, drove a handful of shot into its legs. With a howl of agony Coville made a plunge to dodge the missiles, freed himself from the nail, lost his hold to the roof, and went sailing down the shingles with awful velocity, both legs spread out, his hair on end, and his hands making desperate but fruitless efforts to save himself. He tried to swear, but was so frightened that he lost his power of speech, and when he passed over the edge of the roof, with twenty feet of tin gutter hitched to him, the boarder gave him the contents of the other barrel, and then drove into the house to load up again. The unfortunate Coville struck into a cherry tree, and thence bounded to the ground, where he was recognized, picked up by the assembled neighbors, and carried into the house. A new doctor is making good day wages picking the shot out of his legs. The boarder has gone into the country to spend the summer, and the junior Coville, having sequestered a piece of brick in his handkerchief, is lying low for that other boy. He says that before the calm of another Sabbath rests on New England there will be another boy in Danbury who can't wear a cap.—Danbury News.

Sam Houston.

The romance of Senator Houston's life is hardly known to the present generation, yet it contained enough to furnish material for a half-score of novels. His escape from his mother, when, at the age of seventeen, he fell madly in love with the Indian maiden Tootooloo (Sun-flash), and, following her to her home, adopted the habits of the Cherokees, married her, and for three years, under the name of Oolooteka, hunted and fished and fought as a young Indian brave and acknowledged chief; his unexpected return to his family, grown during his absence, though still wanting six months of his legal majority, to that heroic stature which then, dressed in hunting-shirt and moccasins and blanket and head-gear, and even afterward, however clothed, made him a man of mark; his abandonment, sixteen years later in life, while Governor of Tennessee, when his early pranks had been forgotten in his successes as a lawyer and triumphs as a politician, of his young and accomplished bride the day after marriage; his resignation of office, and winding up of business, and settlement of affairs, with the utmost deliberation, against the most earnest entreaties of friends and jeers of foes; his securing by deed all his not inconsiderable property to his mother; his return, as an Indian chief, to the wilderness, reclaiming his native wife, and dwelling three years longer with his tribe; and his sudden departure, at last, for Texas, for the purpose of becoming a herdsman on the prairies—all show clearly enough the large element of savagism there was in his character. And yet he was superbly endowed by nature; was a great soldier, lawyer, and statesman; possessed an executive ability unsurpassed; whether as Governor or Senator, was the most popular of men; and in polished society was its ornament and delight.—Appletons' Journal.

Desmond, who killed his wife at South Boston, left a slip of paper in a bureau drawer in his house, on which was written: "I am sorry that I have got to do it. It is her own fault. God have mercy on us both. Let every man do as I have done and never mind the law, for the judge will fool, but God will not." On a fan found in the house he had written these words: "As sure as I write this, Eva, you will die. I am tired of this world."

Cholera and Its Causes—Not Air, but Water.

A correspondent of the Louisville (Ky.) Courier-Journal writes thus of the cholera and its causes:

Trace the cholera from the banks of the Ganges to the equator, and you find it has never prevailed as an epidemic in a granite country, but in calcareous or limestone districts, or where the water contains organic matter. I will mention a few facts which show clearly that cholera is developed by the character of the water used as a drink. In 1833 the beautiful and cleanly city of Lexington, situated in the blue-grass region—the most fertile portion of Kentucky—was first visited by Asiatic cholera. It swept through that city as a whirlwind. The Angel of Death seemed to hover over the doomed city for days and weeks, claiming all as its victims. But two families escaped the disease—Dr. Benjamin Dudley's and Dr. James Bush's. These were the only families in the city who used cistern water as a drink. Cisterns were then almost unknown. The quick perception of Dr. Dudley had detected the fact that persons using freestone or cistern water were exempted from calcareous affections, viz.: stone and calculi. It was to protect themselves and their families from these terrible sequels of limestone water that they had their cisterns constructed, and not against cholera, for none then knew of its coming. Now, if this be merely a coincidence, that but two families of a population of some 12,000 should escape, and those two only using cistern water, then it is a coincidence strongly resembling a fact on fixed principles. Again, there has never been epidemic cholera on a single plantation upon the Mississippi river, from Cairo to its mouth, where cistern water was exclusively used, and there is scarcely a plantation on that river, where cistern water was not used, that the disease has not existed as an epidemic. Again, every case of cholera which has occurred in Natchez, prior to and since 1855, could be traced directly to the use of water obtained from springs gushing out through cornelian pebbles, clear as crystal and cold as ice, at the base of the bluff or river bank. In 1855 the cisterns became exhausted by the drought, the citizens were forced to use river or spring water, and the cholera broke out in a most malignant form again. The town of Thibadouxville, situated on the Bayou Plaquemine, in Louisiana, is divided nearly equally by a small bayou. One portion of the town is occupied by Americans, who use exclusively cistern water; the other portion by a French population, who have no cisterns, but rely on wells for water to drink. In 1849 the French portion of the town was nearly destroyed by cholera, and yet not a dozen cases occurred on the American side of the bayou.

A Hungarian Race.

At the race meeting at Pesth, there is always given a prize for native horses ridden by peasant riders in their every-day costume. The event had already come off, but there was a repetition of it in the belief, on the part of the committee, that the spectacle would interest the Prince of Wales. About a dozen horsemen took part in this peculiar contest. They rode barebacked, and wore very wide white pantaloons, almost like petticoats, light slashed waistcoats of different colors, green, red, blue, or brown, buttoned over a voluminous white shirt, with arms nearly as wide as the trowsers. Their head-gear consisted of a conical fur cap, surmounted by bunches of leaves or horse-hair plumes. Some were barefooted, others wore boots, and a few—including one or two of the barefooted—had spurs. The horses these remarkable jockeys bestrode were for the most part animals with great development of bone. Some were undeniable screws, others great, raking, gaunt young ones, without collar or saddle-marks, and all without shoes. After a straggling parade in front of the stand, a start was made which would have been in the strictest sense a flying one, but several of the horses resolutely declined to go, and, instead, sidled into the throng. The riders kicked, tugged and thrashed; the stilts of the bystanders aided their efforts, and at length all succeeded in passing the stand. Some made strenuous efforts to bolt along the track by which they had entered the course. The race was run a cracker from end to end; that is, every man flogged as hard as he could all the way round the course. The winner, a silent party, on a big slack-jointed chestnut, passed the post before a large section of the field had come into the straight, and, after he had pocketed the pool and trotted away into obscurity, competitors came riding home singly, sending their horses along with as industrious a determination as if they had been working for a place at the lead. Indeed, waifs and strays came dropping in at intervals in the course of the afternoon, and some went so far as to assert that "the old man," when the race terminated, was then engaged in a struggle with his horse among the bushes at the other end of the course, and might be expected to pass the post in the course of the night or the following morning. Comical figures those quaint riders cut; it must be noted that not one, although all were riding barebacked, came to grief by being thrown.

A Strange Monstrosity.

Among the many curiosities presented to the physician by nature and disease, few reach the notice of the general public, while objections the family often prevent the physician in attendance from acquainting even the profession with subjects valuable to the student and to medical science. A case of the kind is that of a colored child in South Lancaster, Mass., two years of age, whose head has been gradually enlarging since its birth, until it now measures twenty-two inches from ear to ear over the top of the head, some twenty-eight inches around the head at the forehead, and weighs, it is believed, twenty pounds. In its present condition the body is wasted to the merest skeleton, much deformed, and partly paralyzed; but the features of the face are well preserved and not uncomely. To those interested in medical science this case presents food for investigation which should be immediately availed of, as its life cannot last long. Death has been daily expected for a year past.—Boston Transcript.

DEADLY SNAKES AND HOGS.

Why Venomous Reptiles do not Flourish Here—The American Pioneer's Best Friend—A Fight Between a Sow and a Rattlesnake.

A recent editorial published on the subject of the terrible mortality from snake bites in India, disclosed some startling facts, the most surprising of which is the great number of persons who perish annually in British India from bites by these reptiles, one authority averring that "in some years as many as twenty thousand people are killed by snakes in Hindoostan alone."

From what we read of India, it would seem that the most densely populated parts of that country are the most infected with poisonous reptiles. Exactly the reverse of this is the case in America, so far as our own country extends, for here the more numerous the population, the fewer snakes of the fatal kind, though we have probably a greater variety of deadly serpents than exists in any other quarter of the globe. Among these may be enumerated the several species of moccasin, the copperhead, and that purely American reptile, the rattlesnake, which M. Buffon, in his article on "Le Serpent a Sonette," says inhabits nearly all the countries of the New World. Besides these and the other varieties may be noticed the cotton mouth of the marshes of the Lower Mississippi, a dark, short, muscular viper, with the inside of its mouth perfectly white, which lurks in swampy places, for whose bite no antidote is known, but is quickly followed with certain death.

There are two ways of accounting for the superabundance of snakes in India. One is by the superstitious veneration of the Hindoos for the most deadly serpents, which leaves them unmolested, and enables them to multiply without limit.

The other and more convincing reason for the vast number of snakes in India is the scarcity of hogs in a country where the use of swine flesh is prohibited as an article of food. The Hindoo despises the hog while he patronizes the snake, and gets rewarded for his preference by his race being stung to death at the rate of twenty thousand annually.

The Anglo-Saxon American differs from the effete East Indian in this as in most other respects. He kills the snake and fosters the hog, who is decidedly the most inveterate snake killer of the two. When the Anglo-American undertakes the settlement of a new country he wants three things above all others: an axe, a rifle, and a hog. If he chances to go into the wilderness alone, however, the hog soon follows as an inevitable consequence. Just in proportion as the hog multiplies, and increases in a newly-settled country, in the same ratio do serpents and poisonous reptiles disappear. It is not meant to be implied that any such motive as snake-killing enters into the calculations of the frontiersman in raising hogs. In general, he does not give the snakes that infest his neighborhood a thought. He kills them when they come in his way, and forgets them. The hog does the most of that kind of work. He is a very industrious forager, always rooting around in quest of something to eat. In his incessant search for provender he oftimes disturbs the snake in his lair, who as a rule, would prefer being left alone; but the hog won't let him alone, but snaps him between his teeth, and devours him.

There are also active enemies of the snake to be found among the things that are feræ naturæ, such as the deer, the elk, etc., which kill by crushing him beneath their sharp hoofs. But these animals only destroy the snake when he comes in their way. The hog goes at him with the two-fold incentive of destroying an enemy and devouring him. The result is, the snakes give up the contest after a while and glide off to some rocky fastness or impenetrable fen.

The hog is nearly impervious to the bite of the most deadly serpent. Like the hero of the Greek fable he has but one assailable spot, which lies, not in his heel, but in his neck. If the snake chances to strike him on the main artery, where it passes through the neck near the skin, the hog dies; if he is struck on any other part of his body the wound amounts to no more than the prick of a pin would, the virus taking no effect whatever. The quadruped seems to be aware of this one danger, and guards against it with the skill of a veteran warrior.

The writer once witnessed a combat between a sow and a rattlesnake of the largest kind, his attention being attracted to the scene by the angry screams of the hog. The snake lay in a coil beneath a spreading live oak. The broad, combative head was raised rigidly about six inches over his coiled body, his eyes, bright as diamonds, flashing fury, and his forked tongue darting defiance at his enemy. Every muscle, now in tension, could be traced beneath his skin, while his tail, slightly erected and tremulous with nervous energy, gave forth from the tapering rattle at its extremity that peculiar, sharp, ringing sound a person never forgets who has heard it once. The sow, with bristles erect and tusks bare, circled round the snake, gnashing her teeth, grunting and snarling at him with rage. She showed game, but nothing like the nerve of her sinewy antagonist. The sow made divers demonstrations or feints, to which the snake responded by striking from half coil, but each time instantly recovering himself. At length, the sow coming within reach, the snake made a desperate spring of his entire length, fastening his fangs in her fore leg as she sprang away from him. The sow gave an agonized squeal, but quickly disengaged herself, and before the snake could recover his coil, her foot was on his neck, and another instant she had snapped off his head.

Wm. L. Norvell.

A Lynn, Mass., lady sold rags to a Salem buyer. A week afterward she called at his establishment and desired to examine what she had sold. After searching the loft diligently she found her $1,600 in currency, and savings bank book calling for $2,400. Moral: Never hide your valuables in rag-bags.

A Bit of Romance.

Mr. R. M. Boatwright, of St. Louis, has lately received intelligence that his brother Alexander, whom he supposed to have been killed twenty-six years ago, during the Mexican war, is alive and well, he being a resident of Goliad county, Texas. The story is thus told by the St. Louis Democrat:

"In 1846, Mr. Boatwright, while on a visit to Southern Illinois, where he formerly resided, took the war fever and joined Capt. Coffee's company of volunteer infantry bound for the seat of war in Mexico. At the battle of Vera Cruz he was severely wounded in the shoulder, and not being able to be removed, was placed in the house of a Mexican lady, near the battle-field. As he did not rejoin his company, and was not heard of at the close of the war, he was placed on the list of the dead, and his land warrant issued to his father, who erected a monument to his memory in the family burying-ground, in Franklin county. Boatwright, however, did not die. He was tenderly nursed by a dark-eyed senorita, a daughter of the lady at whose house he was left, and when, after many months of suffering, he was restored to health and his wound healed, he found himself a captive to the charms of his beautiful nurse, and he married her and settled in Vera Cruz. His letters to his relatives having miscarried, and some one informing him that his family had removed from Franklin county, he ceased writing to them. In 1849 he went to California, and afterward settled in Texas. Several years after the close of the war, the family in Franklin county heard rumors that Alexander was still living, and agents were sent to California and to Mexico, but failed to learn any tidings of him, and he was given up for lost. A short time ago Mr. R. Boatwright happened to see a letter written by his brother to an old friend in Franklin county, and, recognizing the name, was rejoiced to find that the brother who was mourned as dead for twenty-six years was still living."

Ballooning During the Siege of Paris.

Balloons were put to practical use during the time Paris was besieged by the Prussians. The enemy was enabled to close all avenues of escape and communication except those which led through heaven's free air. The Balloon Monte afforded almost daily means of sending letters and dispatches from the beleaguered city. There were sent up in all, from September 23, 1870, to the time of the capitulation, sixty-two balloons, and there remained unused, at the end of January, 1871, five balloons. The total number sent out by the post-office was fifty-four, and they carried 1,500,000 letters, representing a total weight of nearly ten tons. For a time the ascents were made in the daytime, but Prussian bullets flew too thick about the balloons—for it was not always convenient to send the aerial craft beyond their reach before the suburbs of the city were reached—and on and after November 21 all voyages began at night. As no balloon could be used a second time, the manufacture of the areostats and the training of sailors to accompany them (for of experienced aeronauts there were few) became an important branch of business.

September 30, a paper balloon was sent up with dispatches only, but in all other cases exceptone, when the balloon broke away while in process of inflation, passengers were carried, as many as six going on one occasion. Two of the balloons fell into the sea, six landed in Belgium, one far away in Norway, one in Nassau, one in Munich, and in several cases descents were made within the enemy's lines onthe soil of France.

Going Home From the Circus.

As Mr. William Stockdale was returning home from visiting the circus at Peterboro', he and the young lady who accompanied him met, says the Bobcaygeon (Canada) Independent, with a rather singular accident. He was driving in a one-horse buggy, and was going at a good smart pace, when, from some unexplained cause, he did not see a four-year-old steer that was lying in the road, and before he was aware of it, drove over the animal. The steer rose up suddenly with the buggy on his back, and for a few yards horse, buggy, lovers, and steer went together harmoniously at full trot, but the steer, diverging, destroyed the equilibrium, and buggy, steer, young lady, horse, and William Stockdale retired into the ditch. Happily no bones were broken, and, though some bruises were received, some fright occasioned, and a parasol injured beyond all possibility of cure, the party reached the Town Hall and were enabled to continue their journey during the afternoon.

How it Happens Sometimes.

A singular, but not unprecedented, cause of fire in a dwelling-house in Connecticut is thus referred to by a correspondent of the Hartford Times: "The residence of Hon. Addison O. Mills, of Canton, narrowly escaped destruction by fire on the afternoon of Sunday, June 29, from the following curious circumstances: Several new milk-pans were lying on a bench on the southwest side of the kitchen, and the reflection from the sun actually caused the ceiling to take fire about five or six feet above them. The fire burned thence up to the eaves of the building, through the boards, and deeply charred a post of the house back of the boards, when it was discovered and extinguished. The next day, about the same time, the reflection was again noticed by the bright light, and the pans were removed before the boards had ignited again. The boards were painted red, which may account for the ignition."

Fire-Proof Floors.—A successful experiment with a new fire-proof floor was made in Boston last week, the principle being to make the floors and ceilings water-proof, leaving a space between each for water to be thrown in when occasion requires. A small, square brick structure having been raised, with a pine plank floor and ceiling, and an arched opening at each side, two cords of wood were burned without injuring floor or ceiling. While the test was in progress, the top of the plank ceiling did not appear to be heated, although a hot fire was raging beneath.

PUBLIC LANDS GIVEN AWAY.

The Entire Domain of the United States Absorbed by Corporations.

[From the United States Economist.]

The element of viciousness in the policy of dispersion, and the land grant and subsidy system which has been employed to effect it, is that unless reversed it must soon have a repelling effect upon immigration—as soon as the fact is virtually known, which we now publish for the first time, that the public lands are virtually absorbed already—and eventually put an end to it altogether. Yes, the public lands are absorbed already. Despite the reports of the Commissioner of the Land Office, and the trans-continental railways, who evidently influence him to conceal the truth, despite the marked absence of important data from his report, and the continued trumpeting of the subsidized railways about the boundless extent of our public lands, the truth is that substantially we have no public lands left; and the following facts, gleaned partly from the meager reports of the Land Office, and partly from other sources, mostly official, but quite disconnected until brought together here, will bear out this rather startling conclusion:

The entire domain of the United States, exclusive of Alaska, which is an ice-bound and sterile region, utterly unfit for cultivation, consists of thirty-seven States and ten Territories, aggregating 2,973,200 English square miles, or 1,902,854,400 English square acres; and this domain is disposed of as follows:

		Square Acres.

Filters and Cool Water.

In view of the fact that the water we drink is not unlikely to be crowded with dangerous germs, it seems the part of wisdom to adopt the simple precaution suggested in our heading. A portable filter may be made of common stoneware or earthen jar. The bottom is filled with stones as large as a goose-egg, or is covered with a perforated slate slab, leaving a space to hold a supply of filtered water. A faucet is fitted into a hole bored through the side of the jar, as near the bottom as may be. On the slab or stone is placed a layer of coarse gravel, cleanly washed; over that a layer of clean washed sand; then a layer of powdered charcoal, also well washed; still another layer of sand, and then one of coarse gravel, both washed perfectly clean. The remainder of the space is for water. A cover, or a wet cloth, placed over the top, excludes dust. If a porous jar is used, the evaporation from the outside during hot weather will keep the contents almost ice cold, particularly if it is kept in a current of air. The same filtering arrangement may be applied to a cistern. At the upper corner is the chamber into which the pipe discharges. The layers of material are gravel, sand and charcoal. As the filter will need to be taken out occasionally to wash the contents, it is well to make the chamber quite distinct, so that access may be had to it at any time without disturbing the cistern or its contents.

Did You Ever?

Mentioning a particular rodent, the veracious Grass Valley (Cal.) Union says: The rat of which we speak has his enjoyment in the North Star Mine. The other day a miner down in one of the levels lit a short clay pipe in order to take a whiff or two of smoke. He gave a couple of puffs and laid the pipe down on a piece of rock to attend to his work. He in a few moments looked for his pipe for the purpose of taking another whiff. The pipe was gone. He looked a little further and beheld a rat, who was old and gray with age and wisdom, sitting up on his haunches with the pipe held in his mouth. The miner went to get his pipe, but the rat retreated a few steps and again sat up and began to smoke. The miner was surprised as well as delighted, and merely remarked, "Go ahead, old fellow, and have your smoke out." The rat did have his smoke out, and then, putting the pipe down, gave a little squeak of evident satisfaction and betook himself in a dignified way to the darker recesses of the mine.

Yankee Machinery at Vienna—A Creditable Showing, After All.

The Neue Freie Presse, of June 25, gives some tables in its exhibition supplement, showing the comparative representation of the various countries in the machine department, group 13, from which it appears that America makes a very respectable showing, notwithstanding all that has been said to the contrary.

In section I. (motors) there are exhibited by Russia 14 machines, Hungary 7, Austria 98, Germany 210, France 55, Switzerland 34, England 20, America 5, Belgium 6, Italy 2, Sweden and Norway 8, Denmark 1, Netherlands 7; total 467.

In section II. (metals), the following is the showing: Russia 6, Hungary 3, Austria 61, Germany 180, France 80, Switzerland 17, England 39, America 34, Belgium 21, Italy 12; total 403 objects.

Of machines for wood work: Russia exhibits 1, Hungary 3, Austria 83, Germany 50, France 26, England 60, America 24, Sweden and Norway 81; total 278.

Of machines for textile fabrics: Austria has 293, Germany 300, France 54, Switzerland 65, England 65, America 3, Belgium 46; total 828.

Of miscellaneous machines, Yankee ingenuity makes a splendid exhibit, showing a total of 450. England has 266, Austria 518, Germany 330, France 83, Switzerland 38, Belgium 97, Italy 8, Denmark 40, Neitherlands 11; total 1,923.

In section III. (transportation), Russia exhibits 58 objects, Hungary 75, Austria 152, Germany 60, France, 18, Switzerland 4, England 22, America 22, Belgium 120, Italy 3, Sweden and Norway 3, Denmark 1, the Netherlands 1; total 539.

In section IV. (road work), Russia exhibits 23 objects, Hungary 43, Austria 92, France 10, Switzerland 6, England 24, America 1, Denmark 4, Germany 52, Sweden and Norway 1; total 256.

The grand total of 4,964 objects in the machine department is divided as follows: Russia 120, Hugary 198, Austria 1,297, Germany 1,182, France 276, Switzerland 164, England 496, America 539, Belgium 289, Netherlands 19, Denmark 46, Italy 25, Sweden and Norway 43.

This enumeration is a great surprise to many, and I doubt whether any of the American exhibitors expected they would stand third in the list of objects exhibited.—Vienna Cor. Boston Globe.

Slavery in Peru.

The Berlin Volkszeitung gives a most revolting picture of the life dragged out by slaves in Peru who are owned by Germans now living in Germany. One of these wretches has power over 1,100 coolies, who, under cover of the revolvers and the stripes of the whips of thirty-six overseers, work from early morning till late at night, year in and year out, not even having a respite on Sunday. Their food is two pounds of rice each day, and nothing else. Many of them are loaded with chains, and at night all sleep in a stall surrounded by bull-dogs and most closely watched. In this manner—which recalls the outrageous conduct of Sonnenkamp in Auerbach's "Villa on the Rhine"—their tyrant has amassed a fortune of $13,000,000. In one year another German, who doubtless shouts with the loudest when "Freiheit und Licht" are the watchword, burned the corpses of thirty-six of these unfortunates merely to strike terror into the survivors, whose faith assures them that there is no resurrection for those whose bodies are thus disposed of.

Finances of the Church of England.

A balance sheet of the revenues and expenditures of the Church of England, recently issued, gives some interesting facts relative to its financial operations. The membership of the Church is about 12,000,000. The average annual receipts are over $50,000,000, derived from the following sources: Endowments, $21,000,000; State aid, $2,500,000; parochial collections, $16,000,000, and miscellaneous contributions and receipts, $10,500,000. This sum is expended as follows: Maintenance of the clergy, $20,500,000; education of the poor, $15,000,000; church institutions, foreign missions, church buildings, etc., $14,500,000. Under the head of clerical maintenance, the 2 Archbishops, 26 Bishops, and 70 Arch-deacons received $692,780. There are 30 deans, 127 canons, 600 singers, and others, who cost $1,080,025. In addition to these there are 13,041 rectors and vicars, and 5,703 curates, whose services amount to $15,730,255, or an average salary of $840 apiece.

Summer Blankets for Horses.

Blanketing horses in summer has become an acknowledged necessity, light blankets are now an important tion of the harness-maker's stock. materials used for these are brown bleached linen, scrims, flannel and l cotton duck. Muslin sheets are used, but these, as well as those m of duck, are not popular. Linen flannel are the favorite goods; they more, but are durable and look w twilled braid is used for binding joining, and some of the finer quali have monograms or the name of the horse worked on with very narrow braid of the same shade as the binding. Scrims is used more as a protection against flies than for any other purpose, and being very light and loosely woven, requires to be well bound and secured at the seams; a strip of leather should be stitched on under the braid, either on the back of the scrims or between it and the braid; the edge of the scrims must be turned in so that the outer row of stitches will pass through two thicknesses; if this is not done it will ravel, and the binding come off.—Carriage and Harness Journal.

The precautions taken in Boston against fires are numberless, and it is improbable that the city will ever again be visited by a great conflagration. The following notice, painted in heavy black letters, on a white ground, is being put in a conspicuous position on all unsafe buildings: "This building will be dangerous in case of fire. Placed here by order of David Chamberlain, Inspector of Buildings." Such a badge of shame will doubtless prove an effective remedy.

A NEW POWER.

An Invention for Which Wonderful Things are Claimed—A Great Fuel Saver.

Mr. William Wells, of Salem, has just perfected an apparatus for running stationary or locomotive engines by vapor power, which, if it fulfills all that is expected of it, will entirely revolutionize the method of running engines of every description. The new apparatus was set up a few days ago, and on Saturday afternoon it was put in practical operation, for the first time, in the presence of several gentlemen well versed in machinery and the application of power. The working of the engine was entirely satisfactory, and all present expressed themselves as highly pleased with the success of the invention, which had been considered by all but the designer as an experiment.

The whole apparatus is very simple in construction, and the new power can be applied to any engine. The whole peculiarity in construction is in the boiler; the engine being precisely like any other, and the vapor being conveyed to the cylinder of the engine just the same as steam. The boiler is an upright one, and is really a double boiler; that is, it has two heads at each end, one a few inches from the other. The two chambers thus formed, one at each end of the boiler, are filled with water, and are connected by tubes, which are for the circulation of the water between the two chambers. The second or inner boiler, that between the two inner heads, is filled with a preparation of bisulphide of carbon, the vapor from which is the motive power and takes the place of steam. Beneath the boiler is a small fire-box, from which flues run up through the two boilers to the smoke pipe. These flues pass inside of the tubes already mentioned, and the fire in passing through heats the chemicals. By this arrangement it will be seen that the biqulphide in the inner boiler receives the requisite amount of heat without coming in direct contact with the fire flues, as the water, as has been explained, is kept in circulation through the tubes. Mr. Wells claims that with a comparatively small fire a great amount of power can be obtained, and it has been practically shown that, with the water at a temperature of 212 degrees Fahrenheit, or the boiling point, a pressure of sixty-five pounds to the square inch is obtained on the vapor boiler, and of course if a greater heat is applied to the water, the vapor pressure will increase proportionately. It should be mentioned that the chemical preparation is used over many times, as the vapor, after passing through the cylinder of the engine, passes into a condenser, and is then returned to the boiler to be used again. The waste of chemical material is said to be very small. It is estimated that at least two-thirds of the amount of fuel can be saved by the use of this invention, but the exact amount can be better determined after further experiment. Mr. Wells has been at work eight years in perfecting this apparatus, and judging from the test of Saturday, his labor and pains have not been thrown away.—Boston Globe, July 14.

A Horrible Death.

One of the saddest cases of death, under terrible circumstances, we have lately encountered was brought to our notice yesterday evening. Mr. R. P. Mink, of Kalamazoo, Mich., road-master on the Grand Rapids and Indiana railway, died under very remarkable circumstances. Last Monday, while giving some directions to the groom in attendance on the horses, he suddenly dropped, and, as was supposed, expired. The weather being warm, the body was packed in ice and brought down to this city en route for Valparaiso, Ind., for interment. Arriving at the destination, where full preparations had been made for the funeral, the friends and relatives were thunderstruck to find evident signs of life about the body. It perspired freely. The funeral was of course delayed, and yesterday afternoon blood flowed freely. Restoratives were applied, but without effect, and R. P. Mink is now a dead man; but it is past question that he was consigned to his icy tomb while life was still abundant, as the fact of his having so well withstood the awful confinement attests.

A sad moral connects itself with the story. It recalls again the great danger of a burial before the fullest tests have been applied to ascertain the certainty of death.—Fort Wayne (Ind.) Gazette.

A Colored Verdict.

In one of the towns of Mississippi two colored men were arrested on the charge of burglary. The jury before whom they were tried were all colored. After the case was tried they retired and made up a verdict, which was announced to the court. On being called, the Judge asked for the verdict which the foreman delivered as follows: "Dis jury find dat one of de 'cused busted in de sto', and stole dat bacon, and dat de odder didn't do nuffin." "Which one do you find guilty?" asked the Judge. "Dat's de question, boss," returned the foreman; "dat's jest what we can't find out, and we recommends dat de honorable coat jest have anoder trial and find out which ob dem two niggers steal dat bacon."

Fault-Finders.

The world is full of chronic fault-finders. Nothing can please them. They take delight in growling and grumbling over everything they meet. If anything is good, they complain because it is not better. Humanity has no bright side to these grumblers. It looks black, dreary, hopeless to them, from whatever point of view they examine it. They overlook the virtues of an individual, and hold up a single fault to judge his character from. They denounce a party as corrupt because a few rascals disgrace themselves by unworthy acts. The church is false because a few hypocrites find shelter within it. The world is on the high road to destruction, and everything indicates the depravity of man. We do not envy the happiness of these growlers. Their unhappy frame of mind is about the only pleasure they enjoy. It may sound paradoxical, but the social misery they create is to them a source of enjoyment. A single hopeful heart is worth a regiment of these fault-finders. Humanity has its bright side—beautiful and attractive to those who seek it. The world is alive with public and private virtue, and we should be ready at all times to foster and encourage this element of social comfort and public happiness.

Wealth of Peru.

Peru, South America, is a good country for people to move to who dislike to pay taxes. The Government owns and manages the sale of the guano on all the islands along the coast. No mines of precious metal in the world approach these guano deposits in value. The sales of guano during the year 1872 amounted to $25,000,000, and as the population of the country is only 2,000,000, the sum derived from this substance was over $12 to each person, or about $5 per month to each male adult. This amount of money is amply sufficient to carry on the Government, and to enable railroads to be built at public expense. It is thought by judicious management so many lines of railroads may be constructed before the supply of guano is exhausted, that this property will pay the public expenses for all time.

The Auburn Courier

A new German paper to be called the Indiana Courier is to be published at South Bend, with J. B. Stoll of the Ligonier Banner as editor.

The Credit Mobelier Salary Grab Hippdrome is the new name which the Republican party will soon adopt. It is quite in order, and what is more, very appropriate. May its shadow never vote itself back pay.

Henry Ward Beecher has no idea of retaining the services of the Beast to defend against the Bowen-Claflin scandal. Hear the prophetic pulpit orator; "If Massachusetts does not spue Gen Butler out of her mouth, she will please in future, to take a seat very far back in our Court of honor."

We take pleasure in stating that the late Congress "did a good thing" by passing an act to prevent cruelty to animals, to take effect October first. From and after that date all railroad companies are prohibited from keeping animals in continuous confinement for more than twenty-eight hours, and properly feeding and watering. If they are supplied on the train with food and water this provision does not apply. A fine not exceeding $500 is affixed for violation of the law.

Senator Morton is driving through the Far West, limbering up his joints and looking at the territory which Congress has squandered on the railroad thieves. He turned up in Leavenworth, Kansas, night before last, and was serenaded. He spoke. He didn't say anything of importanne except tha he remarked that all questions to divide the country and aray one section against the other had been settled, and this wouldn't be an important observation if it were not for the fact that Morton is said to be a candidate for the Presidency. The rumor is confirmed. He is actually a candidate, and and he wants Democratic support. It is delightful to know that Morton has liberalized.

The Sandusky Register, a good Republican paper, is so dissosed to talk out against the wicked men of its party. Something will have to be done with the Register. Hear it;

"The Republican members of Congress could have voted down the increase of Salary bill; a Republican President could have vetoed the bill after it had been passed by a corrupt Congress, an a Republican Administration could have kept its hands off the Louisiana disgrace and left the responsibility of dealing with the corrupt factions of New Orleans with the people of that State.

At a meeting of the patrons of husbandry, held at Clifton, Illinois, a few days ago, in adition to the strong verbal expressions of opposition to the prinbiples and policy of the Republicad party and its leaders, the following was made of record.

Resolved, That we believe a thief should be called a thief, without regard to social or political standing; and we bharacterize the recent salary grab by our Congress and President as no better than a steal.

And at another meeting of the Grangers held at Carroll county, Illinois, the following inscriptions were on the banners.

We want and must have honest men to fill public postions.

Salary grabbers hunt your holes.

Salary of our Congressmen, one hundred bushels of corn a day. Poor fellow.

AUBURN—Last week we called for an hour at the county seat of DeKalb county, and was surprised at the improvement going on. The Eel River railroad is pushing the work of grading between there and Butler, and Hank Altenburg is putting in the bridging. Frank Jones has the contract for the passenger depot, and Mr. Hollister for a new Grain House. The Odd Fellow's Hall, a fine building, is nearly completed and is an ornament to the town. The town is growing fast and the improvements are of a permanent character. The town has thrown off its old slothful appearance and everything and everybody looks cheerful and happy. When Mays of the COURIER gets home we are going down to stay all day. —Angola Republican.

Come ahead Mac, we have some mighty fine soda water here, and if that is too thin we have a choice article of spruce beer always on hand.

The Duluth Tribune says: "Col. Hull of the Clark House remarked of the late editorial excursionists, that they were as a body, the most gentlemany set of editors that ever visited the house.

B. P. & C. R. R.—The Fostoria Review says: "Iron for this road is on the way and would have been received at this place last Wednesday had it not been for the delay of the work in consequence of the heavy rains. The iron was stopped on the way to wait the bridging and grading. Should the weather prove favorable, track laying will commence by the first of August."

Temperance Meeting at Corruna.

In accordance with previous announcement the citizens of Corunna and vicinity assembled on Monday, evening July 21st. 1873 at the M. E. church, and were called to order by Rev. M. H. Mott, who, in a short address stated the object of the meeting, and then called on Rev. Henry Keller to lead in prayer, after which on motions which were sustained and carried Moses Willis was chosen chairman and and F. G. Fried secretary. While the committee on resolutions (which had been previonly selected) were preparing to report Rev. Mr. Rice addressed the meeting, and was followed by Rev. H. Keller. The committee on Resolutions presented the following Preamble and Resolutions.

Whereas, Intemperance is the most pernicious vice in our country and is yearly leading hundreds of our young men to ruin and infamy.

Whereas, It is the duty of every good citizen both to obey and aid in enforcement of the laws of our land and thus promote the good of the community and

Whereas, Regardless of the law and without proper license, intoxicating liquors have been recently sold or given away by a certain person or persons in our villiage the result of which has proved fatal at least in one instance, and society is becoming corrupted in consequence and our sons and brothers are liable to become drunkards through the influence of tiplers and whiskey venders, therefore

Resolved, That we citizens of Corunna and vicinity will do all in our power to aid in the strict enforcement of the law prohibiting and restricting the sale of liquors and do cordialy invite every friend of temperance to aid us in so doing.

Resolved, That a committee be appointed at this meeting consisting of three whose duty it shall be to visit all persons accused of selling or giving away intoxicating liquor and request them to quit the nefarious business at once and dispose of the stock on hand and inform them that in case they do not, the law will be put in force against them.

Resolvec, That in order more fully to carry out our purpose we form ourselve into a temperance society, whose business shall be transacted publicly, and that a committee be now appointed to draft a constitution and by-laws for the government of the meeting, and make all other necessary arrangememts for the first meeting.

Resolved, That we will not knowingly patronize or support, any man either in any kind of business or at the polls who is engaged in the liquor traffic.

On motion the preamble resolutions were received and by a rising vote each one seperately adopted. In compliance with the 2nd resolution a committee was chosen to carry out the purpose and import of said resolutions, consisting of the following gentlemen. Rev. M. H. Mott Amos Britton and John Buchanan. Next a committee was appointed in accordance with the 3d. resolution, to draft a constitution and by-laws, composed of Rev. Mr. Rice L. D. Britton and Levi Harding, to report at the next meeting. Moved and sustained that the proceedings of this meeting be furnished by the secretary to the editors of the two county papers for publication. Moved and carried that the meeting be on Monday, regular meetings to be monthly, but the next meeting to be in two weeks from to night.

The Auburn Courier

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Read Dr. W. L. Andrews' "personal."

Hereafter the Courier will not be issued until Thursday morning.

Job Work of every style and variety promptly executed at this office. Send in your orders.

One case of drunkenness last Monday night. A midnight court and the prisoners defense were the main features.

Mr. Isaac Cool and others will erect another store room on the west side of Snyder's building. Work to commence next month.

Dr. D. H. Sebring, lately of Sedan, this county has located in our midst, where he will practice his profession.

Dr. Martin has gone after the balance of his goods and will be prepared to fill any prescription in a few days.

The reason that the editor of the Press could not recognize that dead "corpus" at Benton, was because the skull was at Wolf Lake. A very good reason, too.

A Mrs. Heist, living near Corunna, has been adjudged insane, and the Clerk has made application at the State Insane Asylum for treatment of the case.

We are glad to see the rapid progress made at last upon the Snyder and Easly block. From an old eye sore it is rising up in the shape of a handsome edifice that will be creditable to the place.

Gus Leas has been making it warm again for horse theives. He caught one down in Van Wert County, O., and took him to Marshall, Mich. Between the two States these rogues have a poor chance

The ad interim editor of the COURIER would almost do for a successor to the illustrated Higley.—Press.

We feel satisfied he would quite do for a successor to the senior editor of the Press.

Two of our beligerent citizens collided last Tuesday, when one drew a monkey-wrench and the other "shied" a tumbler and nobody was hurt. A revolver came to the rescue, got between them when hostilities ceased.

We suggest that the editor of the Press be allowed to come here and arrange the matter of Depots at the junction, just so the little fellow may be pleased once.—Perhaps its too late now since work has commenced on the elevator and passenger depot, at the foot of Main street for the Eel River road.

We have received a handsome catalogue from the Indiana Conservatory of Music. We notice among the students Miss Lottie Ford, of this place and, Mrs. O. W. Wisel, and C. F. Ball, of Waterloo. This institution is going right ahead, and is meeting with great success.

The Trustees have engaged Prof. Huffman of N. W. Ohio, Normal School as Superintendent, together with a number of first-class subordinate teachers and intend our school shall be second to none. A special effort will be made to accommodate foreign students and those intending to teach. Tuition moderate. Fall term begins Sept. 1st.

Butler Graded School.

We are authorized to say that the School building at Butler has been recently renovated and refitted, and every arrangement made for a successful school during another year. Prof McIntosh, of this place, has been engaged and able assistants secured, and there is no doubt they will have every facility for the rapid and thorough advancement of those who attend. We would advise those who have children to educate to bear this in mind.

We are glad that the crops in this county are turning out very fair. We like to see the farmer well repaid for their labor, because the success of all other business depends on their success to a great extent, especially so with the printing business. Will those who are back a little on their subscription remember this, and call soon, and make us happy in the payment thereof. We are paying out a large amount of cash every week to furnish you with a good paper, and we must have what is due us. Don't forget to call early.

Depot Buildings.

It gives us pleasure to announce this week that contracts have been let for a a magnificent elevator for the Eel River road, to be located south of town, at the foot of Main street. The building will be 30x50, 47 feet high, and to cost $2200.—Mr. Hellopeter has the contract, which assures us that the job will be a good one. The contract for a handsome passenger house has also been let, Mr. Altenburg doing the work. This is to be 22x50 and both buildings are destined to be the best on the line. Now, by St. Paul, the work goes bravely on. If Baxter, of the Press don't hurry up, he will hardly have a chance to build that union depot. However he should be allowed to talk about it, as he was about the road being built to Butler. Because it was talked of years ago it was never to be accomplished is the line of argument.

We regret to learn that our townsman, Dr. Jared Spencer, has left our place, he having recently located at Tiffin, Ohio.—The Doctor is one of those live, thorough going fellows that are appreciable in every community, and it will require a good man to fill his place. Modest and unassuming, he is inclined to be a little slow in taking the position his merits entitled him to in his profession, but in this age of brass this ought to be regarded as a good fault. We wish him abundant success in his new field of labor.

Burned to Death.

Last Friday afternoon, a most frightful accident occured at the residence of Mr. D. Culver, of this place. A young girl about 12 years old, named D. Fegler, was sent by Mrs. Culver to build up the fire in the stove with which to iron. She proceeded to the kitchen, to do so, and in a short time an explosion was heard and when Mrs. C. got there with a neighbor, the girl was discovered to be in flames.—She rushed through the house and out into the garden when several persons came to her assistance, but not until it was too late, for she died in the evening apparently without much pain. From the appearance of the kitchen it was concluded that she had taken a can filled with kerosene to start the fire, when it exploded with the above result. Yet there are people thoughtless enough to do the same thing over again after this terrible warning.

4 paws at Waterloo, next week.

The adjourned session of the Circuit Court assembles next week.

W. K. Davis, Esq., of Wabash, brother to J. L. is visiting our town.

Mr. Quirk, Collins, Mansfield and Woodward are here rushing the work on the Eel River road.

A private concert was given the other evening at the residence of Dr. Cowan. Lord Mansfield sang "My Michigan" and all joined in the chorus of the "Little Brown Jug." A splendid colation was spread and all enjoyed themselves.

Our new railroads are alive with workmen, and there is an immense amount of work being done.—The Eel River already takes the shape of a handsome road, while Mr. Haviland, of the Baltimore line is putting up a fine grade. It makes business lively and everybody is happy. Alderman Mansfield bets that he will have the track down to Butler by the first of October.

The item published in the COURIER during our our absence, relative to our enterprising neighbor, Corunna, would not have appeared had we been here. We trust our friends up there will look over the matter, as we can assure them of our friendly interest in their welfare. We learn two new dry goods stores are being established at Corunna, and that the town is looking up. There is no reason why this place should not command considerable trade located as it is in the most fertile parts of our county.

Hub and Spoke Factory.

Another manufacturing interest is being added to the the county seat. A stock company has been formed with a cash capital $15,000 to establish and run a hub and spoke factory, and work has commenced on the buildings, the largest one to be 160 feet long by 40 wide. We believe our citizens are waking up to their interests, and are determined to build up a town not to be surpassed in Northern Indiana. Everything looks encouraging at present, and if we keep on improving at the rate of the last year or so, we will soon realize this result.

Messrs. Casebear and Miller, of Hicksville, with a number of our citizens compose this company, and they expect to be in running order by the 1st of October.

Adam Forepaugh is now in the State with 1,500 lions, tigers, cougors, Leopards, Panthers, Hyenas, Bears, Wolves, Monkeys, Kangaroos, &c., &c., together with 1,300 Birds, 10,000 Curiosities, and a Great Circus, all under Five Tents.

The mammoth establishment of Adam Forepaugh consisting of two Museums, two Menageries, Performing Animals Shows and Equestrian Aggregation, are to exhibit at Waterloo on Friday Aug. 8th. Five tents are required to canopy the myriad attraction of his famous show. Two hundred and eighteen thousand five hundred fifty-eight square feet of canvass, sufficient to make twenty tents, such as travelling exhibitions generally use are now required to cover Forepaugh's grand museums, menageries, and Equestrian aggregation so that we have no hesitancy in pronouncing it the largest show and the best ever presented to the public.

It is a fact beyond all cavil that Forepaugh's menageries are the the largest rarest, and costliest collection of wild animals and rare birds in America. One hundred thousand dollars have been expended during the past season in adding to the hitherto large collection of animals and birds; the cabin bars, hippopotamus, rhinoceros, and many other rare animals have been purchased during the past year. There have also been added more than one thousand different species of birds. All the wild animals will be fed in the presence of the spectators in the afternoon exhibiton. And the menageries and museums tents open one hour before the circus commences, and remain open all the time the equestrial entertainment is progressing.

The fifth tent is devoted exclusively to the great circus display. More than forty actors and actresses appear in the department, besides two peforming elephants, four monkey equestrians, a performing unicorn, a ridiig goat, a troupe of educated dogs, and trained horses, mules, and other animals. Everybody—old and young, grave and gay, can attend, and find something that will amuse and instruct, and nothing that will offend.

The street parade will be on a scale commensurate with the general magnificence of the exhibition, and fully in the keeping with the spirits of the times, aiming to appeal to the heart, delight to the eye, and gratify the mind. Twenty Arabian horses will lead the column, drawing a gorgeous chariot styled the "Musical Car of the Muses." The "Goddess of Liberty" personated by a beautiful maiden, will be borne through the streets upon the back of a monster war elephant. A hall of statuary, representing the gods goddesses of Ancient Greece and Rome, and will be open to public view. The palace cage of the performing unicorn drawn by eight Flemish horses will appear, and ten camels, richly caparisoned, will draw a den containing eight living lions. A drove of Shetland ponies, just imported, will be exquisitely decked and harnessed to a beautiful bird bower. A mechanical gymnast, manufactured in France, by the celebrated French mechanician, Houdin, will perform a series of most extraordinary gymnastic and acrobatic acts as the procession moves. A full military band will enliven the scene with popular music.

One hundred and seventy-five matched horses, gayly plumed, the drivers uniformed, will draw the menagerie cages and museum wagons; the flags of every state in the Union will be carried in procession, and upon the cages and dens, which are all painted blue and gold, there can be seen 350 beautiful pictures, from designs by the most celeberated artists, representing classical religious and zoologic subjects.

Herr Darious, the lion tamer, who so recently narrowly escaped being devoured by a pair of tigers, will ride in an open cage surrounded with his pets, consisting of a couple of Asiatic Lions and a pair of monster Royal Bengal Tigers.

Carpenters are still in great demand at this place, and also other mechanics and laboring men.

The Great West.

Over Lake and Prairies to Duluth and Bismark.

Incidents of the Editoral Excursion.

One cannot possibly conceive what lies before him in contemplating a journey by way of the Lakes to Duluth and over the grand prairies of Minesota and Dacotah to the Missouri. There are sights and scenes to be enjoyed beyond description, and so many little incidents constantly occuring on the way too trivail perhaps for a newspaper item, that contribute largely to the occasion. About fifty, of a party composed of the editors, their ladies and friends, of Northern Indiana, and the Warsaw band, numbering twelve members, assembled at Chicago on the 8th inst., and at 8 o'clock in the evening found themselves gently gliding along the smooth surface of the fragrant Illinois river, (an indispensable luxury to Chicago.) on the splendid steamer Peerless, of the Leopold & Austrian line. We can not speak too highly of the appointments and general make-up of this fine vessel, for it is recognized as the best that floats on the lakes, costing about $150.000. Capt. Allen McIntyre was in command, an agreeable, wide awake officer, well qualified to take charge of so fine a craft. But there is Mr. Condon, the first mate, our beau ideal of a dashing jolly officer, full of duty, when duty's the word, but when that is over he turns up as bright and clever as that goddess of liberty aft the binnacle. Our readers will have to excuse our nautical phrases,—we're used to the ocean and we may get that and this lake business somewhat mixed. There was the clerk with a slight curvature of the spine, a genial fellow though, and no slouch on mint js. The steward too was clever and agreeable, and could enjoy a seat for'ard the capstan with about as much comfort, in warm weather, as any man that ever reefed a top sail.

Well, as we moved out from the pier and down along the murky river elbowing our way through shipping, and every now and then grazing those little spit fires of tug boats that line the river and seem to monopolize business generally, we finally reached the lake, the band playing, banners flying, and everybody radiant with smiles. With waving of hats and kerchiefs to the crowd on the dock, who had been attracted by the scene, we left the new built city, and in a short time saw it gradually disappearing over the horizon. The moon rose in the majesty of her fullness and her soft mellow light shining over the green waters below, lent an enchantment to the scene that was particularly enjoyable and long we sat there

> Wondering, doubting, dreaming dreams
> No mortal ever dared dream before.

But the stillness was unbroken except by a merry peal of laughter or the refrain of a song that came floating from the palatial cabin within. One by one the party disappeared until all were comfortably fixed in their little beds, to know nothing more of the miles that intervened between them and

MILWAUKEE

The next morning we were at the dock of this city, and singularly enough when the city was mentioned it seemed to have inseperable connection with lager beer, for Keyser William, king, has pronounced positively of this popular beverage made at this place, as the best in the world.—A man by the name of Best makes it which no doubt accounts for the milk in the cocoa. Keg up keg was taken on board and stowed away in the capacious hold of our boat, some of the passengers did likewise, but be it said to their credit not to any great extent. Here's where we first enjoyed the flute-like notes of the first mate who was directing the loading of freight. His "wake up, wake up," discounts all other musical attempts for smoothness we ever heard. Our only thought is now,

> "Shall we never more behold thee
> Never hear thy gentle voice again."

This city is becoming celebrated thro' its lager beer, its peculiar excellent brick and from the large amount of wheat shipped annually. It is a very fair city of some 75,000 population, with many handsome residences and fine business blocks We spent the day in this place, and just at dusk turned our boat northward for the Straits of which we reached the next evening in time to land and go through the Indian curiosity shop of which there are a number or more. What struck us most forcibly at this point was the excessive curiosity and want of cheek so indelibly stamped on every cheek of its merchandising inhabitants. You would step into a store perhaps and see a little aboriginal basket, or canoe, or fan, for which you would dislike to pay 25 cents, when a half breed would come along and price it at a dollar, just as easy as falling off a log.—The look of pity that followed seemed to have no effect.

There is a pretty little fort garrisoned by U. S. soldiers just on the hill above, and we climbed to the top to get a view just as the moon was rising. We introduced a resolution of thanks to the moon for appearing so effectually on several occasions, but the committee could'nt see it. We thought of Milwaukee Beer, and said—nothing. There is an old British fort just beyond this on a high ridge, which captured the one now occupied during the war with the mother country, but it has now fallen into disuse.

The island commands the straits, and that is the reason we suppose this fort is maintained. It is one of those elephants that the government has not been able to get off her hands, for its simply a nuisance.

About this time we had the benefit of a little sea, just as most of the party had gathered forward to enjoy the scene. The noble old ship began to rock, now bounding high up on a wave and then down again ever so far into the great trough made for it by the last billow. It was splendid. See the white caps, the foam crested billows, coming from afar, gradually advancing and growing larger as they approach until they raise the prow of the vessel high into the air, and then dash away as if in very ecstacy at what they had done.

Yes, and see that usually verbose and talkative gentleman, so meditative and gentle for the last half hour. See how majestically he rises up and elastically steps off to his little state room without the least effort, and so naturally, you know, but then an act behind the scene, up goes the window and sundry noises, like as if you had a rat in your throat, are heard, and you will then know the motive power that lent such grace to his every step as he gently withdrew from the company. It thinned out the crowd in jiffy. Even we began to congratulate ourselves that something was coming and we went to bed in fond expectancy, but the hearty breakfast we ate next morning dispelled our fears.

We passed up the St. Marys river and soon came to the Sault Ste Marie Canal, (that word is pronounced, Sue ste marie) a little job of work about a mile long and 70 feet wide that cost the government $12,000,000. It is of great benefit, however, to lake navigation, and so important, that it does not meet the demand made upon it, so that a similar one is being now constructed along side.—Here is located a small town and the great rapids which made the canal a necessity. The water passes over these breakers at the rate of 30 miles an hour and with such force that large quantities of white fish are found dead in the still water below where they have been swept after having struck the rocks as they tried to run the gauntlet of the rapids.—Four of our party, with two Indians, entrusted themselves to the mercy of these breakers and passed down one mile and a half in 3 minutes. There was Wadsworth and Fargher and his lady, of Laporte, Bedell, of Crown Point and—well the Scribe, of course, in a frail birch canoe, and if they had hit one of the rocks, almost in their way, good-bye party, canoe, Indians and all.

This was the fate that met a party a few years ago, and nothing was seen of them again. Lots of the noble red men to be found hanging around loose in this region, but instead of being red, their dirty black countenances resemble the negro more than the wild untutored savage of the poet's creation.

The shore of the lakes, straits and rivers in this country are thickly studed with pine trees of an inferior growth, which extends miles from the shore. Farther up we meet with rock bound coats with the same stunted pine growing apparently as thick as though in a fine rich soil. The fact is there is not much valuable land along lake Superior, for at every place we touched, rocks seemed to predominate toward the formation of the surface. Some of the islands may be more favored in this particular.

Having passed through the ship canal we emerged upon the great lake Superior only to experience a sudden change in the temperature. Our coats and shawls were in demand and the steam heater of the boat brought into use to make us comfortable. One poor fellow stood shivering at our side while we were going out toward where old Borealis lay, with an overcoat on our arm. Why don't you put on your overcoat, was the question? The poor man said he had none. We immediately took ours and—put it on; and told this refrigerated individual to go into the cabin and warm.

The next point we reached was the substantial city of the largest and best built place on the lake. The largest iron, copper and lead mines in operation are located near this point, and railroads are busily employed in bringing it to this point for shipment by water. Thousands of tons are shipped annually until now these mines furnish more than one half of all the iron used in the United States.

This city is handsomely located on the west side of the bay, has large hotel accommodations and is quite a favorite resort in the heated term for pleasure seekers. Some handsome private residences are finely located along the high bluffs, commanding a splendid view of the bay. The main parts of the city are built up in a substantial manner. The celebrated brown stone so abundant in that region predominating. This stone is taken from the quary quite soft but soon becomes hard and fire proof, after exposure to the air. Large quantities are shipped abroad. On Saturday evening the order to "let go" was given and we started for Houghton, on Portage lake, connected by a very narrow river of the same name with lake Superior. Here are located the richest copper mines in the country. Some of the mines are 1500 feet deep, and the ore yields from 60 to 90 per cent. of copper. It being Sabbath, a very few went to church, but the bluffs and mines got the largest congregation. We started down the river in the evening and were soon on the boundless sea with the long lines of pine that marked the shore gradually disappearing from view. A severe storm of thunder and lightning came upon us in the night, terrifying some and pleasing others. Some got up to take in the scene, but as it was blowing rather fresh, and we felt snow in the air, we decided to keep our hammock. A heavy fog fell upon the water in the morning and repeated whistle of the boat, as a signal for other vessels, did not add much comfort to the scene. At the dead hour of night when grave yards yawn, we entered the port of Bayfield, a wild and picturesque little village of several hundred souls.—Several of the party visited the catholic church high up on the bluffs, said to be over a centuary old. We got a glimpse of it through the pine shrubbery and the pale moon shining down on the lonely spot gave it a wierd look, and the picture was not a cheerful one. After spending an hour the Peerless steamed out of the harbor to stop no more until the far famed city of Duluth was reached. Part of Monday was spent in a fog but on Tuesday morning the lake was clear, and over the prow of our vessel could be seen the spot made famous by J. Proctor Knott, the second Chicago of the west.

DULUTH.

Gradually we neared the goal of our anticipations and we can never forget the feeling of awe that came over us as we beheld the scene before us. We can only ascribe it as something akin to what Columbus felt in his great achievment or what the oriental experiences at his first sight of the mecca of his pilgrimage.—Like J. Proctor, 'Twas the name for which my soul had panted for years as the heart panted for the waterbrook," and here it was all laid out in bold relief before us. Our boat was soon moored at the dock and we stepped ashore in the fabled city amid a throng of its citizens who assembled to see the new arrivals.

Though somewhat disappointed as to the extent and development of the place, we soon formed a better acquaintance, and soon came to the conclusion that to know Duluth you must become acquainted with her citizens. They are a generous hosptial people, full of vim and enterprise possessed of an energy that knows no limit, that will brook no obstacle.

We took quarters at the Clark House, and were soon having a lively tete-a-tete with his Honor Mayor Smith the members of the Press and a number of her distinguished citizens, not the least among whom was Col. Hull, the very courteous proprietor of the hotel. Nature has done very little for Duluth, except to pile up rocks and make the surface ragged enough. Thousands of dollars have been spent in smoothing the surface until now there are a number of fine graded streets along which some very fine business blocks have been erected. It is only of four year's growth, wears the air of a city and stands as a monument to the enterprise of its citizenship. They have already established a dock nearly eleven miles long, and have a splendid harbor within, and since it has been made a port of entry, it has shipped two and a half million bushels of wheat. With a proper development of the country beyond and contiguous thereto, the place is certainly destined to be the greatest city of the northwest.

We were the recipients of many courtesies from her citizens during our stay, of such a character as to assure us that they were not for the sole purpose of creating a good impression. The Mayor proposed an informal hop at the Clark House in the evening which was warmly seconded by a host of his friends, and the elite, and beauty of the place, promptly assembled at the appointed time, and all participated in a most enjoyable affair.—There are two daily papers published in the city, ably edited and partaking in general of the life and vim of the place.

The mayor, though a large man, capered as nimbly to the lascivious pleasing of the violin as did others with half his age and weight, doubtless because he has quit smoking, quit drinking, and quit—other naughty things. We met Major Selp, a very agreeable gentleman, Col. Johns, Col. Bloomer, all identified with the growing interests of the place.

The next morning we were informed that two cars were ready to convey us along the North Pacific, and at 7 o'clock we were aboard, destined for the out post of civilization. A few miles traveled and we came in sight of the grandest scenes to be witnessed in the country—the dalles of the St. Louis.

Owing to our want of space this week, we will conclude our account of the excursion in our next issue.

I take pleasure in introducing and recommending Dr. H. A. Moyer, to my friends and patrons, and here say that none of my customers need fear to entrust him with their work in the line of dentistry, as I know him to be as a good a workman as there is in Northern Indiana, he having been with me some six years ago, and since then attended the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery, besides being associated with Dr. Beauman, in Columbus, O.,—one of the best offices in that State—for over two years, any of my old customers will be safe in placing themselves in his hands. Any one that needs any repairing of old will confer a favor by calling on and reporting the same to him, as we shall be more or less in connection.—All persons indebted to me will please call and settle at once, either at the office or the store of L. A. Thompson & Son.

[illegible]

I sit beside thee, mill-stream,
 The wheel goes whirling round;
The [illegible] among the [illegible],
Their yellow ringlets float away
On [illegible]
 "Be merry, skip and bound,
And dance beside the mill-stream;
 There's music in the sound."
I sit beside thee, mill-stream,
 [illegible] brown,
So spick-and-span for my old man
(He's in the mill among the bran),
And shows a leg and foot he can
 For one that's growing down,
As [illegible] the [illegible]
 As any Jo in town.
I love thy [illegible], mill-stream,
 As dearly as thy splash,
When its foam-like, on days like this,
Lights up the wheel with sunny bliss;
For if I hear thy wrathful hiss
 Below the tempest's crash,
I know the wheel turns, mill-stream,
 The faster for the clash.
I've lived beside thee, mill-stream,
 Full forty [illegible] June;
My [illegible] cheese, and honey-bees,
My cherries, and my apple-trees,
I thank kind Providence for these,
 [illegible];
I well may think our mill-stream
 Is never out of tune.
The homestead high thee, mill-stream,
 [illegible] bonny boys;
My little Joe is lying low,
But Willie has a farm to show;
Fine crops of wheat and barley mow,
 And wife, and household joys;
His bairns stand yonder, mill-stream,
 And listen to thy noise.
I would not leave thee, mill-stream,
 Before these limbs are drest
For my last bed, that shall be spread
Close by my buried darling's head;
There, turf lies softly on the dead;
 There I shall be at rest,
Nor hear thy clatter, mill-stream,

THE DOCTOR'S STORY.

Thackery says there are no new stories—all are old. But they are not turned in that kaleidoscope we call time, and though it may be the same piece, we see another color through it. What was at one turn a deep green, at another becomes a rose color, soft and beautiful. So my story may be old, but in the turning, a new light may come through an old bit of glass, which shall not have grown dim by the shadows of time.

I was sitting late one night in my office, before a grate fire, or one that had been great a few hours before, with my feet on the table before me. I had forgotten to replenish the fire, had no idea what time it was, for my thoughts had been busy in studying out the case of a patient I had that day been to see. I had had many years of practice, but this case was something new to me. I was puzzling over it, my books of reference lay scattered about on the table and chairs, and I was just beginning to see where the difficulty lay, when I heard a shot, the sound of men running, and soon somebody ascending the stairs and coming toward my door. It was opened hastily by a big stout fellow, a mechanic, by the name of Ross, a man I had known some time. He spoke out short and quick:

"Doctor, there's a man down on the sidewalk—dead, I guess. Wish you'd come down and see."

I snatched my hat and followed Ross down stairs, and there lay the man almost before the door. I examined him and found life was gone. He was beyond all human aid. I inquired of Ross if he knew anything about him. He said he believed he boarded at the Revere House, and roomed with a man by the name of Dougal, but knew nothing farther.

We took the poor fellow between us, and carried him to his room, and getting Dougal up I asked him what he knew of the young man. He was very much affected at first, and said he was a good friend of his, that they had roomed together for more than a year, that his name was King—Johnston King; that he worked in the machine shops, and everybody liked him. He was a great hearted fellow. The only difficulty was he would drink sometimes, and he supposed that was what he had been at to-night. His home was in Canada; he had a father and mother, and some sisters, he believed; a mother anyway, for he had talked about her Sunday nights, sometimes. As I looked at young King, lying where we had put him, on his own bed, with his white, boyish face, and the dark curls that lay damp on his low, broad forehead, I thought of my own boy that had left me only a few years before, to help hold our flag high above all outrage and slander, that had been shot, and fallen in the midst of smoke and fire, and some one had found him, and had buried him as a soldier should be buried, with his own flag about him, and I always felt that it was a debt I owed, and believed there would come a time when I might repay it; and this was the first chance I had; and I resolved that Johnston King should have from me all that a son could have.

I told the young man I would attend to the funeral. I staid at the hotel that night, or what there was left of it, and the next morning found out the particulars of the trouble.

Johnston King had gone into one of the saloons, had take a glass of ale, and was passing out, when some man whom he knew slightly offered him something stronger; got him under the influence of it, and then began to banter and annoy him, until he was beside himself, when he gave the man a sound knock, which sent him into one corner of the room. He got up as mad as natural depravity and drink can make a man. He took out a pistol from his pocket, which King discovered, and ran, but the man followed him, and fired after going but little way. Somehow I could not blame young King. His frank, open face had touched my heart. I thought of his home and his mother, and I believed there was a something hidden that we might not know in this life, but that would be made clear by-and-by. It seemed the saddest thing I had ever known. We buried him that day. The mechanics from the shops attended the funeral, and all seemed to feel sad and troubled, and I heard them saying one to another:

"We shall miss poor King—he always kept things lively; and many a time when I've been blue he has had a cheery word for me, that set me all right again. Someway he always left a track of light behind him."

Yes, I was glad I had done for this man what somebody had done for my boy. The papers that day had an account of the affair, closing up with a eulogy on Dr. Gardner's kindness, in doing for a stranger all that he could have done for one of his own family. I crushed the paper in my hand as I read it, and my whole being rose against that word kindness. It is kind of a person to do what he likes best to do. I had done this thing because it was a pleasure, and not a trial. I felt as if I were cheating the public in leading them to think it was a goodness in me. Goodnesses and kindnesses come with denials.

Some one, probably Dougal, sent the paper to the postmaster of Hamilton, Canada, requesting him, if any family by that name lived there, to send them the paper. And it was not many weeks before I received a letter from the mother of Johnston King, saying they had got the paper announcing the death of their only son, and thanking me, in words that seemed to be full of tears, for the interest in him I had shown. The letter was beautifully written, evidently by a woman of culture and refinement. She told me something of the grief their son's life had been to them, and yet they had loved him devotedly, and his two sisters were nearly crushed under the blow. I answered the letter, and we kept up the correspondence for several months; and I never received better letters in my life,—full of truth and comfort. They made the days brighter than they came into. I learned to know herself, her husband and her daughters through them. One day I received one, in which she asked me for my photograph, telling me she felt as if she knew us all, my wife, my two boys and myself, but she wanted to see my proxy, if in no other way, one who had been so much to them. Now, I am an elderly man, and not remarkably good looking, though one of my young lady friends (for I have always had a liking for young ladies), tells me my face is better than a handsome one,—that it is genial and honest, and always carries a good sermon in it. Even if this were true (which of course I do not believe), it would not come out in the picture, and I didn't just like to have them see my gray hairs, and find out what an old man I was. But in my next letter I sent one, for who can help minding a woman? And when her next letter came, there came with it a photograph, and as it dropped out of the envelope I was rather surprised to see a fresh, bright, pretty face before me of a young lady. I had of course a picture of Mrs. King in my own mind as a lady in middle life, with puffs of gray hair tucked under a white cap, rather large in figure, with a matronly air and a motherly face. We all make pictures, to comfort ourselves with, of friends we have not seen, and are often strangely deceived when the actual is presented to us; and do you wonder that at first I should have been somewhat surprised to see this sweet young face before me? But on reading the letter, I found Mrs. King had sent me her daughter Ruth's picture, as neither she nor her husband had any of their own at that time. Of course I must needs answer by a little note of thanks to Miss Ruth, for this picture, and then came in return a bright, cheery letter, such as young ladies know well how to write, and after that the mother's correspondence dropped into the daughter's hands.

One evening about this time our hearts were all made glad by Ned's (my oldest boy's) return from Ann Arbor, for his summer vacation. And the week passed by with rides and visits, trips out into the country, etc.; for I always take my vacation with Ned, and when my boys are at home with me, I forget my gray hairs, and the years that have made my shoulders stoop, and am a boy again. And I do not believe my boys are afraid of their father, though I know there are times when the chaps like to be by themselves, and I always have an intuition,—or is it the boy feeling left behind?—that tells me when the old man is better off at home or in his office. One morning this dawned upon me as a company of boys, with Ned in the van, started off for a hunt, into the country. So I declined their urgent invitation to join them, going to my office instead, and, sitting down at my desk, took up a pile of unanswered letters, that had been accumulating during my vacation, and among them I found a letter from Ruth King.

I was kept busy during the day answering business letters, leaving Ruth's, being the pleasanter-duty, till the rest were off my mind. What with interruptions, I didn't get to it that day, and when Ned came into the office the next morning, I tossed it over to him, asking him to answer it for me. He took it up, and seeing a lady's handwriting, a look of dismay came over his face. I told him to open and read it. My back was toward him, but I kept a lookout over my shoulder, to see how he got on with it. His face lighted up as he read, but as he finished and laid it down, I could see nothing in it but despair.

"Why, father, I never wrote to a girl in my life. How to you expect me to answer such a letter as that?"

I got up, and going out to my desk, took out of one of the pigeon-holes Ruth's picture, and laying it before him, told him its history, and that perhaps it might inspire him, anyway, to do the best he could. The letter had been neglected a long time, and I could not answer it that day, nor the next, and so left him.

Had I any designs on these young people? How can I tell? An old man's heart is past finding out. But I believe there is in every loving human heart a desire for the happiness of others, and if a person can help it along, is he to blame for doing it? Well, Ned answered the letter, and very soon after went back to college; but I have never been able to find that photograph from that day to this. Whenever I allude to it in Ned's presence, a sudden fit of abstraction comes over the boy, which prevents his understanding ordinary conversation. At the fall vacation a company of the students went to Niagara, and Ned wrote, saying he would like to take a trip over into Canada, as it was quite the talk nowadays, and it might be a good plan to take it in at the same time. As I closed the letter which I had been reading aloud at the tea table, my wife spoke up from the depths of a mother's heart.

"I wonder if that boy will go over there, and he hasn't a decent suit of clothes with him. Doctor, you sit down this minute, and write to him not to do it, anyway, unless he gets himself fixed up some."

I looked over at Annie, and said, "Pshaw! wife, if the girl cares much about him, clothes won't make any difference, and if it is clothes she wants, we don't want her; besides, Ned's got a handsome face, and looks well enough; he'll manage that, you needn't worry."

How quickly a mother takes everything in. And I must confess I shook a little in my own boots, for I have a vague idea girls do like to see their gentlemen friends in raiment suited to a gentleman. But the next letter from the young man, dilating on the beauties of Canada, and its superior advantages, set our minds at rest on the clothes question.

A few weeks ago I took a trip to my old home in the East. It had been many years since I had seen my boyhood's home—so long, indeed, that in many of the old families I used to know, almost as I did my own, I passed myself off as Elder Knap, and begged for my destitute church, or asked leave to stay over night, without their having a suspicion of my identity. While there, I received a letter from little Ruth King, earnestly inviting me to come over and make them a visit, with a postscript from Mrs. King, making the invitation still stronger. How they knew I was so near them, that big boy of mine at Ann Arbor can only tell. I made up my mind I would accept, and a few days afterward went, and was received with a cordiality that warmed me all through, and made me believe more strongly than ever before that human nature is good, honest nature, most of it anyway, and Canada nature a good deal like the rest. Mrs. King did have the silver puffs, under the snowy cap, and the pure, womanly face I knew she must have.

Mr. King was a severely honest Englishman, and Mary, the oldest daughter, very much like him,—an open face, and good constitution, thoroughly energetic in her ways. She saw the justice of a thing as well as the goodness of it. A character you could always tie to, that is, if you wanted to. I thought I saw a glimmer of light, and why Johnston King had left his home, and wandered so far away from it, wandered in more than a literal sense, because a father had been unkind in his justice. It seems almost wrong, sometimes, that a just father and an impetuous son are not allowed to understand each other. Ruth was like her mother, with quiet, winning ways, and a loving, happy face, a deep heart, and a clear head; and, I soon found out, quite able to hold her own when she was attacked. A face that made you feel instinctively that "still waters run deepest."

As I went into the pleasant home parlor, a bright fire burned in the grate, and just above the mantel, in a heavy gilt frame, hung a painting of the boy I had laid in his coffin so far from this home. An ivy vine was wreathed around it, and it was hung in such a way that it could be seen from every part of the room. A strong, sweet face, with something of both Ruth and Mary in it. I stopped before it as I entered, and I knew that mother stood beside me, though I did not turn my head. The sisters were near me, also, and the father a little apart, with his head bowed, and his hand folded behind him. As I turned toward the mother, she took the hand I held out to her, I spoke not a word; there was no word to speak, but we understood each other, and that was enough.

I staid a few days, and had a most delightful visit. The evening I came away I happened to be in the parlor alone, when Ruth came in softly and stood beside me. I put my arm round her, and drew her to me, running my hand through her long, light curls, and over her fair, white forehead. She turned her face toward me, "And she was one, the beauty of whose eyes were evermore a sweet surprise." As I looked at her, a little searchingly, I fear, a soft flush came into her face, and the twinkle in her eyes grew brighter, as she said, almost in a whisper: "Well, will I do?"

Since my return home I have written to Ned of my visit, and the pleasure it gave me; that little Ruth was all I had expected from the inlook into her character her letters had given me. And now, I suppose, from little signs I have discovered, there will be a wedding somewhere in her Majesty's Dominions the coming summer, and I shall have a daughter to brighten an old doctor's home.

Unheard-of Horrors in a Lunatic Asylum.

A most horrible and almost incredible condition of affairs in the Vermont Insane Asylum is described in the report of the Legislative committee appointed to investigate the management of that institution. The committee's first discovery was that the asylum, which is controlled by a private corporation, was greatly overcrowded, 485 patients being packed into a space intended to accommodate 300 at the most. This, however, is a trifling matter in comparison with other revelations. Seventy-five of these unfortunates were thrust away in subterranean dungeons, dark, damp, foul, and pervaded by unendurable stenches. Some were confined in apartments nine feet by four in size, with air and ventilation only through auger holes bored in the doors. The active as well as the passive inflictions put upon these poor people proved equally inhuman. Among them was the punishment of the bath, in which the patient, securely bound, is placed in a bathing-tub, and a continuous stream of cold water allowed to fall upon his head. This torture, it may be remarked in passing, was one of the most excruciating known in the dark ages, resulting usually in insanity or death. To this asylum of horrors the committee also state that sane men have been consigned through fraud and bribery. The picture is as complete as Charles Reade could make it, but without the romance of fiction. The reality is something for the Legislature of Vermont to deal with promptly and severely; for it is too disgraceful for belief, except as attested by an official investigation such as has produced this astounding report.—Boston Post.

Fruits of Japan.—Fruit is very plentiful and fine. It consists of pears, apples, grapes, pomegranates, melons, peaches, plums and oranges. The latter are of a very rich, sweet flavor, though small, and do not generally contain many pippins. English gardeners would be surprised to see a Japanese orchard, as all the trees are grafted dwarfs, and appear to be heavily laden with fruit, so much so that the branches are supported by lumber props.

FARM AND GARDEN.

How to Say "Whoa."

A correspondent of the Iowa Homestead puts it in this way:

In breaking a colt it is necessary to teach him to stop at the word "whoa." Not only should one and the same word be used, but one and the same tone. The colt that has been broken to stop at the firm, low tone of command, is not likey to stop at the word uttered in a high key.

When a man halloes "Who-oo-a" in a wild tone of affright that would make the hair rise on the head of a marble statue, and that sends the women of the neighborhood to their doors shrieking "what's the matter," a colt is very apt to feel nervous.

When a man snarls "Whoa-sir-r-r-sir," through his teeth, as if he would say, "Stand still, you brute, or I'll tear your heart out," the cry counteracts, not only the effect of early training, but of those powerful opiates, old age and starvation, and even the poorest old crowbait is ready to repeat the runaway scrapes of his early youth.

The imploring tone, "Who-oh, who-oh," ending with a note of despair, "Do stand still. I know you won't. Oh, I shall be killed!" might as well be addressed to a railroad corporation as a horse.

The loving tone, "Who-ee, who-ee, sweet little bonny horsee; do-ee stand still, that's a darling," is wasted, unless one has oats, salt, or sugar, which are never at hand in a pinch, when wanted.

The shrill, feminine cry, "whaw, whaw," like the squawk of a hen caught by the leg, invariably screamed by the inexperienced female, when a driving rein or hold-back breaks, is alarming in the extreme to a high-tempered animal.

A tone of fear or rage imparts fear to the horse. To govern one well, a man must have mastery over himself. No matter what the emergency, nor how much there is to excite fear and anger, the tone employed must be that of one fully master of the situation, not only free from passion himself, but at liberty to soothe the fears of his trembling dependent. The tone, in short, must be that of a king, firm as of one that does not contemplate disobedience—gentle, but conveying a sense of absolute power.

What the Farmer Must Know.

The farmer, like the business man, must know what he is doing; he must have some pretty decided ideas of what he is to accomplish—in fact he must calculate it before hand.

He must know his soil—that of each lot; not only the top, but the sub-soil.

He must also know what grain and grass are adapted to each.

He must know when is the best time to work them, whether they need summer fallowing.

He must know the condition in which the ground must be when plowed, so that it be not too wet, nor too dry.

He must know that some grain requires earlier sowing than others, and what these grains are.

He must know that it will pay to have machinery to help him as well as muscle.

He must know about stock and manures, and the cultivation of trees and small fruits, and many other things. In a word, he must know what experienced, observing farmers know, to be sure of success. Then he will not guess—will not run such risks.

Cucumbers Stuffed—Proportions.

Four good-sized cucumbers, one middle-sized onion, four ounces of bread, six sprigs of parsley, half a bay leaf, a few stalks of chives, two cloves, two ounces of butter, a pinch of nutmeg, and a gill of broth. Soak the bread (soft part) in water, and when thoroughly soaked press the water out of it; split each cucumber in two lengthwise, peel them, cut off a piece, about a quarter of an inch, at each end, remove the seed from the inside with a small spoon; slice the onion and fry it with the butter, then add to it the seeds removed from the cucumbers, the bread, parsley, bay leaf, chives, cloves, nutmeg and broth; the cloves and piece of bay leaf should be wrapped up in a rag; stir now and then, and simmer for about five minutes. Have water with a little salt boiling in another pan, and drop the cucumbers in for two minutes; take them off, drop them in cold water, and drain; then fill each half with the mixture of bread, onion, etc., put a few slices of fat salt pork in a pan, place the cucumbers on them, dust with bread crumbs, put on the top of each, and apart, three pieces of butter the size of a bean, put the pan in a hot oven until the cucumbers are well baked, and serve. A little meat gravy may be poured over each just before serving.

Manure from One Fowl.

Lewis Wright, the well-known English poultry writer, says that in one instance the droppings of four Brahma fowls in one night weighed one pound; in another instance 13 ounces. The average was 3¼ ounces per bird, but which was reduced by drying to 1¼ ounces. On a basis of one ounce to each fowl, the amount per year will be 29¼ pounds, and for a flock of 50 head 1,140 pounds. He pronounces the manure equal to guano, and better in some respects; but counting it as worth only $50 per ton, the manure from 50 fowls will be worth $25 per annum, or 50 cents per head. This estimate is not probably any too high, and is worth remembering by those who keep poultry, or who propose to do so.

It should also be remembered that this estimate is merely for the night droppings, and takes no account of the value of what is made in the day-time. Much of this last, no doubt, is lost by exposure, but judicious management of poultry yards by breeders bent on saving everything possible would probably result in devising a mode for utilizing most of it.

Profits of Timothy Seed.

Some paper says: "Last season we saved about five acres of grass for seed. Some of our neighbors laughed at us—they said we were foolish when hay was so high. But we made almost double what we would if we had cut it for the hay. There would not have been over four tons at the most, and the hay would have fetched $16 a ton, which would have been $64 for the hay. Well, there were two tons of straw, which brought $12.50 per ton—$25 for the straw; there were twenty-four bushels of seed, which brought $3.50 per bushel—$84 for the seed; add $25, which would be $109. Now subtract $3 for thrashing, which would leave $106, and you see there was $42 more profit in the seed than there would have been in the hay.

Vegetables for Poultry.

For fowls kept in confinement in summer, it has been recommended to have large sods of grass cut, taking care to keep enough earth to each sod, so that the hens may tear out the blades without having to drag the sod about. It is, however, much more convenient to mow grass with a scythe, cutting it often, just as soon as it is high enough for the scythe to be used, so that it may be fresh and tender. A lawn mower could be put to good use for this purpose.—Poultry World.

Useful Cement.

The following cement is found excellent in cases where it is found desirable to join or close vessels for containing the vapor of acids or highly corrosive substances: Beat and sift finely dry pipe clay, add painter's drying oil, and mix in a mortar to a molding consistency. Use this lute in cylinders, flattened, and apply to the joinings. The joints to which it is applied must be perfectly clean and dry.

Young Chickens in Gardens.

Every one who has tried to make poultry and gardening agree, knows how destructive and exasperating fowls are among vegetables and flowers. But this applies to adult fowls. Young chickens may be allowed the run of the garden, the mother being cooped, and the havoc they make among insects is an excellent thing.—Poultry World.

The Business Outlook.

The Boston Advertiser argues that there will not be the same monetary stringency this fall that was felt last year and one or two years before, because the balance of trade against us and in favor of Europe is much smaller this year than usual. In the fiscal year that ended June 30, 1870, our importations of foreign merchandise were $436,000,000; exports and re-exports over $393,000,000. In the four months, from June to August, 1870, inclusive, we sent away $40,000,000 in gold and silver, being nearly the whole amount of the balance against us for the year. In 1871 the imports were $520,000,000, the exports and re-exports were $443,000,000. The shipments of bullion were extended in that year over a longer period, but the balance was larger, the payments were more extensive and money was tighter than in 1870. Last year our imports reached $627,000,000; exports and re-exports of merchandise only $444,000,000. In the four months, from May to August inclusive, our shipments of gold and silver were above $50,000,000, and the stringency was greater and longer continued than ever before. This year, however, the imports have declined and the exports have largely increased. The balance against us is consequently much smaller, and we will have to export less specie abroad to make it up. The export of coin, to pay the balance of trade against us, the Advertiser argues, necessarily compels the borrowing by the exporter of large sums from the banks to buy coin with, which makes money tight; and if we have comparatively little coin to send abroad this year, for that purpose, money should be plenty and rates easy.

A Fowl Proceeding in Buckingham Palace.

Of course his Persian Majesty brought with him his own butcher, but he seemed to fear lest this austere worthy might have fallen a victim to heterodox influences; and report goes that the Shah was desirous of seeing the poultry designed for his particular eating slaughtered before him in the drawing-room of Buckingham Palace. Dismay reigned among the court officials and the members of the Government. The Lord Chamberlain trembled in his gold-buckled shoes at the idea of the desecration, proposed, while Mr. Ayrton, as Chief Commissioner of Public Works, and as such charged with the care of the royal palaces, moaned aloud at the thought of the increased estimate required next year to provide new carpets, and to supply the necessary amount of soap and water to remove the guilty stains. The difficulty was at length, I believe, overcome by the sacrifice of the cocks and hens taking taking place in the Queen's private garden, under the eye of a special functionary whose orthodoxy was above suspicion.—London Letter.

Venice by Torchlight.

Venice is perhaps the only place where you could see such a torchlight procession, writes a correspondent, as we saw the other night. It was gotten up for some charitable object, and was supported by all the "forestieri" or strangers in the city, whether for the charity or novelty of the thing I leave you to guess. The grand canal or street of the nobles is two hundred feet wide, and capable, therefore, of allowing numbers of boats to go abreast. You know the gondoliers stand up to row, and take little room in the water. A steamer, gayly decorated, was placed in the middle on each side of a large boat containing bands and singers; then, on each side and behind for a long way were gondolas, lighted up in every way Chinese lanterns can do it. The music struck up, and the procession glided along the water. Alternately pieces by the band, and national songs sung by a good chorus, till we arrived at the Rialto, the bridge across the grand canal. Then all stopped, and the thousands of people on the bridge and sides of the canal were still, while the singers treated us to the best out-door performance I ever heard.

According to Prof. Waterhouse, the mountains of the State of Missouri contain iron enough to yield a million of tons per annum of that precious metal for a period of two centuries. The "Pilot Knob" alone, which rises to an altitude of 1,114 feet above the Mississippi, is so rich in iron ore that it is estimated an upper section, 141 feet high, would yield fourteen millions of tons. The quality of the metal is fibrous and flexible, and therefore excellent.

MOLL CLATTERCLACK.

Moll Clatterclack was smart in words
 As any woman's righter,
And with the weapon of the tongue
 She was an awful fighter;
She blazed at this, she snarled at that,
 And kept up such a clatter,
The very shingles on the roof
 Were frightened at the matter.

With [illegible], [illegible] and jaw,
 She made the dishes rattle,
And clean destroyed the human folks,
 And almost killed the cattle;
The dog and cat, and rats and mice,
 Became as deaf as adders;
The chickens staid upon the roosts,
 And got as thin as shadders.

But not content with things at home,
 The [illegible] making critter
Stirred up the people here and there,
 And kept them in a twitter.
Her mean and everlastin' tongue
 Was always kept a waggin',
And yet you'd think she was a saint,
 If [illegible] were made by braggin'.

She kept the neighbors by the ears
 With gossipin' and lyin',
And kept the men a makin' oaths,
 And the women all a cryin'.
You'd thought the end o' time had come,
 With all the fuss and racket,
For when she found an honest name,
 She tried her best to black it.

If ever mortal was possessed,
 She sartin had her legions,
And took her orders from the king
 Of all the lower regions.
She pizened every home and heart,
 And spilt all joy and gladness,
And made a howlin' wilderness
 Chock full o' grief and sadness.

Attacked by a Deer.

About 8 o'clock yesterday morning a man named William Harding, while passing along the Washington road, about three-fourths of a mile from the city, when near Sextonville was suddenly attacked by a large deer that had escaped from Druid Hill Park on Saturday. The deer knocked Mr. Harding down, and then backed away from the prostrate man ten or fifteen feet, watched his movements, and whenever the least movement was made by him the deer would immediately renew the attack. Mr. Harding was knocked down four times. Finally the animal hearing a noise down the road turned around, which gave Mr. Harding an opportunity to escape over a fence near by. Mr. Harding went on to Sextonville, where he procured a gun, and, returning, found the deer still standing in the center of the road. He shot the deer and returned to this city and had his wounds dressed. He received two severe cuts on the head, and his whole body was badly bruised.—Baltimore American.

The Shah Witnesses a Prize-Fight.

Yesterday the Shah was greatly entertained by the Marquis of Queensberry, who brought to the palace a number of prize-fighters. Gen. Hardinge, who was on duty at the time, was quite horrified. "How many of them have you got?" asked he of the Marquis. "Six," was the reply. "My God!" exclaimed the General, "we can't let six go in; they might knock us all on the head and walk off with all the jewels and plate." A compromise was effected; two of the best of the bruisers were allowed to enter with the Marquis. They first fought with each other, and then the Marquis, who is the best boxer in the kingdom, tried a few rounds with each of them, handsomely drawing the claret from one, and knocking down the other. The Shah was perfectly charmed. He said it was the best thing he had seen in England. He gave each of the men a handful of coin, and bestowed upon the Marquis a magnificent pipe, mounted with rubies and emeralds.—London Letter.

Hen and Cat.

The story copied below, from the St. Albans Messenger, comes from North Hero, Vt.:

A hen belonging to Mrs. Mayo, of this place, hatched a brood of chickens. They took the chickens away, but the hen persisted in returning to her nest. Below the nest, in a grain house, a cat produced a litter of kittens. The cat leaving her charge a few minutes, biddy set herself very composedly upon the kittens. Puss returning, a fight ensued, in which puss was victorious. Afraid of what might happen, puss remained in charge till compelled by hunger go after food, whereupon biddy resumed the care of the kittens. Puss returning, and having a vivid remembrance of what she suffered at the first encounter, concluded to allow biddy to remain. This she did till it was discovered that she had smothered some of the kittens, when the latter were removed and given over to their rightful guardian.

A White Robin.

A white robin is a bird no oftener seen than a "white blackbird," but one of these veritable nondescripts is now in the possession of Mr. C. H. Ewell, of Rocky Nook, Plymouth, Mass. The parent bird had built near his residence, but no notice had been taken of the little family, until a few days since, as Mr. Ewell was passing under the tree, the young bird became alarmed and took to flight. Noticing the strange appearance of this particular bird, Mr. Ewell secured him and now has him caged—a study for naturalists and a wonder for those who have never before seen the like. The bird appears in all respects like a robin, with the exception of the plumage, which is entirely white.

It is no joke for a man to be fined £15,730 14s 6d. This is what has happened to Mr. Carmouche at London, who, under pretense of distilling perfumed spirits to be used for perfumery, and not drinkable, has been manufacturing quantities of pure spirits of wine, and selling the same. There were forty-six counts in the indictment, and he was fined in an amount equal to treble duty on each count.

PAIN KILLER—ITS MERITS.

ASIATIC CHOLERA IN CHINA.

TUNGCHOW, China, Aug. 23.

Messrs. PERRY DAVIS & SON:

Dear Sirs—During a long residence in China, I have used your invaluable Pain Killer, both in my own family and among the Chinese, and have found it a most excellent medicine. In the summer of '62 and '63, while residing in Shanghai, I found it an almost certain cure for Cholera, if used in time. Indeed, using it in a great many instances, I do not remember failing in a single case. For three years I have been residing in this place, more than fifty miles from a physician, and have been obliged often to fall back upon my own resources in cases of sickness. The Chinese come to us in great numbers for medicine and advice. Though without medical knowledge ourselves, the few simple remedies we can command are so much in advance even of their physicians, that we have almost daily applications. We allow them to come, because it brings us in contact with them, and opens a door to usefulness. In diarrhea, colic, vomiting, cholera, coughs, &c., your Pain Killer has been my chief medicine. Yours, very truly,

T. P. CRAWFORD.

ITS MERITS ARE UNSURPASSED.

Colic, Cramps, Spasms, Heart-burn, Diarrhea, Dysentry, Flux, Wind in the Bowels, Sour Stomach, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache.

In sections of the country where

FEVER AND AGUE

prevails, there is no remedy held in greater esteem. Persons traveling should keep it by them. A few drops, in water, will prevent sickness or bowel troubles from change of water.

From foreign countries the calls for PAIN KILLER are great. It is found to

Cure Cholera when all other Remedies fail.

It Gives Instant Relief from Aching Teeth.

From 1840 to this day, 1870 (Thirty Years), PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER has had no Rival.

Every Housekeeper should keep it at hand, to apply it on the first attack of any Pain. It will give satisfactory relief, and save hours of suffering.

Do not trifle with yourselves by testing untried remedies. Be sure you call for and get the genuine PAIN KILLER, as many worthless nostrums are attempted to be sold on the great reputation of this valuable medicine. Directions accompany each bottle.

If He Had but a Thousand.

A Georgia paper, the Atlanta Herald, advises a man who has $1,000 to establish a hennery near the city, and depicts his glorious prospect thus, affording a most remarkable instance of counting one's chickens before the eggs are laid: "With $300 he can purchase 1,000 good hens; an additional $50 will buy him 100 cocks. Let him then rent a good piece of grassy land near the city, and expend $40 in fixing up chicken coops, n[illegible] then with the balance of his money purchase a cheap horse and a second-hand wagon, he is ready for business. His hens will furnish him at a low estimate an average of 600 eggs a day the year round, though for certain purposes let us say, fifty dozen per day. He can secure steady sale for them at an average of 17 cents per dozen, or $8.50 per day, or, in round figures, $3,000 a year. The food of these fowls may be liberally put at $250 per annum, and, with the little garden patch, which should be cultivated; the bee-hives, which should fringe the house; the cow, that should be carefully attended to, the man and his family could easily live on $1,000 a year. Putting his rent at $200 cash per annum, one would have profits of $1,500—quite a handsome thing. 'The man with a thousand dollars' is really affluent, if he only knew it."

AN ACT OF JUSTICE.—Doubting Castle was a sad stumbling block in the path of Bunyan's Christian, though it couldn't bar his way to Truth. We can sympathize with the pilgrim, for doubt always besets us when we are asked to believe anything particularly extraordinary. Consequently, when we heard, some eighteen months ago, that a physician in California had compounded, from the juices and extracts of certain herbs found there, a medicine that cured almost every variety of blood disease, we were incredulous. Since then we have had opportunities of testing the accuracy of the report, and are free to admit that our doubts have vanished. Seeing what we have seen, knowing what we know, it is impossible for us to question the remedial properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS. That this famous vegetable Tonic, Alterative, and Antiseptic is a specific for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Chronic Constipation, Fever and Ague, Bilious Intermittents, Scrofulous Taint in the Blood, Incipient Consumption, Local and General Debility, Rheumatism, Sick Headache, and Diseases of the Kidneys, seems to be a matter beyond the pale of controversy—a fixed fact in medical history. The statements of friends, in whose veracity and intelligence we have full confidence, corroborated by our own personal observation, compel us to admit the surpassing merits of the preparation.

LONDON.—The city of London has a population of four millions of people, and is the largest in the world, but the real city has only 75,000 souls, and its territory is not one-fifth the size of Buffalo. All the glory, pomp, and dignity of the city centers in the Lord Mayor. Chosen annually from the list of Aldermen, he has a salary equal to that of President Grant, and has, in effect, for more than a century enjoyed more privileges than the sovereign of England.

HAIR VIGOR.—In common with many others, we have felt a lively interest in the investigations which Dr. Ayer has been making to discover the causes of failure of the hair, and to provide a remedy. His researches are said to have been much more thorough and exhaustive than any ever made before. The result is now before us under the name of AYER'S HAIR VIGOR. We have given it a trial, and with full satisfaction. It equals our most favorable anticipations. Our gray hairs have disappeared, or resumed their original color; and a visible crop of soft, silken hair has started on a part of the scalp which was entirely bald.—Democrat, Abingdon, Va.

The Wear and Tear of Life.

The cares, anxieties and misfortunes of life have as much to do with shortening it as disease. They are, in fact, the source of many ailments and physical disabilities. Nervous weakness, dyspepsia, affections of the liver, disturbances of the bowels, headaches, hypochondria and monomania are among these distressing fruits. It is, therefore, of great importance that persons whose minds are oppressed with heavy business responsibilities, or harassed by family troubles, or excited by speculation, or perplexed by a multiplicity of enterprises, or in any way overtaxed or overworked, should keep up their stamina by the daily use of a wholesome tonic. Thousands of persons thus circumstanced are enabled to bear up against the difficulties in which they are involved, and to retain their strength, health and mental clearness, by the regular use of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. Diseases which are prone to attack the body when debilitated and broken down by over-much brain-work, or exhausting physical labor, are kept at bay by the resistant power with which this incomparable tonic endows the nervous system and the vital organs. At this season, when the heat is evaporating the elements of strength from every pore, an invigorant is absolutely essential to the safety and comfort of the public, and is required even by the more robust if they desire to keep their athletic capabilities in status quo. Hence a course of Hostetter's Bitters is particularly useful at this period of the year as a defense against the invisible disease afloat in a sultry atmosphere. It is the most potent of all preventive medicines, and for all complaints which affect the stomach, the liver and the bowels, and interfere with the perfect digestion and assimilation of food, it is the standard remedy.

This standard article is compounded with the greatest care. [illegible] It restores gray or faded hair to its youthful color. As a dressing nothing has been found so effectual, or desirable.

Dr. A. A. Hayes, State Assayer of Massachusetts, says of it "I consider it the best preparation for its intended purposes."

WILLSON'S

Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelmintics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

Remarks by an American Citizen.

"Well the President's is all welll enough in a way, and he's has got lots of friends—regular third term frieuds, too—Tom Murphy, Henry Clews and others; but it's a mystery to me why some of these good friends of his don't tell him a few things he ought to know, for, you see this must be the biggest and greatest and best Government in the world, and the most peaceful and prosperous, as all the big officials are down at the Branch washing their toes and eating soft shelled crabs while the Administration just naturally runs itself which couldn't otherwise be the case, only that, as say somebody ought to tell the President that driving four scraggly bay horses with white driving-reins strung all over 'em, and yellow lead bars, and hitched to a big, awkward barouche, with two niggers in Shack Nasty Jim colored liveries, is a display of bad taste which is shocking to the cultivated American and actually horrifying to the most ordinary minister plenipotentiary and and envoys and such like; and then after the barouche he comes driving a trotter, with white kid gloves and more white reins, that might possibly go in about three minutes if well pushed, and he lays back and hauls in on the ribbons and breaks up every now and then, and he can tell you his pedigree from away back—by Check out of Government—and will take you to his stable and show you his scrawny colts and tell you their pedigrees and all that. But what sticks in my crop is the bay horses with gold harness and white reins and the yellow lead bars—just like Jim Fisk—and the nigger in Modoc livery, fer it's all so vulgar and in such bad taste, and some day or other, say about day after to-morrow you might mak a pleasant paragraph in your paper about this, though I think really it ought to told him by some of his friends like Tom Murphy and Henry Clews and——but maybe you had not better mention his name."

A divorce case in high life is now occupying the attention of the Scottish nobility. Mady Pollok, of Pollok Renfrewshire, has raised an action of separation and aliment against Sir Augh Crawford Pollok, he husband. She asks aliment to the amount of $5,000 per annum, and she lays her action on the ground of extraordinary series of acts of cruelty toward her, including setting his bulldogs at her, and repeatedly beating her, since the date os her marriage two years since. Sir Hugh denies the chief charges of druelty, and explains that during his absence in America, some years ago, he contracted the habit to drinking to excess and of frequenting drinking bars. He made his wives acquaintance in 1870, in Scarborough, where she was a barmaid, and where she continually supplied him with drink, and she was perfectly aware before her marriage of his failing. He admits having drank to excess since his marriage, but denies ever having intentionally injured his wife. A former lady's maid to Lady Pollok informed the Court that she found a revolver under a pillow in Sir Hugh's bed-room, and that she often heard Sir Hugh firing a pistol, mostly in the night-time. The walls of the room and press-door were marked with shots. on one occasion he turned her out of the bed-room, and previous to this witnes heard something like body falling from the bed to the floor. Lady Pollok had to be carried to another room by a visitor and a footman, but Sir Hugh attacked her, and seized her by the throat. The gentleman who was assisting in carrying Lady Pollok to another room, finding remonstrance unavailable, knocked Sir Hugh down; but as his host promised to behave himself, he was allowed to get up.

[illegible] to Lynch's character. It is related of him that one [illegible] a lawyer—who is [illegible] of the Green Isle—was arguing a somewhat tedious case before him, when Lynch having satisfied himself as to the merits of the case, and dreading a lengthy speech, said quite abruptly to the voluble attorney, whom we shall name Hagan:

'Mister Hagan, sit down sir!'

The attorney, with a coolness that was refreshing, paid not the slightest attention to the command, and proceeded with his argument.

'Mister Hagan,' said Lynch, rather more pointedly. 'take your seat sir!'

The lawyer scarcely noticed the interruption, but plunged ahead as vigorously as ever.

'Mr. Sheriff, sate Mr. Hagan!'

The sheriff hesitated a moment to see if his superior was in earnest, when suddenly the irate magistrate, with an attempt to smother his wrath that was a very palpable failure he exclaimed;

'Mister Hagan, go on thin!'

Then, whispering to the clork, he relaxed into a listening attitude, remaining perfectly quiet for some hour and a half. at which time the lawyer havidg exhansted the subject, and having exhausted himself, sank into a chair and saturated an extensive pocket handkerchief with the copious perspiration that beaded his legal brow.

Lynch raised himself slowly in his chair, and inquired very mildly, 'are you through Mr. Hagan?'

'Yes, sir.'

'Are ye sure you're through?'

'Yes sir, quite sure.'

'Well, sir,' remaked Lynch, 'your argument had no more effect upon the Court than a spoonful of water on the back of a duck. There's been judgment entered up against ye for an hour or more.

The church at Mellonville, Florida held a fair recently (without any grab bags), to provide a home for its pastor. The proceeds were $250, which sum was invested in a farm ot ten acres, within a half mile of the church. The children of the Sunday-school are raising money to plant a grove of orange trees on the lot. It will afford room for 560 orange trees, which at twelve years of age, will yield 3,000 or 4,000 oranges each; and those at $20 per thousand will yield an income for the pastors family after his death.

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

☞ ☞ ☞

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it mus hold above all others in the market.

One day last week, a man mowing on the Kankakee marsh killed eleven rattle snakes, the largest having eleven rattles The next day his son killed two, the largest having nineteen rattles.

'Our wheat crop is now safely harvested' and is a very fair one; hardly an average one, but very fair, and the quality is good. Corn is looking well; although much of it was blown down by the late severe winds, it has raised up again uninjured.—Plymouth Democrat.

From observation and inquiry, we are of the opinion that the wheat crop of this county will not be much larger than one half an average crop this season. The weather has been very favorable for securing it, thus insuring a good quality.—Eckhart Review.

A few days since, twin children of Abraham Hyer, living near Waverly, were playing with a can in which there was some kerosene. They set fire to it. It exploded and burned them so severely that both have since died from the effect.—Miami County Sentinel.

It has been ascertained that the "spots on the sun" are monster holes, some of them having a depth of 2,260 miles The spots, or holes are constantly undergoing changes, presenting a most remarkable and awe-inspiring appearance to the observer.

A fearful combat with a monstrous reptile took place in Peoria, recently, according to a local paper, which says: 'A rural gentleman, visiting a friend in the 3d Ward, found in the back yard, after dusk an immense snake lying in the grass.—He procured an axe and when he had chopped the reptile into about a dozen places, he discovered it to be a garden hose which had not been properly hung up in the coal shed.'

This is the way they caged a rhinoceros at Ithaca, according to a local paper: 'A cable chain was attached to each of his legs, and one around his neck, and these were coupled to locomotives on each of our railroads The engines were then started. Pulling in five different directions, his behemothship had nothing left to fight with but his tail, and that was lashed to a church spire by a wire rope. Being rendered harmless by these guys, a new wagon was built around him, and thus he was secured.'

Five young Belgians lately laid a wager that they would remain awake continuously for seven days. They kept up all manner of exciting exercises, and drank large quantites of coffee, and one of them won the bet, though with the loss of twenty-five pounds in weight. Two fell asleep after one hundred thirty hours, one was seized with inflamation of the lungs and had to give in to save his life, and the other fell asleep on horseback and then fell off and broke his arm.

A dreadful accident is reported by the Goshen Times, by which Elsie Moreland, a little girl three years old, in Locke township, met a terrible death on the 1st inst., while playing with her little mates in the flouring mill at that place. Her clothing was caught by the shaft of the mill, and poor little girl was carried around the shaft from thirty-four to forty times a minute for fifteen or twenty minutes. Of course she was teribly mangled, and life was extinct when she was discovered and extracted from the shaft.

Take Away Your Thumb.

A couple of sharpers named Dick and Tom, were once traveling through Illinois when they found it necessary to make a raise. As it was a rather religious neighborhood, they determined to pass as ministers, and take up a collection. Now, Dick was an eloquent speaker, but could not read, while Tom was vice versa. So it was arranged that Dick should preach, while Tom was to sit behind him in the pulpit and read the text Sunday came, and our heroes were on hand. Dick arose opened the Bible and designated the text by placing his thumb to it, while Tom began in a low voice:

'And Aaron said unto Moses.'

Dick, (repeating aloud,)—'And Aaron said unto Moses.'

Tom, (in a whisper)—'Take away your thumb.'

Dick, (with stentorian emphasis)—Take away your thumb.'

Tom, 'Now you've played thunder.'

Dick, (roaring like a third rate tragedian)—'Now you've played thunder.'

What else happened we are not informed, but it is reasonable to suppose that the collection did not equal the surprise of the audiance after this announcement

A few days ago Solomon Barkman, of Four Corners, Jenning county, mistook his brother Mortimer for a turkey and shot him, inflicting a dangerous wound.

A Hero.

FORT WAYNE, Ind., July 18,

As Mr. Stephen Chase, constable of Washington township, was riding on horseback to his father's last night, who lives about three miles from the city, he had occasion to cross the track of the Grand Rapids & Indiana railway, and discovered that a large hickory tree had fallen directly across the track in the woods. It was then about dark and a passenger train would be along in two hours. He rode to his father's nearly a quarter of a mile, procured an ax, and had cut one end of the tree when the ax slipped and went into his left foot, cutting it half off. He remounted the log, cut off the other end, and rolled it on one side, leaving a clear passage for the train. He then jumped on his horse and gallopped home through the rain to look after his foot.

The Fort Wayne Sentinel says, that on Sunday night, Charels E. Campbell, a brakeman on the P. F. W. & C. R. R., while coupling cars at the freight house of that road, was caught between two cars the bumpers striking him on the left breast crushing in and fracturing the ribs which wounded the lung, consequently when the man breathes the air passes through through the epidermis, which is puffed up. The man can not possibly recover, as the pulsations of the heart can scarcely be heard, there being only a faint murmuring like that given by the vibrating of a watch spring, and no beating of the heart can be felt. The side of the body is badly bruised and the upper ribs being fractured, and the lung perforated by them, it seems impossible for the man to live. Yet strange things happen. Had he been struck a little lower he would have been instantly killed.

The painful news reaches us from Washington that the most serious remonstrances have been made against the appointment of John A. Bingham of Ohio, as Minister to Japan, not on account with his connection with the Credit Mobilier scandal, but because of his intemperate habits. Ever since the hanging of Mrs. Suratt this vice has been growing upon him, until it has now become open and notorious. Refused a nomination last summer by the people of his Congressional district Mr. Bingham has been promoted to the higher dignity of representing this nation at the capital of Japan's thirty million of population. In view of the fact Mr DeLong owed his removal to charges to those similar made against his successor, it is impossible to account for the appointment. It would seem as if we were anxious to reveal our worst vices to a people anxious to study American civilization. It is singularly improper that a man who constantly under the influence of liquor should be commissioned to disgust, by his habits, the keenest and most progressive people of Asia. If Japan regards it as an insult, the blame must rest upon the power that commissioned the new embassador.—Graphic.

A Radical Congressman, who voted for and pocketed the back pay upon the foolish notion that whatever breeze it might excite it would soon blow over, is of the opininon that "quite enough discussion" has already been had upon this topic, and naturally thinks it ought to be dropped. There is probably more than one inculpated salary-grab felon who is of the same opinion. But the people think differently. There is an immese fund to be drawn upon yet on account of this same salary increase, and those who were guilty of voting for it, or sharing in the plunder afterwards, will never cease to hear the last of it. It is a "dammed spot" that won't out at the mere bidding. Every one of the fellows who confederated to take this money has been stricken with a political dry rot, which is populating political graveyards all over the country much more rapidly than the celebrated one which Cumback established four years ago. The member from this District, Tyner by name, is one of the class. After four years of insignificance at Washingeon, he succeeded in drawing public attention to his official life by participating in an act of such odium as to be universally denounced the country over. It was his complicity in the salary fraud, and the sneaking manner in which he attempted to escape responsibility, that for a moment gave him a little prominence. Like a putrifying corpse he rose to the surface as putrification set in, then sank forever out of sight.

The people won't forget these men—can't forget them. Without any party distinction they must all go down alike to a common political grave. From Morton to Tyne, and all through the lists, there is the same universal and emphatic condemnation of the act and the actors.—Logansport Pharos.

Telegraph Ticks.—An Amusing Episode at a Hotel Breakfast Table.

Two young men, telegraph operators board at one of our third class hotels, and being of a somewhat hilarious disposition and finding great amusement in carrying on conversation with each other at the table by ticking on their plates with knife, fork or spoon. For the information of those not acquanted with telegraph, it may be well to state that a combination of sounds or ticks constitute the telegraphic alphabet, and persons familiar with those sounds can converse thereby as intelligently as with spoken words. The young men lightning strikers as already stated were in the habit of indulging in table-talk by this means whenever they desired to anything private to each other. For instance,

No. 1 would pick up his knife and tick off such remark as this to No. 2;

'Why is this butter like that offence of Hamlet's uncle?

No. 2 'I give it up.'

No1. 'Because its rank and smells to Heaven.'

Of course the joke is not appreciated by the landlord who sits close by, because he does not understand the telegraph ticks and probably he wouldn't appreciate it much if he did; but the jokers enjoy it immensely and laugh immoderately, while the other guests wonder what can be the occasion for their merriment, and concluded the operators are idiots.

A few days ago, when these fun loving youths were seated at breakfast a stout built young man entered the dining room with a handsome girl on his arm, whose blushing countenance showed her to be a bride. The couple had in fact been married but a day or previous, and had come to San Francisco from their home in Oakland or Mud Spring, or some other villiage, for the purpose of spending the honey moon. The telegraphic tickers comenced as soon as they seated themselves.

No. 1 opened the discourse as follows:

'What a lovely pigeon this is alongside of me—ain't she?'

No. 2—Yes perfectly charming, looks as if butter wouldn't melt in her mouth. Just married I guess; don't you think so?

No. 1—yes I should judge she was. What lucious lips she's got! If that country bumpkin beside her was out of the road I'd give her a hug and a kiss just for luck!

No 2—Suppose you try it, give her a little nudge under the table, with your knee.

There is no telling to what extent the young rascals might have gone, but for an amazing and entirely unforseen event. The briegroom's face had flushed and a dark scowl was on his brow during the progress of the ticking conversation; but the operators were too much occupied with each other to pay attention to him. The reader may form some idea of the young men's consternation when the pardner of the lady picked up his knife and ticked off the following terse but vigerous message to them.

'This lady is my wife, and as soon as she gets through with her breakfast I propose to wring both your necks—you insolent whelps.'

The countenance of the operators fell very suddenly when the message commenced. But by the time it had ended they had lost all appetite and appreciation of jokes, and slipped out of the dining room in a very rapid and unceremonious manner. It seems that the bridegroom was a telegraph operator, and 'knew how it was himself.'

A Living Death.

The horrors of too hasty dispcsition of corpses is shown in a shocking case of which the Fort Wayne Gazette tells. Mr. R. P. Mink, of Kalamazoo Michigan, road master on the Grand Rapids Indiana railroad, died last Monday under very remarkable circumstances. While directing his groom in the attendance on the horses, he suddenly dropped and, as was supposed, expired. The weather being warm, the body was packed in ice and brought down to this city, en route for Valparaiso, Indiana, for interment. Arriving at the destination where full preparations had been made for the funeral, the friends and relatives were thunderstruck to find evident signs of life about the body. It perspired freely. The funeral was of course delayed, and yesterday afternoon the blood flowed freely. Restoratives were applied but without effect, and R. P. Mink is now a dead man, but it is past question that he was consigned to the icy tomb while life was still abundent, as the fact of his having so well withstood the awful confinement attests.

THE FRIEND'S BURIAL.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

My thoughts are all in yonder town,
Where, wept by many tears,
To-day my mother's friend lays down
The burden of her years.

True as in life, no poor disguise
Of death with her is seen,
And on her simple casket lies
No wreath of bloom and green.

O not for her the florist's art,
The mocking weeds of woe;
The blessings of the voiceless heart,
The love that passeth show!

Yet all about the softening air
Of new-born sweetness tells,
And the ungathered May-flowers wear
The tints of ocean shells.

The old assuring miracle
Is fresh as heretofore;
And earth takes up its parable
Of life from death once more.

Here organ swell and church-bell toll
Methinks but discord were,
The prayerful silence of the soul
Is best befitting her.

No sound should break the quietude
Alike of earth and sky;—
O wandering wind in Seabrook wood,
Breathe but a half-heard sigh!

Sing softly, spring-bird, for her sake,
And thou not distant sea,
Lapse lightly as if Jesus spake,
And thou wert Galilee!

For all her quiet life flowed on
As meadow streamlets flow,
Where fresher green reveals alone
The noiseless way they go.

From her loved place of prayer I see
The plain robed mourners pass,
With slow feet treading reverently
The graveyard's springing grass.

Make room, O mourning ones, for me,
Where, like the friends of Paul,
That you no more her face shall see
You sorrow most of all.

Her path shall brighten more and more
Unto the perfect day;
She cannot fail of peace who bore
Such peace with her away.

O sweet, calm face, that seemed to wear
The look of sins forgiven!
O voice of prayer that seemed to bear
Our own needs up to heaven!

How reverent in our midst she stood,
Or knelt in grateful praise!
What grace of Christian womanhood
Was in her household ways!

For still her holy living meant
No duty left undone;
The heavenly and the human blent
Their kindred loves in one.

And if her life small leisure found
For feasting ear and eye,
And pleasure, in her daily round,
She passed unpausing by.

Yet with her went a secret sense
Of all things sweet and fair,
And beauty's gracious providence
Refreshed her unaware.

She kept her line of rectitude
With love's unconscious ease;
Her kindly instincts understood
All gentle courtesies.

An inborn charm of graciousness
Made sweet her smile and tone,
And glorified her farm-wife dress
With beauty not its own.

The dear Lord's best interpreters
Are humble human souls;
The Gospel of a life like hers
Is more than books and scrolls.

From scheme and creed the light goes out,
The saintly fact survives;
The blessed Master none can doubt
Revealed in holy lives.

HUMANE TREASON.

Story of an Aged Jurist.

Our District Court was in session, and in the evening, during the recess, a small party of us were assembled in the private room of the presiding judge, a man fully up to three-score-and-ten, with but one guiding light while upon the bench—justice, strict and impartial; and to while away the time, he told us a story, as follows:

"Years ago I was Prosecuting Attorney for my judicial district. I was young then—a little more than thirty—but had worked hard to instruct and improve myself in my profession. When I became District Attorney I meant to do my duty, and as I felt myself, in a measure, pitted against the whole bar, I gathered my strength, and prepared to marshal all the forces at my command.

"At length came what I had long desired—a capital trial. It was a case of murder, seemingly of the most atrocious character. The Attorney-General came down to attend, but when he found how well I understood the case, and how thoroughly I had prepared myself, he did not propose to bother himself. He would leave me to conduct the prosecution, holding himself in readiness to render assistance, or offer suggestions, in case of need.

"The case came on, and I presented the Government's complaint, and the grounds therefor. The prisoner at the bar was Charles Ashcroft, a young man of five-and-twenty—intelligent and handsome—and about the last man in the world one would have selected as a murderer. Yet he stood thus charged, and the evidence was overwhelming against him.

"The facts, as elicited in evidence, were these: Ashcroft had been a teacher in the academy of the town where he resided, and where the killing had been done. He had waited upon a young lady, named Susan Lattimer, and had evidently loved her very dearly; but it seemed that Susan was not inclined to be constant. A wealthy suitor presented himself for her hand, and she cast off the poor pedagogue and accepted the new-comer.

"One Saturday afternoon Susan Lattimer went on foot to visit an uncle who lived two miles distant, and to shorten the way she took the cart-path through a wood that stretched down between the two sections of the town. Shortly after she was seen to enter this wood, Charles Ashcroft was seen to follow with a double-barreled gun upon his shoulder. Susan Lattimer went to her uncle's, but finding only a servant of the family at home, she started back at once by the way she had come.

"In the wood, on her return, she was met by Ashcroft, who stopped her, and upbraided her for her desertion of him. Two girls—one fourteen years of age, and the other a year younger—who had gone to the wood for the purpose of gathering beech-nuts, passed the twain while they were conversing, and heard Ashcroft 'swearing terribly,' as they expressed it, at Miss Lattimer. They heard him declare that he 'would as lief die as not;' and they heard her say, 'Don't kill me!' At this point the altercation frightened them, and they ran away.

"Charles Ashcroft returned to his boarding-place, pale and agitated, with both barrels of his fowling-piece empty, but with no game. Later, the body of Susan Lattimer was found in the wood, not far from where the altercation had taken place. She had been shot dead, the whole of one side of the face and head having been shockingly torn by a heavy piece of pigeon-shot, evidently discharged with deliberate aim, and at a very short distance. Some of the shot was extracted, and exhibited to a storekeeper in the village, who unhesitatingly declared that it was exactly such shot as he had sold on the same Saturday to Ashcroft.

"In response to this Ashcroft could only deny, in the most solemn manner, that he had thought or offered harm of any kind to the deceased. He admitted the truth of the statement made by the two girls; and he admitted that he had purchased the shot as the storekeeper had said. His story was, that on that Saturday afternoon he had gone into the wood to shoot pigeons. He did not know that Miss Lattimer had gone that way. He met her unexpectedly, and foolishly allowed himself to give vent to his feeling of indignation. For words spoken on the occasion he hardly felt himself responsible. In fact, he could not remember what he did say. After talking until they had both become exhausted by intensity of feeling, and Miss Lattimer had fallen to crying bitterly, he bade her farewell, and told her he had troubled her for the last time. She sat down upon a log by the side of the path, still crying, and asked him to leave her. He obeyed her, and saw her not again until he saw her dead. In explanation of the empty barrels of his gun, and no game, he said that he had met Miss Lattimer before he had seen any pigeons, and that after leaving he had no heart to sport. He had discharged his piece into the empty air, as he never allowed himself to deposit a loaded gun in a dwelling-house.

"There is no need that I should give you the details of the trial. Suffice it for me to say that I felt my reputation at stake as Prosecuting Attorney. The State was my client, and she demanded that I should succeed. Able lawyers were arrayed against me, with money and social power to back them, and I must overcome them in the combat, if I could. I marshaled my forces, and disposed them in the best possible manner. I threw my whole soul into the work, and used every means possibly presented. I took the connection of the prisoner with the homicide as granted. Then I drew a picture of the murder, which made the jury shudder and quake as they sat; and I demanded that outraged justice should be vindicated; that the community should be protected; that our homes, and our highways, and our byways, should be safe to the innocent ones whom we loved. I held the prisoner up in colors so frightful and hideous that he fainted outright in his box; and then this circumstance I caught up and turned against him. I fairly carried the jury by storm; and our sympathetic and good-hearted Chief Justice had allowed all his sympathies to be expended upon the distressed and heart-broken parents and brothers and sisters of the deceased. The counsel for the prisoner were outflanked and overpowered, and they struggled hopelessly. In the end a verdict of murder in the first degree was rendered, and the prisoner was sentenced to be executed.

"I was jubilant and proud at the close of the trial; and both bench and bar joined in complimenting me. I went to my home, expecting my wife to congratulate me warmly. She had been present through most of the trial, and had witnessed my triumph. But she said not a word. When I asked her if she did not join with me in gratitude for my success, she shook her head.

"'I am proud of my husband's legal fame,' she said, 'but I cannot feel grateful in the present instance. I think, Edward, you have condemned an innocent man!'

"The words struck me like a bolt of lightning—not only the words, but the more than human feeling with which they had been spoken. I recovered myself, and laughed at the gentle woman for her misplaced sympathy. I asked her to look at the evidence.

"'Look at what evidence?' she demanded. 'There are unseen evidences as strong as those which are palpable to sight and hearing. The heart feels them, and the calm judgment indorses them. As I live, I do not believe Charles Ashcroft ever knowingly or willingly did harm to that dead girl. He knows no more how she met her death than do I.'

"The flurry of conquest was over, and in my own sanctuary I sat down and reflected. I took up now the case for the defendant, and went over the whole business from beginning to end. Shutting out the evidence directly implicating the prisoner, there was no human being who could have believed him guilty. What, then, was this evidence? Did it directly connect him with the killing? No. Only circumstantially was he connected therewith. Was it possible that some one else could have done the deed? Aye, a thousand times. Was it more probable that some one else did it than that Ashcroft did it? Here was the rub. I had seen guilt in many forms, and I had seen innocence accused. I had seen the guilty wretch attempt to hide his guilt, and had heard him deny it in toto. And here came in the evidence which my wife experienced, and which I could feel, but which never could be presented to a jury of ordinary men with moving power. In the bearing of the prisoner there had not been one shadow of that brazen impudence which is sure to crop out somewhere, or somehow, in the demeanor of guilt long struggling to affect innocence. Nor had he displayed the despair of a hopelessly entrapped criminal. On the contrary, he had presented, as I could calmly review the scene, a crushed and broken heart—a manhood struggling under a frightful incubus, and a shivering, shuddering sensitiveness under the suspicions resting upon him. Now that I had won the victory, I could afford to judge without prejudice, and I found myself, ere long, in trouble. I had condemned the man; I had consigned him to the gallows.

"'How—how could she have come to her death if he did not kill her? What other way is possible?'

"I had mused aloud at this point, and my wife had heard me.

"'There are many ways,' she said, with a directness which showed that her thoughts had been in company with my own. 'Ashcroft left her sitting upon a log, crying. When she got up to start again for home she blundered along almost blindly, thinking of nothing but the betrayed lover she had sent from her. There have been plenty of pigeons in these woods, and others beside Charles Ashcroft were in all probability hunting there that Saturday afternoon. Did you never hear of persons being shot by sheer accident in such places? What more easy than for Susan Lattimer to have suddenly come into range of a gun already aimed, with the finger of its owner pressing the trigger?'

"'But,' I cried, startled at the thought, 'had such an accident occurred, the man would have come forward and owned it.'

"'It was not a man; it was a boy,' said my wife, 'and the catastrophe frightened him out of his wits—a boy who knows not the grades of homicide—who fears that the gallows would follow a revelation of the deed.'

"I cannot tell you, gentlemen, how that thing worked upon my mind. I came to the belief that my wife had truly solved the problem; and the more I reflected, the more firmly became that solution fixed in my faith. The time for Ashcroft's execution was drawing near. How could I save him? There was but one way. A new trial without some new evidence was out of the question. I must set him free. I could not see him hanged. I visited him in his cell, and came away morally certain that he was innocent. I asked my wife if she had the will and the courage to help that man to break his bonds. She flashed in the glory of her woman's power like an impatient soldier. I told her I would set her on the track, but I must not know how the work was done, nor where the prisoner had gone. She comprehended and agreed. I lent my official influence to gain her access to the jail, and she did the rest. She came home one night radiant like a saint who has had a glimpse of heaven. On the following morning I was informed that the condemned man had escaped. I asked my wife no questions and she offered no information.

"Search was instituted, but no trace of the fugitive could be found. The time set for the execution passed, and not many days thereafter an honest farmer, living near to the uncle whom Susan Lattimer went to visit that Saturday afternoon, came to me in great tribulation. His son, a boy of fourteen, had confessed the shooting of Miss Lattimer. I went over with the father, and saw the boy. I found him sick nigh unto death, his life worried away by the fearful secret which he had held gnawing in his bosom. I promised him that no harm should come to him, and he brightened up. It was exactly as my wife had suggested. The lad had seen a pigeon upon a tree, and had crept into a clump of bushes on the opposite side of the cart-path, in order that he might raise his gun without frightening the bird. He had cocked his piece and taken aim, and his finger was pressing the trigger when Miss Lattimer, with her head bent down, came directly before the muzzle. She had come like a dark shadow between him and the bird, and not until his piece had been discharged did he know who had thus suddenly obstructed his sight. When he had leaped out from his cover and seen the fearful work he had done, he was for a moment paralyzed with a terror that was awful. Soon the phantom of Murder appeared to his appalled sense, and he ran away and hid. And from that time he suffered, until his secret was so near killing him that he had to let it out.

"I returned home and asked my wife if she knew where Charles Ashcroft was. She said she knew. I told her what I had discovered, and bade her bring him back. On the very next day Ashcroft appeared and delivered himself up at the jail.

"The final result you can easily comprehend. At the new trial the boy was able to attend, and Charles Ashcroft was set at liberty with but little ceremony, his character fully cleared from even the appearance of guilt, and his friends multiplied in number.

"And so the life of an innocent, high-minded man was saved. He would have been surely hanged had he remained in prison to the appointed day. People said it was an interposition of Providence. They little dreamed how much of that precious Providence lay in the subtle instincts and in the heart of my wife; nor did they suspect my own official treason. But I never blamed myself—never. And the teachings of that experience have served me well in the later years."

Reason in Dogs.

The Hon. S. L. M. Barlow owns a pair of thoroughbred Scotch deer-hounds, male and female. Their sinewy limbs, deep chests, slim muzzles, intelligent faces, and kindly dispositions make them ornamental additions to a gentleman's country-seat, and assert their claim to lineal descent from the stag-hound that lives in poverty as the companion of Sir Walter Scott. Being dogs of good education as well as blue blood, they seldom leave their master's residence, and treat less-favored quadrupeds with lofty contempt. About a week ago the male, who wags his tail to the name of Walter, followed the farm-cart to a neighbor's house. A very large and ferocious mastiff possessed prior dog privileges there. Instead of receiving his visitor with becoming hospitality, he assaulted him savagely, and in a few minutes injured him so badly that he was carried home in the cart. The mastiff's teeth inflicted a bad wound in Walter's chest, almost perforating it from side to side. He refused to submit to human surgery, but tried a remedy taught him by instinct. In the moist earth on the border of a fish-pond he dug a hole that just fitted his breast. He chose a shady place for his hospital, and never left it, except for his meals, until he was cured. During the tedious hours of convalescence his mate was constantly with him. After five days he considered himself well. Then the pair went from the house, and going straight to where the mastiff lived, without warning or giving him any other living show, they set upon him. The fight was short, sharp and decisive. Before their victim's owner could render assistance they had torn the mastiff limb from limb. After seeing their work well done, they turned and jogged home.—New York Sun.

The Guano Supply.

The British Consul at the port of Callao, in Peru, in his annual report contradicts the rumor of further discoveries of guano deposits. The Guanape Islands possess still some 500,000, and the Macabee Islands about 750,000 tons. This information is down to last November, when there were forty-seven vessels at the former islands loading at the rate of 600 tons per day, and fifteen ships at the Macabee Islands loading at the rate of over 300 tons per day. The Lobos Islands, further north, have 750,000 tons at the most. The whole exportable guano now left in Peru may be safely estimated as under three million tons, which will supply the demand only for a very few years. It seems that seals and sea lions in great numbers frequent the islands where guano is found, and that it is probable that this deposit is made by these animals as much as by birds. An American, Mr. Steele, from Michigan University, corroborates this view of the British Consul. He has analyzed specimens deposited by seals, and has found them perfectly analogous to the guano of commerce.

Factory Slavery.

A correspondent of the Providence Press gives some interesting information about factory life in Rhode Island forty years ago. During summer the operatives were worked 14 hours a day, beginning at 4:30 in the morning, and working until 7:30 or 7:45 in the evening, with half an hour for breakfast and three-quarters of an hour for dinner. In winter the hour for closing at night was 7:30, except on Saturdays, when they quit work at dark. This was continued for years, until a young girl employed in one of the factories died after a brief illness. Physicians decided that the cause of her death was overwork. The mill owners then held a meeting and resolved to shorten the time of labor to twelve and three-quarters hours in summer. Overseers received about $8 per week. They were cruel taskmasters, and beat and abused the operatives most brutally. One boy was lifted from the floor by the hair of his head by an overseer, and held until the hair came out by the roots. In a manufacturing village, near Providence, a rope was tied around the waist of a young girl, and she was hung from the window over a stream 30 feet below. She died from fright. The situation of the factory operatives has been much ameliorated within the past 40 years, but there is room for improvement.

Railroad Progress in the United States.

[From the New York World.]

The commencement of railroad enterprise in this country was in 1830, the year in which the Liverpool and Massachusetts line was opened in England, and Stephenson's locomotive was first brought into use. In that year twenty-three miles were opened of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, the first undertaking of the kind here. This line was, however, for two years thereafter worked by horse-power. The number of miles opened in the United States each year since that date is given by Mr. Henry V. Poor, in his Manual of the Railroads, as follows:

MILES OF RAILROADS OPENED EACH YEAR.

Year.	Miles in operation.	Annual increase of mileage.	Year.	Miles in operation.	Annual increase of mileage.

1850	9021	1656	1871	60677	7779

The number of miles constructed in the decade ending in 1840 was 3,515; in that ending with 1850 it was 5,508; in that ending with 1860 it was 21,614; and in that ending with 1870 it was 22,764. The greater number of miles constructed in any one year was in 1871, in which 7,453 miles were opened. The progress of railroads, as will be seen by reference to the table, was seriously interrupted during the war of secession; for during the four years of its continuance only 3,273 miles were opened—4,180 miles less than were opened during the year 1871.

A glance at the above table further shows that the progress of railroads in this country was very backward till the gold discoveries of 1848. At the close of that year we had less than 6,000 miles in operation, of which 1,276 were in New England, 2,518 miles in the Middle, and 1,523 in the Southern States, and but 679 miles in the Great West; while the Pacific slope had not a mile of railroad. By the close of 1860, just previous to the beginning of the war, the mileage had increased more than fivefold, or to over 30,000 miles, of which 11,064 were in the Western States and 23 in the Pacific. And in eleven years more, notwithstanding that four of them were spent in the war, the mileage of railroads in the Union just about doubled, the Western States by this time having in operation more than 28,000 miles of road.

The following table gives the distribution of railroads through the various sections of country at four decennial periods:

For the figures which we have thus far given, we are indebted to Mr. Poor's Manual. The Railway Monitor, in its estimate of the status of our railroad system as it stood on the 1st of January of the present year, varies slightly from these figures, as it gives the mileage of railroads in operation at the end of 1872 (a year later than Mr. Poor's figures extend) at 70,178 miles, of which 2,083 are in the Territories and Indian country. This that journal states to be an increase of 7,613 miles in the year—rather less than the increase of 1871, which it puts down at 7,878, but more than the increase of 1870, which it places at 7,433. The Monitor further states that 43,000 additional miles of railroad were in various stages of preparation at the beginning of the present year, which, when completed, will increase the grand total to over 113,000 miles.

Newspapers in India.

From returns lately published, we learn that there are in India 315 different newspapers, of which 68 are English, 36 in the dialect which passes as English among the natives, and 211 are in the native language. One among them, sold at a pice, or farthing, is perhaps the lowest priced newspaper in the world. The number of readers of India is very small, and it is the practice for crowds to assemble and listen to one reader, and in this way news is dispersed with remarkable rapidity. At the beginning of the present century there were not more than five newspapers in India.—Chamber's Journal.

A SCRANTON household is enjoying an era of peace. The lady of the house put her tongue to a flat iron to see if it was hot.

"TO MATE IN THREE MOVES."

Crimson the heart of the sea-coal fire,
Bessie and I, in the ruddy glow,
Her mother reads, and the old grandsire
Dreams of his youth in the "long ago."

Quiet and warmth, and love in the room,
Now or never my suit to press;
Where the hyacinths shed their sweet perfume,
We play two games—one love; one chess.

Queen of the red, and queen of my heart,
When will you wear my golden ring?
Flushing her cheeks the roses start,
Slyly she murmurs, "Check to your king."

My pawns advance, press on, and die;
The bishops battle in lines oblique;
My brave knights fall, but I can't tell why
My heart grows strong as my game grows weak.

Darling, answer me, lift your eyes;
Your mother sleeps, and the time approves;
Speak, sweet mouth, with a glad surprise;
"You'll be mated, sir, in three moves."

Then let this be one—and her dimpled hand
Looks all the fairer for a plain gold ring;
In vain I rally my scattered band
As again she checks my poor lost king.

Nearer her gold brown curls to mine,
The chess-men seem in a dark eclipse,
Check! Shall I die and make no sign?
And I steal a kiss from her ripe, red lips.

Mate!—and her joyous eyes proclaim
Who wins in love, and who by chess;
And the pride of my life is the golden game,
That was lost when I won my darling Bess.

A MYTH—The "gentlemanly hotel clerk" so much spoken of.

"TALK about the jaws of death," exclaimed a hen-pecked husband; "they are no circumstance compared to the jaws of life."

A BOARDING-HOUSE fiend tells the story that in a recent thunderstorm the warring of the elements was so awe-inspiring that the hair in a dish of butter in the pantry turned completely white during the night.

"CANNOT something be done to prevent young ladies being insulted on our streets at night?" asks a Cincinnati paper. There can. Just have the little girl's mother tuck her into her little bed about eight o'clock in the evening, and lock the door on her."

A CANDIDATE for the civil service recently gave up his examination in disgust, because he was asked how many bushels of wheat could be bought for ten dollars if one bushel cost forty cents. He said he had not learned anything about wheat, but he had always done his sums in potatoes and turnips.

WELL-INFORMED old lady to polite young tourist: "So you've come to see the beauties of the neighborhood, have you? Well, then, young man, there hain't none to see, for they're just all on 'em the plainest-faced, common-place wenches about these parts there is to be found in all the wide world, and so I'll tell 'ee."

OLD Mr. Franklin, of Cattaraugus county, New York, created a vast deal of excitement the other day by throwing a plowshare into the river, on account of his wife's incessant scolding. Mr. Franklin, it might be well to add, was attached to the weight by a rope; consequently, Mrs. F. has lost a husband, a plowshare, and three feet of good rope, just through a chronic propensity to wag her tongue!

THE Detroit Free Press says: "A boy about ten years old came blubbering into the Central Station yesterday noon, and when asked what the matter was, he replied: 'You see, I said my dog Sam could lick Billy O'Grady's dog Bose, and I'd bet stamps on it. Sam went to do it, an' he'd shook that pup sure, only Billy put snuff on his dog, and Sam got a-coughing and sneezing, and Bose floored him and chawed him till he couldn't holler—gimme a warrant for him."

FROM Des Moines: "A young lady passed up Walnut street, one morning recently, and immediately thereafter a bashful young store clerk discovered one of those indispensable accessories to a lady's complete toilet—a garter. He picked it up, and, hastily overtaking her, presented it with a graceful bow. 'Your necktie, miss.' She glanced at him once; a terrible meaning was implied in that look. She didn't wait a moment, and clerky was left standing with the beloved little thing in his hands and a crowd of boys hooting at his discomfiture."

A Flight of Ants.

A gentleman going to Chesterfield relates a strange experience which befell him about six miles from this city. While driving leisurely along in a top-buggy he came upon a cloud of what he supposed to be gnats; the further he advanced the thicker they got, until it was with difficulty he could make any progress at all. The horse was interfered with in breathing, and even the hat which he held before his face failed to keep them from seriously incommoding his respiration. His little daughter was very much inconvenienced by the living cloud around her, and he says, without any exaggeration, he believes at least a peck could have been gathered from the inside of his buggy upon his arrival in Petersburgh. They proved to be winged ants instead of gnats, as he supposed. We would not relate this wonderful story did not the perfect truthfulness of our informant justify us in doing so.—Petersburgh (Va.) Index.

The New York Water-Works.

The water-works of New York city now have a storage capacity of 6,570,000,000 gallons, as follows: Distributing reservoir at Forty-second street, 20,000,000 gallons; Central Park reservoir, 1,150,000,000; Croton reservoir, or lake, 500,000,000; storage reservoir at Boyd's Corners, 3,000,000,000; natural lakes, 2,000,000,000. At the introduction of Croton water in 1842, and until 1848, the daily demand never exceeded 18,000,000 gallons. At that time the city had only 450,000 inhabitants; and in 1872, with a population of 1,000,000, the quantity required each day by thirsty Gotham was 88,000,000 gallons a year. From April 1, 1870, until April 1, 1871, the actual supply was 84,000,000 gallons a day, and from the 1st of April, 1871, to the 1st of April, 1872, it averaged 88,000,000 gallons. The present daily supply averages 95,000,000 gallons, indicating almost an alarming increase either in the use or waste of the water.

The Cost of Railroads.

It is estimated that the cost of railroads in this country average about $50,000 per mile, the total for the 70,178 being, in round numbers, $3,500,000,000. The roads constructed in 1871 are stated to have averaged $30,000 per mile, and to have cost in the aggregate $225,000,000 in, addition to which sum at least $50,000,000 were expended during the same year in new works and equipments on old roads, making a total expenditure during the year of $275,000,000. The 30,000 miles of railroad which were in operation in 1860 cost $1,070,000,000, of which amount perhaps more than one-tenth was foreign capital. The war did not stop our railroad building, but only checked it. During the five years ending 1865 we added nearly 5,000 miles to our network of railroads, besides providing for the expenses of the bloody contest. And so great has been railroad enterprise in the past seven years that money has been found to actually double our mileage in that short period of time, during which more miles of road have been constructed in the United States than in the whole of Europe. In fact, had we no more railroads than the 35,000 miles built in these seven years, we should then have a larger mileage than Germany, Austria, France, and Russia combined, with their 175,000,000 of population. The relative mileage, cost of construction, and rates to area of the railroads of the United States and Europe, with the density of population, are presented in the subjoined table:

RAILROADS OF EUROPE AND THE UNITED STATES COMPARED.

Countries.	Railroad, miles.	Inhabitants per sq. mile.	Sq. m. to R. R. mile.	R. R. cost per mile.
United States	70,178	14	43	$49,592
Germany	12,207	189	17	109,952
Austria	5,865	158	40	73,915
France	10,333	151	19	158,714
Russia in Europe	7,044	36	284	166,477
Great Britain	15,637	265	8	176,269
Belgium	1,301	430	9	106,987
Netherlands	886	236	15	97,202
Switzerland	820	175	18	87,134
Italy	3,667	225	29	89,714
Denmark	420	111	34	57,112
Spain	3,401	90	24	107,156
Portugal	453	99	81	101,311
Sweden & Norway	1,049	19	180	62,438
Greece	100	71	199	50,000

Thus it appears we have in this country, with its sparsely populated area, some 7,000 miles more railroads than all Europe, with its dense population.

It will be noticed that the comparative cost of our railroads and those of some of the European countries is very great; those of Great Britain, for instance, costing nearly four times as much per mile as ours. The whole cost of our 70,000 miles of road is about $3,436,638,750, which is a sum not very much greater than England has spent on her 16,000 miles of railroad.—New York World.

HORRIBLE CRUELTY OF MEXICAN BANDITS.—Among the passengers on the California, yesterday, was a little girl, aged about 12 years, who, with her mother, was on the way to friends in San Francisco. The child possessed a beautiful form and was endowed with winning graces of manner; but her features bore the marks of most atrocious cruelty. She had been captured by the savage troops of the bandit Chief Lozada, of Tepic, and the fiends (who had detained her as a hostage) becoming impatient at the non-payment of her ransom, burned her face in the most dreadful manner. She said that they held her down, and heaped the glowing coals from their camp-fire upon her face.—San Diego (Cal.) Union.

Reduction of Rates.

There is no one thing which the press in the large cities of the country has been more uniform and persistent in than in their persistent advocacy of such reduction in the premiums charged for life insurance as would bring that protection from want within the reach of every family. The National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America, E. A. Rollins, President, Jay Cooke, Chairman of Finance Committee, capital larger than that of any other life Company in the world, has placed its rates at about three-quarters of those charged by most companies, and wants an agent in every locality. It has the essential qualities of strength and cheapness, and we advise all looking for full or partial employment in life insurance to address the Company at Philadelphia.—[Com.

MEDICAL MANIACS.—There are numbers of medical men so wedded to the old formulas, that all changes seem to them like innovations. These medical maniacs are, fortunately, incapable of much mischief in this practical age. While the VINEGAR BITTERS are curing Indigestion, Nervous Debility, Constipation, and countless other diseases that defy the remedies of the pharmacopœia, it is impossible to thrust down the throats of intelligent invalids "heroic" doses of mineral poison, or to persuade them to take adulterated alcohol, impregnated with cheap astringents, as a "healing balm" or a "balsamic preparation." VINEGAR BITTERS, a pure botanical tonic and alterative, guiltless of the curse of distilled or fermented liquor, is actually accomplishing what the mineral and alcoholic cure-mongers have so incessantly promised but have never yet performed. Under these circumstances it is no wonder that this medicine has taken precedence of all those burning fluids miscalled tonics.—[Com.

AND now it appears that the Secretary of the Treasury refuses to indorse the appointment of Dr. Mary Walker to a clerkship. He misinformed her when she reported for duty.

FRANKLIN gave excellent advice to people who desired success in life; and yet his rules were by no means infallible. A man may, by industry and economy, accumulate a large amount of property, and in the end he may lose it. It is one thing to make money, and quite another to keep it. There is no doubt that a life insurance policy in a good company is a good investment in the majority of instances. The money is paid when the family most need it, and it is usually beyond the reach of creditors. We do not hesitate to recommend the New York Life Insurance Company as one of the strongest and best, to all who seek insurance.—[Com.

CALIFORNIA possesses two wonderful gold mines—the Belcher and the Crown Point—which in the last eighteen months have paid their stockholders the goodly sum of $11,000,000. The June dividend of Crown Point was paid recently, and amounted to $100,000. Since January last this mine and the Belcher mine have paid five monthly dividends, the totals of the former amounting to $3,432,000, and those of the latter to $3,100,000. Belcher has 104,000 shares, and Crown Point 100,000 shares, and since Jan. 1 of the present year the former has paid stockholders $33 per share on their investments.

Pimples, Eruptions and Rough Skin.

The system being put under the influence of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery for a few weeks, the skin becomes smooth, clear, soft, and velvety, and being illuminated by the glow of perfect health from within, true beauty stands forth in all its glory. Nothing ever presented to the public as a beautifier of complexion ever grve such satisfaction for this purpose as this discovery. The effects of all medicines which operate upon the system through the medium of the blood are necessarily somewhat slow, no matter how good the remedy employed. While one to three bottles clear the skin of pimples, blotches, eruptions, yellow spots, comedones, or "grubs," a dozen may possibly be required to cure some cases where the system is rotten with scrofulous or virulent blood poisons. The cure of all these diseases, however, from the common pimple to the worst scrofula is, with the use of this most potent agent, only a matter of time. Sold by all druggists. 650

KING OF THE BLOOD.—For dropsy. Case.—I was attacked with Abdominal Dropsy four years ago. I took medicine from five different doctors; I applied to the sixth, but he declined attempting my case, saying he thought me past remedy. Another thought he might help me if I would be tapped, but I was so weak I thought I could not bear it. I then saw your KING OF THE BLOOD advertised. My son said he would send to you for it, and did so. When I began to take it I could not lie down or sit up straight; by wearing a bandage I was able to walk a little. I had not put on my stockings for some months. Persons who visited me thought I could not live any length of time. I very soon felt that your medicine was helping me, and by the time I had used the second bottle I could put on my stockings, and began to feel comfortable. In two months the water was all gone, and I was a living skeleton; but my appetite was good, and I began to gain flesh, and I now look as well as I ever did and feel quite well. SARAH PENTZ,

PAIN KILLER—ITS MERITS.

ASIATIC CHOLERA IN CHINA.

TUNGCHOW, China, Aug. 23.

Messrs. PERRY DAVIS & SON:

Dear Sirs—During a long residence in China, I have used your invaluable Pain Killer, both in my own family and among the Chinese, and have found it a most excellent medicine. In the summer of '62 and '63, while residing in Shanghai, I found it an almost certain cure for Cholera, if used in time. Indeed, using it in a great many instances, I do not remember failing in a single case. For three years I have been residing in this place, more than fifty miles from a physician, and have been obliged often to fall back upon my own resources in cases of sickness. The Chinese come to us in great numbers for medicine and advice. Though without medical knowledge ourselves, the few simple remedies we can command are so much in advance even of their physicians, that we have almost daily applications. We allow them to come, because it brings us in contact with them, and opens a door to usefulness. In diarrhea, colic, vomiting, cholera, coughs, &c., your Pain Killer has been my chief medicine. Yours, very truly,
T. P. CRAWFORD.

ITS MERITS ARE UNSURPASSED.

If you are suffering from INTERNAL PAIN, Twenty to Thirty Drops in a little Water will almost instantly cure you. There is nothing to equal it. In a few moments it cures

Colic, Cramps, Spasms, Heart-burn, Diarrhea, Dysentry, Flux, Wind in the Bowels, Sour Stomach, Dyspepsia, Sick Headache.

In sections of the country where
FEVER AND AGUE
prevails, there is no remedy held in greater esteem. Persons traveling should keep it by them. A few drops, in water, will prevent sickness or bowel troubles from change of water.

From foreign countries the calls for PAIN KILLER are great. It is found to

Cure Cholera, when all other Remedies fail.

WHEN USED EXTERNALLY, AS A LINIMENT, nothing gives quicker ease in Burns, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Stings from Insects, and Scalds. It removes the fire, and the wound heals like ordinary cures. Those suffering with RHEUMATISM, GOUT, or NEURALGIA, if not a positive cure, they find the PAIN KILLER gives them relief when no other remedy will.

It Gives Instant Relief from Aching Teeth.

From 1840 to this day, 1870 (Thirty Years), PERRY DAVIS' PAIN KILLER has had no Rival.

Every Housekeeper should keep it at hand, to apply it on the first attack of any Pain. It will give satisfactory relief, and save hours of suffering.

Do not trifle with yourselves by testing untried remedies. Be sure you call for and get the genuine PAIN KILLER, as many worthless nostrums are attempted to be sold on the great reputation of this valuable medicine. Directions accompany each bottle.

Revolutions Never Go Backward.

The philosophical theory that the human system when weakened by disease, oppressive heat, excessive labor or any other cause, should be toned and invigorated instead of being subjected to the action of depleting drugs, is gaining ground every day. The introduction of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters twenty years ago gave a powerful influence to this common sense idea. As the extraordinary efficacy of the Great Vegetable Restorative became known, multitudes of debilitated invalids turned with loathing from the nauseous and strength-destroying potions with which it was then the fashion to drench the sick, to this renovating, appetizing, vitalizing preparation derived from the finest roots, herbs and barks placed by botanical research at the disposal of medical science. Revolutions never go backward. From that time to the present the importance of assisting and reinforcing nature in her struggles with disease has been more and more widely and keenly appreciated by the sick and the suffering. In tens of thousands of households Hostetter's Bitters are looked upon as the one thing needful in cases of Dyspepsia, General Debility, Constipation, Nervous Weakness, Chills and Fever, Bilious Affections and all conditions of the body and mind that betoken a lack of vital energy. When the quicksilver ranges high, and the solid flesh is resolving itself into a den under the fervid temperature, this agreeable tonic is the best possible safeguard against all the disorders generated by a sultry and unwholesome atmosphere. It prevents and relieves lassitude and languor, and enables the system to endure with impunity an unusual amount of exertion. Of all invigorating and regulating medicines, it is the purest and most wholesome.

Ayer's Ague Cure,

FOR THE SPEEDY RELIEF OF

Fever and Ague, Intermittent Fever, Chill Fever, Remittent Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical or Bilious Fever, &c., and indeed all the affections which arise from malarious, marsh, or miasmatic poisons,

Has been widely used, during the last twenty-five years, in the treatment of these distressing diseases, and with such unvarying success that it has gained the reputation of being infallible. The shakes, or chills, once broken by it, do not return until the disease is contracted again. This has made it an accepted remedy, and trusted specific, for the Fever and Ague of the West, and the Chills and Fever of the South.

Ayer's Ague Cure eradicates the noxious poison from the system, and leaves the patient as well as before the attack. It thoroughly expels the disease, so that no Liver Complaints, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Dysentery or Debility follows the cure. Indeed, where disorders of the Liver and Bowels have occurred from Miasmatic Poison, it removes the cause of them and they disappear. Not only is it an effectual cure, but, if taken occasionally by patients exposed to malaria, it will expel the poison and protect them from attack. Travelers and temporary residents in Fever and Ague localities are thus enabled to defy the disease. The General Debility which is so apt to ensue from continued exposure to Malaria and Miasm has no speedier remedy.

For Liver Complaints it is an excellent remedy.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Aug. 7, 1873

Massachusetts Republicans are organizing to defeat the nomination of Butler for oGvernor. Among those who are prominently connected in the movement are such national names as Judge Hoar, Congressman Dawes, ex-Speaker Jewell and others.

Which is the worse —the members of Congress who took back pay, or the President who took double pay? Each of these parties had agreed to do his work for a certain salary, but having the power they opened the till and grabbed more. In ordinary life this would be called stealing, and we notice that the people in many parts of the country regard it as stealing now.

"Do not desert the Republican party!" is the machine appeal to the farmers of the West. In other words Colfax, Bingham, Garfield, Pomeroy, Harlan, Allison, and the host of Congressmen who have grabbed $5,000 from the public Treasury, and are now receiving $625 a month for nothing. Those are the lights and leaders of the Republican party in the West. Those are the men whom the honest community is asked not to desert.

When the Shah of Persia was leaving England he presented his photograph set in diamonds to Lord Granville, the British Minister of Foreign Affairs. Lord Granville kept the picture but returned the diamonds, it being contrary to the law of England for a Minister to receive a present from a foreign monarch. If the King of Kings had visited this country, however, and tried his diamonds on Secor Robeson or any other of the Secretaries of the great Gift-Taker he would never have got them back again.

The following ticket was nominated at Columbus Ohio last Wednesday by what is now termed the Brinkerhoff convention.

For Governor. Isaac C. Collins (Dem), of Hamilton. Lieutenant-Governor A. Saunders Piatt (Lib. Rep.), of Logan. Attorney-General, Serapin Meyres (Lib.), of Stark. Supreme Judges, P. B. Ewing (Dem.), of Fairfield (long term). D. W. C. Louden (Lib.), of Brown (short term). Board of public works, James McBeth (A. C. Dem.), of Allen. Treasurer of State, Johnathan Harshman (Dem.), of Montgomery. Comptroller of the Treasury, C. P. L. Butler (Lib.), of Franklin.

WASHINGTON, July 28.—Private advices received here confirmed the substance of statements previously published regarding the health of the Vice President. The paralytic stroke has left Mr. Wilson's features in a somewhat distorted condition and impaired his speech. At present he is under treatment for the restoration of his general health, preparatory to a more severe mode of treatment which must be adopted for the cure of the paralysis. Mr. Wilson is kept upon severe regimen, and disposition of his entire time is made in accordance with his physician. He is forbidden all mental toil. It is by no means certain that he will assume the functions of his office at the coming session.

The Secretary of State still has the case of Carl Vogt under consideration. The Prussian Government demands posession of him under their extradition treaty with the U. S. The facts are stated to be that Vogt, a Prussian subject committed a murder in Belgium. The treaty gives Prussia a right to arrest all criminals for offences committed under Prussian jurisdiction. Prussia claims that jurisdiction by her laws extend to any place where a crime is committed by her citizens. The Secretary of State don't think it means so much. Belgium has no extradition treaty with the United States.

Ought this country to be made the refuge for murderers &c., because of a technicality in a treaty. A criminal should be brought to punishment by all fair means in every land, and especially in our own great country.

A correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says the belief is prevalent in Maryland that in Maryland that John A. J. Cresswell will be the next candidate of the Republican party for President. If Creswell should get the nomination he would be sure of the support of one man. Chorpenning would be certain to go for him, and Chorpenning is a man of very great influence—especially in the Post Office Department.—Sun.

Capt. Conner of the Kentland Gazette don't go much on politics nowdays. In this day of the Granges and other formidable movements, political gossip is somewhat out of order.—Monticello Herald.

Well, this paper is the same old "true blue" Republican sheet it always was, "Granges and other formidable movements" notwithstanding.—Indianian.

Why not add "right or wrong." That is about the spirit that prompts the declaration of such sentiments. In substance it means that if the people, tax paying class, rise up against corruption, and thieving, and Credit Mobelier, this paper will still be "true blue" to its party, no matter what the status of that party may be. We are glad we are not joined to our idol to such an extent that party is superior to the rights of the people.

THE SENATOR FROM OREGON.

John M. Hipple, alias John H. Mitchell, Senator elect from the State of Oregon, is petitioning his constituents for the privilege of being legally known by his alias. It matters nothing under what name this man goes. If John Mitchell Hipple is such an arrant scoundrel that he is afraid of his own name, the changing of it to John Hipple Mitchell will not efface the stains that blacken the character of of the man. A libertine and seducer in his youth, he sought to flee from the scenes of his lechery and place between them a stretch of country, over which the history of his transactions would not be carried, and that by dropping the name of his father, he would so far lose his identity that he would be safe from detection. But the "dammed spot" would not "out" at his bidding. The deserted wife and child in Pennsylvania were suffering in toil and poverty, while he, no longer the seducer Hipple, but the Senator Mitchell, was riding on the wave of political popularity. The Legislature of Oregon should refuse his petition, and let him go on through life bearing the name of Hipple, that he may be known and spotted by other women whom he may seek to allure from paths of rectitude.

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Warner's Menagerie and Pacific Combination will exhibit here on 18th. inst.

Culver is rushing the work on the bridge east of here. Dan is some on the rush.

Quite a number from this place will attend the show at Waterloo to-morrow.

A meeting of the Disciples of this county will be held at Cedar Lake, commencing on the 22d inst. Rev. L. L. Carpenter will officiate.

A grove and basket meeting will be held at the grove near J. R. Cosper's about four miles east of town on the 16th and 17th inst. Everybody invited.

Waterloo is making some good improvements, several new business houses being in course of erection. The sidewalks and streets are also receiving attention.

It is rumored that a daughter of John Tarney at Newville, while swinging lately jumped from the swing in such a manner as to break her thigh bone, and it is feared the leg will have to be amputated.

DeKalb County Medical Society, meets at Auburn, Ind., August 12th, 1873, at 1 o'clock p. m. Members of the profession invited to attend.

J. A. COWAN, Sec'y.

Circuit Court is now in session Judge Tousley presiding. The case of Sallenberger vs. Strauss involving a matter of $8,000 is dragging its slow length along. Baker, Chapin, and Plum, for plaintiff, Morris, Best, Penfield & Moody, for defendant.

On Monday Mr. Wadsworth, of the La-Porte Argus, and Mr. Thomas Fargher, on behalf of the late Excursionists, presented the senior proprietor of the Laporte Herald, C. G. Powell, Esq., with a superb gold headed cane, in testimony of their appreciation of his services in arranging for the recent newspaper excursion to Duluth.

ANOTHER CRASH.—The foundation wall on the south-east corner of the brick building occupied by Patterson Bros. at Waterloo gave way on last Monday, leaving down the walls on the east end and side, and making considerable of an opening. A foundation wall was being put in along side of the building which is said to have had something to do with the falling of the other.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—A young man, brakeman on the Ft. W. J. & S. R. R., named Lester Burdick, was killed at Ft. Wayne while coupling cars last Saturday The couplers slipped past each other allowing the cars to come together with him between A man was killed at Jackson the same way a short time ago. Johnny, as he was nicknamed, was a clever little fellow, and his comrads have the car draped in mouring as a mark of their esteem.

Wm. Krontz, living near Butler has been lodged in jail, after an examination on the charge of bastardy. One Miss Wineland is the plaintiff. William says he has been considered the black sheep of the flock. Naughty William takes it very philosophically averring that now is winter of his discontent made glorious summer, because he says after summer comes winter, a synonym for rest and peace. We are glad to state that William is a novice at playing checkers with his nose.

J. L. Randolph, Esq., chief engineer of of the B. & O. Road stopped here for dinner on Monday last. He visited the "big sink," and expressed himself entirely satisfied with the progress of the work. Mr. Randolph went west from here, on a tour inspection .... The Messrs. McKay Bros., contracters on the 8 miles of road thro' and near Albion, will, in a few days, have twenty-five construction cars on the line. They have proved themselves to be energetic, sagacious and honorable men— the right men in the right place.'—New Era.

Back Pay—No Steal!

In the case of the late Congress voting themselves back pay, there is no doubt about its being a steal. But a very few of our subscribers who are back on their pay to the COURIER will soon be classed with Salary Congressmen if they don't come up pretty soon and square their account. We mean those owing us for more than one year. There are several who have ordered the paper for one year and failed to pay for the same when the time was up. We have the names of those and if they do not pay us soon we propose to publish their names in a list of swindlers. We have the names of every-one, and while they are sitting around chuckling how nicely they have beat the printer, we have the day and date of their subscription, and as sure as Moses stood on the mountain and viewed the landscape o'er, we give their names to the public.—A fair warning.

We had the pleasure of holding the ribbons on one of the fastest teams in this part of the country. One was Scar-faced Charlie, and the other, Frank the fine pacer belonging to Dr. Chamberlain at Waterloo. They make a spanking team, and go dashing along at the rate of 2:40 and they do it so easy that it is a pleasure to see them move.

Large Boarding House to let, situated near the Odd Fellows' Hall. Enquire of Mrs. Mott or Guy Plum.

Our friends at Butler had a good time last Friday, carrying out the programme intended for the Fourth. A large number were present in the afternoon, and the fun opened with the wheel barrow race. In the evening the fire works came off and the balloon would have ascended had it not been badly torn in the inflation. The band played lively music, pleasing to everybody. In the evening the bower dance was under full sway, and a large number were present. The music was splendid, and you put a number of young folks, and old ones too, on a floor with such music, and if they don't enjoy themselves mark them down as totally depraved.

The day being warm Sheldon & Co., were kept busy supplying the thirsty crowd with refreshing soda water.

G. W. Gordon, our fellow townsman, is doing a lively business with his new gallery at this place, under that skillful and accomplished operator, Miss Delia Williams. This establishment is giving excellent satisfaction, furnishing pictures that please everyone. It is a difficult matter to suit everybody in the way of a pictures and yet this is being done at this popular gallery.

Auburn High School.

The fall term of the Auburn High School will commence Sept. 1st 1873. A full corps of first-class teachers will have charge of the school under the superintendency of A. R. Hoffman, of Northwestern Ohio Normal School. Classes will be organized in the English branches, German, Latin, Physiology and higher mathematics An attendance of foreign students is solicited for whom accommodation will be secured. Lectures will begin at stated times on moral and scientific subjects by the board of visitors. Special attention to those preparing themselves for teaching.

A. TOTTEN, Sec'y B. T.

Parties having rooms to rent or who can accommodate students with board will confer a favor by reporting the same to the Board of Trustees.

OUR SANATARY CONDITION.—At a meeting of the Town Bord last Monday evening the Board of Health, comosing the physicians of the place made a roport of the sanitary condition of our town. It was not a favorable one. The manner of keeping things in the rear of the brick and wooden blocks on main street was particularly condemned. Objection was made to the hides and other objectionable matter found at Mr. Long's butcher shop. The rendering establishment in the rear of Mr. Tarney's butcher shop was regarded as injurious to the health of the place. The terrible condition of the privies along these building was reported, the system of drains touched upon, and other matters spoken of necessary to the good health of the place. The hog law was strongly urged and the yarding of cows at night recommended. It is to be hoped that the Town Board will immediately abate these nuisances, and institute thorough, sanitary measures in every locality. It was strongly urged that every family be requested to disinfect their stables, pens privies at least once a week, and thus prevent sickness and ill health. This should be attended to without furthe notice, and no one should wait until the cholera is in our midst. Let all take heed, and by doing this contribute to the comfort and happiness of their neighbors.

The event of the season will be the advent of J. E. Warner's Great Pacific Combination, which will visit this city on Monday, Aug, 18th, giving two performances, afternoon and evening.—This institution, combining as it does a fine museum and menagerie, together with a magnificent circus comes to us laden with the highest encomiums of praise by both press and public that has ever been accorded to any show of its kind ever in this place, and we announce its coming with pleasure, but space forbids our entering into detailed account of its many attractions and we will only mention a few.

The prominent feature in the menagerie will be the famous performing elephant Sultan ; a cage of baby lions, born June 15, 1873; Herr Paul Schroff, and his school of educated animals; whilst in the circus department we find the name of Miles Orton, equestrian ; Miss Lizzie Keyes equestrienne; and Leona Dare, unquestionably the best female gymnast in the country, the happy trio of jesters, David A. Seal, T. S. Hall, and Porter ; in fact every portion of the entertainment is replete with novelties of superior quality, and the fact that Mr. Warner travelwith and manages his own show is of itself a sufficient guarentee that everything will be first class and of a high order. One very commendable feature, and one that will recommend itself, is the introduction into the circus tent of a few hundred cane seat chairs, which are securely fastened to the old fashioned circus seat, and provided with a back and foot rest, which are held as reserved seats for those who may desire them. In conclusion we would say to all lovers of amusement, go and see Warner on the 18th, and satisfy yourselves that we have not overdrawn the picture. General admission 50 cts.; cane seat chairs 25 cts. extra.

THE CIRCUS AND THE THEATRE.—At the circus you see beautiful horses, splendid men, physically, breathe pure air, and everything is bright and sweet and clean. Twenty years ago only the lower classes patronized the circus. If a gentleman in love with fine horses and handsome men wished to go so much that he could not keep away, he dared not venture unless he had a small boy with him "who would not take no, and so I had to go along, of course to take care of him." Now the circus has now become popular, and is now crowded with our best people. Compared with the theatre, with its suffocating atmosphere, artificial manners and speech and its not infrequent impurities of sentiment, the circus is a place of genuine pleasure and purity.—Dr. Dio Lewis.

The Great West.

Over Lakes and Prairies to Bismarck.

Incidents of the Editorial Excursion.

[CONCLUDED.]

This river is one continuous rapids for miles, over the rocky bed of which pours the rushing waters, creating one continuous scene of beauty of the greatest sublimity. We had a splend'd view from the road for a considerable distance, and like a grand panoramic view, the whole passed before us. Having got fairly under way we rode for miles through a fine forest of inferior pine timber. We stopped for dinner at on the Mississippi river, where the offices of the road are located. It is situated in a fertile country, pleasantly located, and growing very rapidly. Passing over the river, we found the country between the Mississippi and the Red river of the North not to be surpassed in the west. It is well diversified, there being an abundance of water and timber, with a rich and fertile prairie. A good deal of this part of the country has been already located but there are still thousands of acres yet unoccupied. At Fargo we crossed the Red river, and though the lands beyond did not appear so good in point of fertility, yet they will average with a major part of the prairie lands of the west. A few alkali lakes are to be seen along the road, but of such a character as not to detract from the general character of the country. The soil is a deep black loam, the surface rather flat near the river, but after leaving the Red river forty miles behind we came to a beautiful undulating prairie, with not so much as a twig in sight. Here and there were stony points where large boulders seemed to be numerous, though not in sufficient quantities for fencing. It is said that good water can be obtained at almost any point on the prairie. About 100 miles east of the Missouri, is located the pleasant village of Jamestown, where Ft. Seward is located, with several companies of the 20th Infantry. We reached Bismark about noon, situated on the east bank of the muddy Missouri, and the first person we met was Manager Mead, of this popular road, as fine and amiable a gentleman as one could wish to meet. Possessed of great financial ability, an indomitable energy and perseverance, yet modest and unassuming, he has been well selected to carry forward this great enterprise. And here we are at the jumping off place, and just across the river, the gifted and accomplished Modocs are in the purely speculative business of lifting scalps, and there is but little desire to go beyond.—Fort A Lincoln is located about 3 miles from this place on the west side at which a squadron of cavalry is stationed. A company of soldiers have a garrison at the west end of the town. Unfortunately for our party we reached the town on one of those disagreeable, windy days common to a prairie country. We expected several times to be swept from the face of the earth so persistent were these zephyrs and our friend Mac who is higher up and lacks much weight was floored in a twinkling, as he attempted to cavort around a corner. We laughed ; and came pretty near doing the same thing. It was a kind of retribution for our laughing at others We were taken to the St James Hotel, which consisted of a frame, covered with canvass and how it flopped.

BRAINERD,

BISMARCK

is perhaps the most noted place except Duluth, in the west. It is 450 miles west of Duluth, and will be the point of attraction for a large territory, and we have no doubt it will soon develop into a fine city. At present it looks quite new, and in some cases tents are used, but it has a number of good, substantial frame buildings, many of which have been just erected. The first settlement was made here last year in June, and it has now a population of 500. It is the headquarters for military operations in the northwest, and the mining interests will depend largely upon it as a base of supplies. The town is beautifully located some fifteen feet above the river bottom on the second terrace left by the receding waters. We regard this as the best point in the west.

The inhabitants are not so lawless as some would think. They treated us with becoming civility, showed us around and we could not, for the life of us, see any difference between them and those with whom we daily meet. The place has been remarkably free from tragedies and horrid crimes, and is to be looked upon as an exception to all new western towns. Some horrid stories have been told about Bismark. Here is one :

"Our late townsman, Crummey, seems to be well established at Bismark. A correspondent from that place says that last Sunday services were had in Crummey's establishment, without interruption of the regular game. On each side of the stand occupied by the clergymen, faro banks were in steady operation, and though the players were quietly intent on their business, yet the rattling of their ivory chips was distinctly heard in the pauses of the prayer and sermon. One of the lucky gamblers said he admired the pluck of the 'gospel slinger' and if a hat had been passed for him he would have dropped in a big stake off his pile of chips.'

The whole thing is a vile calumniation No such incident ever occurred there as we were assured by its best citizens. Mr Crummey keeps a few games on hand to while away the hours, and this is a distinctive feature of the place. But Mr. C. would adjourn long enough to let a minister have his say—yes, and go one better keep good order.

We met Col. Lounsberry, formerly of this county, whose parents reside near Newville, at this point, where he is engaged in publishing the Tribune, a spicy, little paper, just started. One would hardly think a paper would live where there is not a settler outside of the town, but the citizens know its value and stand by it. If some of our people in the more densely populated districts, even in Indiana, would come up with a little more liberality in this particular, it would do no harm.

Our party visited the various points of attraction. We would have crossed the river had the weather been fine, but the turbulent condition of the water caused by the gale made the river impassible. A visit was made to Crummey and Morton's gambling "hells," as some people love to call them. The ladies of the parties accompanied us, and the gentlemanly proprietors showed up the different games in all their points and nobody felt very bad. These gay gamboliers are square dealing fellows, and will divide the last cent with you, and taken altogether, would much prefer them as neighbors to a mean, miserly set, a few of which afflict every community.

In the evening we boarded the train again and returned over the line to Thompson where we changed roads and on Saturday morning arrived at one of the most lively as well as enterprising towns in the west. Dame nature was most lavish in her contribution to the beauty and attractiveness of this region of country. A handsome prairie to the south, timber to the north, the Father of Waters on the east, with innumerable lakes here and there in almost every direction, go to make up a landscape not to be surpassed in the country. But this is not all. The falls of St. Anthony in the river opposite, and the silvery Minnehaha, a few miles below, are the most enjoyable features of this most favored spot. Thousands visit them annually, and find each of them a rich entertainment within themselves. And last, but not least, is the celebrated stock farm of Col King, more appreciated by us than all the rest. With a little farm of 1600 acres and another of 2500 close by, most complete and extensive stables, and other buildings, all carried on in systematic order, it certainly presents to tourists something of a more tangible and practical character than to be found in some of the other features of the place. The entire party accompanied by many of the citizens visited the stables and were gratified in seeing the most valuable stock in the country—Rosedale, a $10,000 co., a 2 year old bull for which $7,000 had been refused, and other grades equally as fine, together with a stud of blooded race horses, that have a national reputation.

The citizens met us with their usual hospitality, and after dinner carriages were furnished to take us to view the many handsome features in that vicinity. We even went to Ft. Snellting, seven miles below, where we got an attractive view of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers.—A company of the 20th Infantry is located here. Gen. Sikes, an agreeable offcer in command. He was absent at the time, and unfortunately left in command, an officer by the name of Thomas, a sergeant, who imagined himself of more importance than his commanding officer. At least he had not the civility, or good sense to recognize the visit by a show of his august presence. Some of these officers fighting the battles of the country in these parts daily, are perhaps entitled to some little credit on that score, and therefore we have naught but pity for them. Fight it out on that line, old fellow, if it takes a life time.

The manufacturing interests of this place are greatly enhanced by the immense water power, furnished by the falls in the river. Saw mills, flouring mills, cotton and woolen factories, and many other pursuits of a similar character are conducted with great success. We are informed that the capacity of the flouring mills amounted to 5000 barrels a day.—In these woolen mills blankets are made that even England cannot compete with.

The city is handsomely built up with fine residences which are beatified in the highest style of art. We were quartered at the Nicollet House, a handsome building and first-class hotel, the office of which is presided over in a way worthy of imitation, by the agreeable S. H. Jumper, who has the thanks of the party for many favors.

The News and Tribune, both daily are mammoth sheets, well filled, ably conducted and are meeting with liberal patronage. We found the members of the press at all points, alive to our comfort and entertainment, and clever, genial fellows.

We remained here during the Sabbath and on Monday morning went over on the St. Paul and Pacific road to St. Paul, which is more of a business place than her neighbor, but without so many attractive features.

We were fortunate to fall into the hands of Mr. Dodge, of the Merchants Hotel, who puts to shame the many high-toned sops that lord it over hotel offices, by his clever and gentlemanly treatment of our party We are sometimes impressed with the idea that a hotel clerk is one of those unapproachable beings too high up for this world, and when we find one that acts like common humanity it always makes our heart glad.

We were under obligations to Mr. Huntington, Gen. Ticket Agt. of the West Wisconsin Railroad, for the very pleasant and prompt manner, in which he provided transportation for our party. It is pleasant to meet a railroad official now and then that don't own the road, and Major H. is one of them, also the Supt of the St. P. & P. road.

We started on our way to Chicago on the West Wisconsin to Elory, and thence by the North Western to Chicago. The nearer we approached Chicago the worse the hotels became, until it culminated at Elory, where we ate breakfast, and became sea-sick, leaving our breakfast behind. We passed Devil's lake, girted by high hills whose sides are covered with broken granite that show the work of a mighty upheaval at one time. The country through which we passed on this line is delightful, corn, oats and wheat looking well. Wisconsin seems to be well advanced in agriculture and taken altogether is a superior western State. We all arrived safe in Chicago without a single accident during the entire trip, all delighted with the tour. In fact we had become so intimately associated with each other that we clasped hands and parted with no small sense of regret.

The party was composed of very clever gentlemen. Mr. Mattingly explained the gang saw business to our delight at Minneapolis—Thayer gave the artistes a touch at the same place ; Capt. McDonald, capital Dan, was particularly happy in his epigrams on key notes, and Reub Williams was himself again in the war with England. The ladies were particularly sociable, and a fair representation of the sex. The silver band from Warsaw, received many compliments which they richly deserve.

We return our thanks to all and especially are obliged to them for their handsome present at Brainerd. Long may they wave.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE Warden of Sing Sing Prison indignantly denies th[illegible] that Frank Walworth received special favors at his hands. He receives the same fare and treatment as other convicts. ....[illegible] from New York that one of the most powerful combinations ever formed in Wall street, headed by the notorious Jay Gould, has been organized for the purpose of bulling the gold market. The capital represented by its members is estimated at over $100,000,000, and they propose to put gold above 25. They assert that the Treasury Department, being short of gold, will be powerless to interfere. It is asserted, on the contrary, that Secretary Richardson, on being informed of the schemes of the clique, said if they imagined the Treasury was not able to protect itself, they would find themselves sadly mistaken.

THE story concerning the great Wall street gold-bull clique is denied....A meeting of prominent Massachusetts Republicans opposed to the nomination of Ben Butler for Governor, was held in Boston the other day. Judge Hoar, Congressman Dawes, and other men of note, were present, and pledged themselves to do all in their power to defeat the aspirations of the "Essex statesman."

THE two guano dealers in New York city are charged with selling an article so adulterated as to contain only 8 or 6 per cent. of ammonia, the most valuable element of that fertilizer, and about [illegible] per cent. of other matter, mainly earth, and unknown in genuine guano. They are said to have succeeded in swindling the farmers into buying their spurious stuff by counterfeiting the trade-mark of the Peruvian Government and refilling old bags which bore the real brand. Suits have been brought against them by the agents of the Peruvian Government, who ask for an injunction to stop the fraud, and claim heavy damages.

A New York telegram says: The managers of trunk lines to the West have made the following reductions in freight charges on first-class merchandise, which includes dry goods, boots and shoes, clothing, etc.: From New York to Chicago, per cwt., 75c, formerly $1; Cleveland, 40c, formerly 65c; Cincinnati, 70c, formerly 92c; St. Louis, 97c, formerly $1.28; Louisville, 85c, formerly $1.23; Memphis, $1.35, formerly $1.62. WHEN the officers went to the New York Tombs, the other day, to escort Wes Allen, a noted desperado, to his future quarters at Auburn State Prison, he quietly told them he preferred the Tombs fare to that of Auburn, and significantly pointed to a can of nitro-glycerine lying beside him. At last accounts Wes still occupied his little cell unmolested ....Nearly 200,000 immigrants have arrived at New York since the 1st of January.

The prosecuting officer, Clark, inveighed bitterly against the prisoners, the blackguards in brown cloth who abetted them, and the newspaper correspondents. Cornish, his assistant, vulgarly abused everything American, including our courts, which he declared are influenced by bribes. Finally, he threatened the Judge with popular vengeance if he dared to admit the prisoners to bail. The Judge would not allow counsel to threaten him, but would perform his duty without reference to the counsel's opinion. "Then," said Cornish, "it is your duty to refuse bail. You dare not do otherwise." Judge—I shall do as I think proper, without dictation from you. Cornish—Of course you will, but still I don't think you will dare to do this. Here Judge Betourney interfered and reprimanded Cornish, saying he was bringing contempt on the Court by the manner of his address to Judge McKeagney, notwithstanding which, Cornish, who was evidently intoxicated, was allowed to continue sometime longer in the same strain. Mr. Royal attempted to speak again for the prisoners, but was denied permission by the Attorney-General, and an exchange of angry words followed. Just as the Judge was leaving the bench, Clark took from his mouth a spit-ball that he was chewing, and threw it into Royal's face, with the remark, "You are a dirty puppy." The latter, wiping his face, said he thanked the Attorney-General. Afterwards the latter apologized to Royal, saying he was half wild at the time. Soon after the adjournment of court, a hand-bill, of which the following is a copy, was circulated through the town: "Right or wrong! Can the law be enforced? To-day application for bail was made for the kidnappers. Mr. Cornish urges upon the court that granting bail was only putting a price upon the crime of kidnapping. The argument has closed. The presiding Judge, McKeagney, was driven home by Wilson, of Minneapolis. This may mean nothing, but we shall see. Canadians! be on the alert for the result! God save the Queen!" Gordon has openly expressed an opinion that it would be safer for the prisoners to be kept in confinement than liberated on bail.

IT is said the minority party in the Spanish Cortes propose to withdraw from that body and proceed to Cartagena, now in possession of the Internationals, where they will establish a seperate government. There is a further report to the effect that the rebels threaten to seize all the German vessels in the port at Cartagena if the steamer Vigilante, which was taken from them by a Prussian frigate, is not returned.

VICTOR EMANUEL disavows any hostility to the Government of President MacMahon, and denies that he has formed, or contemplates forming, any alliance with Germany. THE cable brings us a rumor from Paris respecting the future government of France. It is stated that a plan has been matured to establish a monarchy. It is a part of the scheme that MacMahon shall serve as President only six months longer, when he will resign and resume command of the army. The purpose of this is to make it certain that the army can be used to assist the inauguration of the monarchy.

The Growing Crops.

The July report of the Department of Agriculture, says a Washington dispatch, represents an improvement in winter wheat, but a decline in the prospects of spring wheat on account of the unseasonable weather in some quarters, and the insect enemies in others. The average in corn is increased in West Virginia and Minnesota, and decreased in all the other States, except Florida and Arkansas, where it remains the same as last year. Corn-planting was everywhere retarded by the weather, and in many cases the corn has been several times replanted. The universal complaint of defective seed is made in all parts of the country.

The condition of cotton has been previously given. The reports up to July 1 indicate the crop to be 89.5 per cent. of avearge, not including Virginia, where the culture is yet mainly experimental.

The prospective yield of oats declined during June in New England and the Middle and Northwestern States except Wisconsin. It was enhanced in all of the Gulf States except Mississippi.

Winter rye improved in Rhode Island, Connecticut, New Jersey, Maryland, North Carolina, Mississippi, Texas, Arkansas, Ohio, Michigan, Illinois, and Iowa. It remained stationary in Georgia, and declined in all the other States. Spring rye was below the average in all the States but five, the minimum, 7, being found in California, and the maximum, 110, in Nebraska.

Winter barley generally declined in the South and West, where the heavy rains prevailed.

The grass crops have generally improved in New England and the Middle States. However, they were greatly shortened by the drought.

The late winter told disastrously upon the fruit crop. The injury to the apple trees was more extensive than was apparent at the last report. Vast numbers of peach trees were killed. The condition of the grape crop ranged from 61 in California to 127 in Nebraska, 100 representing the average.

The average in potatoes remained the same as last year, or increased in twenty-two States and decreased in all the others. The Colorado beetle has extended its ravages eastward, being reported for the first time in several counties of New York. It was still devastating in the West, but the farmers had learned in many counties how to destroy it effectually. The maximum condition of the crop, 111, was found in Georgia, and the minimum, 76, in Delaware.

A DESPAIRING American in Strasburg recently exclaimed: "Don't ask me to see sights! I am no longer sea-sick, but sick of sight. Please introduce me to somebody who talks English, and who won't ask me to see anything."

A Danbury Man Goes for a Burglar and Catches a Tartar.

There is a peculiar saddening effect in awaking in the night and hearing burglars at work in your house. This was the case with Mr. Henry, on South street, Friday night. As soon as he detected the noise, which appeared to be down stairs, he softly crept out of bed, and commenced to prowl around for a match. His wife was soon awakened by the same noise, and believing that something was the matter with the children who slept in the next room, she carefully withdrew from bed, so as not to disturb her husband, and started for the door. An instant later they collided. What he thought was evident enough. All the hard earnings of an arduous life were at stake. Before him stood one or more robbers. With an exclamation of condensed eloquence he clinched her. What she thought is not quite so evident, but it was doubtless of her husband and children, and being plucky withal, she at once twined her fingers in his hair, and gave him a wrench that made him think of death. Then both of them went down to the floor together, she having the advantage in the fall, and getting on top, with her hands still in his hair, she shook his head against the floor with an energy and courage that would have undoubtedly have filled him to overflowing with admiration, had he known who it was, or had he known anything at all. Every time she rapped him she shrieked for help, and in a brief space of time the children and Mrs. Eben Davis, who lives down stairs, were on the scene. Mr. Davis was not dressed for company, but in the excitement she didn't mind adornment. She had a candle in one hand, and a long carving-fork in the other, and was about to drive the latter into the legs of the villain, when recognition ensued. Then Mrs. Davis laid down her candle in one direction and the fork in another, and immediately returned to her own apartments, her yellow flannel night-cap, as it shot down stairs, being the first thing Mr. Henry saw on springing to his feet. The children were returned to their room, and put to bed, but the parents did not resume their couch. It was so pleasant that Mr. Henry concluded to remain up the rest of the night and enjoy the scenery, and Mrs. Henry thought it best to stay up, too, so as to change the cloths on his head as often as possible.—Danbury News.

Perplexities of a Postal Clerk.

Some of the ingenious puzzles submitted to the distributing clerk in the Chicago postoffice have been thus pleasantly sketched: "Many of the superscriptions which come through his hands are among the most mysterious of ciphers—unintelligible from the writer's not knowing what he wanted to write, rather than illegible through carelessness in writing. When a countryman of Gustavus Vasa, for instance, still hibernating upon his native hills, sends a letter to his brother in this country, and writing from memory, and a memory not much trained in letters at that, superscribes it 'Seederabst lenco Ia,' he has succeeded in mystifying the average human mind considerably regarding the intended destination of his missive. Not at all the postoffice clerk, who at once sees that 'Cedar Rapids, Linn county, Iowa,' is meant. So, too, when from the Bremen bag a greasy packet flutters out addressed to 'Hafte Lac co Ill,' it is, no doubt, difficult to discern, after the letters of the legend have been evolved from the chaos in which a stiff fist and a villainous pen have left them, that the packet is intended for some one in 'Half Day, Lake county, Illinois,' and thither it therefore goes. But when the only address to be made out from another—and that by no means sure, so vague are the forms of the letters—is 'Chollyhutville co Ill,' then it is that brain tells in the distributing business. Brains finally result in a solution of the palimpsest, and 'Joliet, Will county, Illinois,' is the interpretation thereof. In like manner 'Verseaux incauque co America' is a superscription which could have emanated from nowhere else but France—is decided to mean 'Warsaw, Hancock county,' and it is found that Illinois has such a town, in such a county; so the letter is forwarded thither, and has doubtless gladdened or saddened the heart of its object before now."

Farmers' Granges in Missouri.

The Missouri Patrons of Industry have grown up with a rapidity unknown in any of the adjoining States. On the 1st of February the entire number of granges was about nineteen, while at the present there are over 400, comprising nearly 15,000 members. On the 10th of May the State Grange was organized with T. R. Allen, of Allenton, Master, an executive committee of six, whose object it is to provide for the welfare of the order in business matters when the grange is not in session, and the other necessary officers. The business proposed by the order is similar to that of Illinois, yet different. The railroad question is more subordinate, and the development of cheaper river transportation, the removal of obstructions from the Missouri river and at the Belize more prominent. It is not organized so much as an institution whose sole object is antagonism to railway enterprises as a kind of co-operative society to enable the farmers to escape the unjust charges of middlemen.

Western Farmers and the Railroads.

The movement among the Western farmers against the extortionate charges on the railroads seems to be not only growing in extent, but to be also assuming a phase of immediate practicability. Kansas and Illinois have had their conventions on the subject; in Minnesota they have busied themselves in organizing for obtaining their domestic supplies without the interposition of too many middle-men. From private sources we learn that this measure has gone so far that more than twenty stores have been closed in the town of Faribault, Minn., alone, the stores established by the Grange having all the custom. These associations are also holding back their grain from shipment; while it is said that negotiations are on foot between them and the labor organizations of the East, in order to arrive at a mutual understanding for their future plans.—The Graphic.

Visit of the Austrian Emperor to the Exposition—His Inspection of the American Department.

[Vienna (July 22) Cor. New York Herald.]

The Emperor visited the American Department this morning, accompanied by Baron Schwarz-Senborn, Count Belgard, and the Minister of Police. Notice had been given to the Commissioners beforehand. His Majesty wore a full marshal's uniform. He was received at the entrance by Mr. Garretson, Chief Commissioner, Minister Jay, Mr. McElrath, Architect Peck, and other commissioners. The Emperor, accompanied by Messrs. Garretson and Jay, gave a close examination and scrutiny to every department in the exhibition. The original sewing machine made by Elias Howe was examined with deep attention, the Emperor asking what additional improvements had been made. He went through the elaborate exhibitions of other sewing machine manufacturers, examining specimens of embroidery and stitching. After curiously studying a map of Philadelphia, the Emperor asked Minister Jay where the site of the centennial exhibition was, and put other questions as to the resources and attractions of the city. The models of the school houses of Boston and New York were examined at length, the Emperor inquiring into the method of instruction and the number of scholars. A model of the excavation of Hell Gate was examined closely, and, after putting numerous questions as to the necessity for the work, said to Count Belgard: "The engineering feats of these Americans are incredible." He visited the dental display, and was much amused, asking the names of the various materials for the manufacture of teeth. The display of cotton, sugar and rice from the Southern States interested the Emperor, who expressed surprise and gratification at the astonishing resources of the Southern productions. He also examined the Ohio, Missouri, New York and California wine on exhibition, asking about the qualities of the wine. A glass of American champagne offered the Emperor by an American exhibitor was smilingly declined. He spent some time studying the map of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and the accompanying collection of wheat, furs and minerals. Looking at the map he said: "You have an immense country, but don't the Indians trouble you?" The display of the American bank note engraving interested the Emperor, who asked the value and denominaiion of the notes. He was exceedingly pleased with the chromo display, studying the landscapes and sea scenes, and asking what sections of country were represented. He looked closely at the exhibition of gold pens, testing their points and asking as to their durability and facility in writing.

The display of ores from Michigan, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Illinois and Indiana were scrutinized. The blocks of coal were interesting to the Emperor, who inquired their quality and production. While he was passing through the musical department the Austrian hymn was played upon a parlor organ. The Emperor raised his hat. The display of boots, shoes and leather was large, and was examined critically.

A Freak of Nature—Wondrous Effects of Indian Turnip.

Washington county, Ind., has a wonderful lusus naturæ in the person of a boy not yet 3 years of age. From a gentleman who recently visited the house of the father of the boy, and saw him with his own eyes, we learn the following particulars: James Williams, a well-to-do farmer, who resides twelve miles east by south of Salem, has a boy who will be 3 years old on the 11th of October next. The child is very healthy, and well formed in every respect, except his weight is seventy-five pounds, a little above the average. When about one year of age this child began to develop rapidly, and now presents the appearance of a man. Upon the face are long black whiskers and mustache of remarkably thrifty growth and fineness of texture. The back and breast of the child are covered with silken black hair from two to three inches in length.

The child has good health and is very intelligent. The face wears as thoughtful an expression as that of a man of mature years, and is withal quite handsome, were it not that the cheeks puff out rather too much, thereby detracting from its beauty. Our informant says he never saw such a wonderful sight in his life, and states that those who live near Mr. Williams and see the child almost daily yet look upon the little one in perfect amazement.

In making inquiry as to how this freak of nature was accounted for, the mother of the child stated that when he was in his first year he got hold of an Indian turnip and eat it up. This vegetable is a very powerful astringent, and the physician in attendance at the time is said to have worked a whole day to counteract its influence. From this time the child commenced the development now accomplished, and to this Indian turnip is attributed the result above described. As we are not skilled in materia medica, we do not give an opinion, although what Indian turnip had to do with this case we cannot conceive. The parents of the child, we learn, were to have exhibited it at Salem yesterday.—Indianapolis Paper.

NAMES THAT ARE DEAD.—It is said that there is not now living a single descendant in the male line of Chaucer, Shakespeare, Spencer, Milton, Cowley, Butler, Dryden, Pope, Cowper, Goldsmith, Scott, Byron, Moore, Sir Philip Sidney, Sir Walter Raleigh, Drake, Cromwell, Hampden, Monk, Marlborough, Peterborough, Nelson, Stratford, Ormond, Clarendon, Addison, Swift, Johnson, Walpole, Bolingbroke, Chatham, Pitt, Fox, Burke, Grattan, Canning, Bacon, Locke, Newton, Davy, Hume, Gibbon, Macaulay, Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, David Garrick, John Kemble, or Edmund Kean.

THE Postmaster-General estimates that about 100,000,000 postal cards would be needed this year, but up to the present time over 50,000,000 have been ordered, and the probabilities are that the consumption will double the estimate. Thus far none of the small towns in the country have been supplied, it being as much as the department could do to satisfy the demand of the large cities.

Progress of the Cholera.

There has been an impression, even among educated men, that Asiatic cholera, when it comes, comes like a simoom in a Syrian desert, sweeping everything before it in its deadly force. But if the disease now prevalent in certain portions of Tennessee, Missouri, Ohio, and Kentucky be cholera, as it is reported, then cholera has its vagaries like other mortal attributes and conditions. It is not strange, perhaps, that it should have first made its appearance in New Orleans, as it might be brought into the country there as well as at any other seaport. In 1849, the cholera came from this direction. But the disease of the present year, after having been carried to Memphis, seemed to take an erratic course, jumping over cities and large towns, or abandoning them with but a slight visitation, and spreading out among the smaller towns and villages. When it crossed the Ohio it attacked the town of Mount Vernon, Ind., more savagely; and so in Missouri it picked out a little town called Louisiana for its victim, in both instances leaving the large cities of Cincinnati and St. Louis comparatively free from its ravages. Ever since it began to spread, it has taken strongest hold upon small settlements, and it is from obscure villages such as Greenville, Tenn., Princeton, Ind., and Cromwell, Ky., that the reports of the disease come most frequently. Though it long since left New Orleans, the local papers report it as raging in St. James, Ascension, and neighboring parishes. While this seems to be an anomalous condition, it is not without reason that the country towns suffer most when the cholera once breaks out among them. The great advantage of large cities in dealing with the disease is to be found in their artificial underground drainage. It was long since ascertained that the greatest danger of infection in cholera season is in the evacuations which contain the poison. In large cities, with an adequate sewerage system, these are quickly carried off before they have had the time to exhale their poisonous matter, and the receptacles in which they are deposited are immediately cleansed with running water. In villages and small towns, however, there is no ready means of disposing of the poison which makes its appearance in this form. In villages and small towns, however, there is no ready means of disposing of the poison which makes its appearance in this form. The people generally have not a full appreciation of the necessity for hurrying it away, and, if they had, do not possess the means. As a rule, the evacuations are treated in the usual way, and the poison they contain is caught up by the air and spread about; people inhale it unsuspectingly, and it is thus communicated so generally and repidly that it outruns all the efforts to check it. This is the main advantage which cities have over the country towns in cholera times, but there are others. The city markets are, as a rule, purer and better than those of small towns, for the produce of the gardens is sent where it commands the highest prices. The quality of new vegetables exerts an important influence on the conditions which make people more or less susceptible to the poisonous attack. The medical service of the cities is also more efficient and experienced, and the auxiliary means of caring for the sick and preventing the spread of the disease are superior and more ample.—Chicago Tribune.

A Model Biography.

Perhaps the briefest personal memoirs ever written were those of Count Rostophim, written in ten minutes. We subjoin a few paragraphs, each of which constitutes a "chapter."

MY BIRTH.—On the 12th day of March, 1765, I merged from darkness into light of day. I was measured, I was weighed, I was baptized. I was born without knowing wherefor, and my parents thanked Heaven without knowing for what.

MY EDUCATION.—I was taught all sorts of things, I learned all sorts of languages. By dint of impudence and quackery, I sometimes passed for a savant. My head has become a library of odd volumes, of which I keep the key.

MY SUFFERINGS.—I was tormented by masters, by tailors, who made tight dresses for me; by women; by ambition; by self-love; by useless regrets and by useless remembrances.

MEMORABLE EPOCHS.—At the age of thirty I gave up dancing; at fifty, my regard of thinking; and I have now become a true sage, or egotist, which is the same thing.

RESPECTABLE PRINCIPLES.—I have never meddled in any marriages or scandal; I have never recommended a cook, or physician, and consequently never attempted the life of any one.

MY DISLIKES.—I have a dislike for sots and fops, and for intriguing women, who make a game of virtue. A disgust of affectation; a pity for made up men and painted women; an aversion to rats, liquors, metaphysics, and rhubarbs; a terror of justice and wild beasts.

ANALYSIS OF MY LIFE.—I await death without fear or impatience. My life has been a melodrama on a ground stage, where I have played the hero, the tyrant, the lover, the nobleman, but never the valet.

MY EPITAPH.—Here lies, in hope of repose, an old deceased man, with a worn out spirit, an exhausted heart, and a used up body. Ladies and gentlemen, pass on.

THE figurative title of the Shah of Persia translated into English is "High and mighty star, whose head is covered by the sun, whose movements must be compared to the celestial space; lord of the Caucasian Mountains and the Taurus, of the rivers Euphrates, Tigris, Araxis, and Indus; rose of pleasure and nutmeg of consolation." All these titles are well enough except the nutmeg, which, though spicy enough, is altogether too small. It should have been grater.

The Decay of Liberty in the United States.

Perhaps we cannot select a fitter starting-point, both for establishing the fact of this decay and illustrating its form, than the statement (confirmed from countless sources) which we will insert from the admirable speech of Senator Bayard on the Louisiana State Government just before the close of the last session. "I believe," said Mr. Bayard, "there are few men of property in Louisiana, or men holding the poor remnant of property that has been left them after the ravages of war and the plunder of the class of people who have ruled over them in these past eight years—there are few of of them who would not hail a clean-handed, upright, honest, military ruler as a blessing to them, instead of the Government which you have placed over them and kept them subject to for eight years."

There can be no more incontestible mark of a Government utterly bad than the willingness of the community it oppresses to exchange it for military authority. It is a kind of rule which a civilized people will consent to accept as a relief from anarchy, and a government must be nearly as intolerable as anarchy itself which reconciles its victims to such a substitute, especially if they have been trained in free institutions.

The surrender of their freedom into the hands of a despot who will protect their property is the habitual last refuge of communities from the wild mob rule which is first-cousin or twin-brother to anarchy. If the republic again breaks down in France, it will be for this reason; by the fears of French property, grounded in past experience and resembling present tendencies. Better despotism than subversive communism, was the sentiment which gave steadiness for twenty years to the throne of "the nephew of his uncle." But neither the first nor the second empire was sheer military rule, such as the people of Louisiana would submissively take as a choice of evils. The two Napoleons maintained regular civil governments. What a hopeless sense of oppression, or what sinking subjugation of soul, must have overtaken, an English-speaking people, nurtured in the traditions of English and in the practice of American liberty, when they are ready to accept military rule pure and simple as a welcome form of redemption! And how surprisingly have their fellow-citizens in the other States fallen from the spirit of our early history, and from the quick sympathy with the down-trodden communities which, so lately as twenty years ago, they manifested for Hungary, when the spectacle in Louisiana fails to kindle general indignation!

The low ebb to which the spirit of liberty has sunk in this country would fill us with astonishment and despair if it could not be accounted for without supposing such degeneracy as the face of the facts would seem to imply. That very respect for the priceless blessing of liberty which is native to the American heart has been taken advantage of to reconcile the American people to measures which would have moved the deepest indignation of their fathers; as Christianity has too often been perverted by bigots into an instrument of persecution. It is like wounding an eagle by an arrow pointed with a feather from his own wings. The odious measures which are producing their natural fruit in Louisiana were begun and are continued in the name of that liberty which they crush and destroy. It is not as if Christians had turned Mohammedans and were treading down the religion they had renounced; but as if Christians were waging barbarous civil war on other Christians in the supposed interest of the church. In the former case, the success of the persecutors would be the extermination of Christianity; in the latter, repect for its name might be preserved with the loss of its spirit. In the latter case, we might hope for its resuscitation; for there would still remain a recognition of the gospel. Nothing would be required but to show how it had been misinterpreted and perverted to restore its authority. In a similar manner, we may hope to see the old spirit of liberty revived by correct instruction founded on principles which even the abettors of the Louisiana abuses acknowledge. A deluded people are made to believe that the purpose of these measures is to protect and fortify liberty—the liberty of the negroes. If they could be cured of this delusion they would not tolerate the measures; for it is incredible that in the short period of a dozen years the American people have sunk into abject indifference to what they most highly valued in better days. While, therefore, the pretense that these things are done in the name of liberty is our greatest danger, it is also our chief ground of hope. Relief must come from giving right direction to a sentiment which still exists; which has not been extinguished but misled.

How does the Louisiana usurpation, and the support given it by President Grant's Administration, benefit the colored race? It is not an advantage to the negroes but a detriment, even from the Republican point of view. It was the aim of the constitutional amendments, and especially of the last, which established universal suffrage, to secure the freedom and rights of the negroes in every contingency, and make them independent of the rise and fall, the success or defeat, of any political party. These amendments were adopted in view of the possibility that the Federal Government, and the certainty that most or all of the State governments in the South, would sooner or later fall into Democratic hands after the restoration of the Union. Had it been expected that the Republicans would remain always in power, there would have been no necessity, or at least no urgency, for those much debated amendments. Their champions always put them on the ground we have just mentioned. Are they willing to confess now that they failed of their end?—that they botched their work?—that the amendments and the acts of Congress for enforcing them are inadequate to the contemplated exigency of Democratic State governments? They cannot wish to proclaim themselves such idiots and bunglers. But unless they were, it is impudent hypocrisy to pretend that the Louisiana usurpation is upheld by President Grant in the interest of the colored race.

The rights of the negroes are admitted to be perfectly secure in Georgia, in Kentucky, in Delaware, in every Southern State wherein the Democratic majority is uncontested. Some Democrats might account for this security on different grounds from some Republicans, but there is no question as to the fact. Democrats might say that the negroes are secure in their rights because the Democratic party has no wish to disturb them; Republicans, because the constitutional amendments and the acts of Congress have erected around the negroes an impregnable wall of defence. This is what they meant to do; it is what they did; what they did so effectually and irreversibly that the Democratic party was constrained to accept the fact and withdraw opposition. If a negro should be deprived of his equal rights in Kentucky, which is perhaps more vigorously and unalterably Democratic than any other State in the Union, Gen. Grant has no doubt, no Republican has any doubt, that the rights of the misused negro would be successfully restored in spite of the Democratic State government. The fact that the State government was Democratic would make no difference; it is the very contingency which the constitutional amendments were framed to deal with. Unquestionably, they are broad enough in their scope to meet every such emergency.

It follows from this plain exposition that it makes no difference to negro liberty or negro security in Louisiana, whether their State government is Democratic or not. The usurpation must be defended on some other ground than that a Democratic State government in Louisiana would imperil the rights of colored citizens. But on every other ground the usurpation is utterly indefensible. Its sole object was to foist upon the unwilling people of Louisiana a set of Republican State officers whom they had not elected. There is not even a pretense that the official returns showed a majority for Kellogg. It is conceded that by the votes actually cast McEnery was chosen Governor. Kellogg was declared elected by a bogus board that had not a single official return before it; the board being enabled to perpetrate this daring fraud by the confessedly illegal act of a drunken Federal judge, President Grant promptly becoming an accomplice after the fact.

It is in support of a usurpation of which this is a correct description that every principle of liberty is trampled under foot, and the free-born people of an American State are made to groan under a system of oppression in comparison with which unadulterated military rule would be welcomed as a blessing. If the military officers had discretion to govern, they might govern justly; but instead of governing, they are ordered to enforce at the point of the bayonet whatever the usurping ring of conspirators and robbers may choose to do or ordain. It is impossible to imagine anything more indefensible in theory or more detestable in practice—New York World.

Grantism in Kansas.

Kansas is one of the staunchest Republican States in the Union. At the last Presidential election it gave Grant a majority of 34,078, and throughout the last four years it has in every way manifested its approbation of the policy and principles which have distinguished the present Administration. To be sure it failed to re-elect Pomeroy to the United States Senate; but this failure was only caused by the sudden springing of an unexpected trap on the Legislature, which led a large number of individuals, who probaly had the sleek and oily Senator's money in their pockets, to suddenly desert him in a panic. But the disclosures made in Caldwell's case show that the leading politicians in the State are generally actuated by the same motives which appear to govern the national Administration in its most important acts.

The Governor elected in Kansas last fall received a majority of 32,017—almost as great as that given to Grant. His name is Thomas A. Osborn, and he is a worthy representative of the party supporting the existing administration and all the rings connected therewith. Gov. Osborn is a son of Judge Delahy, whose name has been mentioned in Congress in connection with a proposol to impeach him, and formerly was a marshal of the United States District Court in Kansas. Recent legal proceedings in that State afford convincing evidence that Gov. Osborn, like many Grant politicians, believes in using official opportunities in the way that will do most good to himself.

During the late war, Edward S. Brown, of West Virginia, having loaned a large amount of money in Kansas secured by real estate, was proceeded against by Judge Delahy's court under the Confiscation act. All parties to whom he had loaned money were compelled to come into court and pay the amount of their loans to the marshal, or the clerk of the court. Afterward Brown was pardoned for his participation in the rebellion, and he made application at Washington to have the confiscated money restored to him. To his great astonishment he learned that the money taken from him had never been paid into the Treasury!

Mr. Brown then went to Kansas, and was informed that his money had been paid into the depository of the court. He at once began proceedings to recover it. Of course he got little satisfaction from Delahy, but he succeeded in getting his case before the United States Circuit Court, and a special commissioner was appointed to take testimony. The commissioner reported that James L. McDowell, one of the marshals of Delahy's court at the time of the confiscation, had in his hands over and above above his legitimate fees, $11,646.04 belonging to Mr. Brown; that Thomas A. Osborn, the present Governor, and McDowell's successor, had about $1,200 over and above his fees; and that other officers had money belonging to the plaintiff. It was also ascertained that there was almost an entire lack of vouchers in the clerk's and marshal's offices to account for over $30,000 in confiscation cases, and of this sum not a dollar had ever reached the Treasury of the United States.

Subsequently Judge Dillon appointed another special commissioner in Kansas to take testimony in this case, and at the same time a special master to receive the testimony taken by both commissioners, hear the arguments of the interested parties and report the result. The decision of the master or referee was nearly the same as that of the commissioner first appointed, and a judgment was rendered by Judge Dillon against the parties implicated, commanding them to make good the amounts assessed against them within thirty days.

For a long term of years Senator Pomeroy exercised unbounded influence in the politics of Kansas, and the result is seen in the election of such a man as Osborn as Governor of the State. Unfortunately it is men of the same stamp as Pomerey who now have absolute sway in the councils of the Administration in Washington.—New York Sun.

A Michigan Lumberman.

Dr. David Ward's great wealth rests in his immense amount of cork pine lands in Michigan and Wisconsin, amounting to over 150,000 acres, every forty acres of which he has been over himself, making a careful estimate of the number and dimensions of the trees, and noting all the characteristics of soil. His land was nearly all selected from close observation years before most people had an idea of their ultimate value, and the very best taken; location upon streams and facilities for running the timber to market were carefully considered, so that to-day he owns the finest tracts of really available and valuable cork pine in the United States, and the most of it. His pine lands may be summarized as follows: On the Saginaw, 30,000 acres; on the Manistee and Au Sauble, 90,000 acres; on the Chippewa, in Wisconsin, 30,000. Total, 150,000 acres. In addition he owns 20,000 acres of the very best hard-wood timbered lands for farming in the central and northern part of the State, besides all his valuable property in Oakland county, and 13,000,000 feet of logs afloat. Placing the same valuation upon his pine lands alone, as other persons are selling detached tracts in the vicinity of his, and it aggregates the sum of $6,500,000, and we may here say that that amount of greenbacks stacked up would not obtain the deeds of his pine property alone. The difference in pine land is very great, as between cork and other qualities, and acre by acre the cork nets more than three times as much as any other variety.—Pontiac Gazette.

Dainty Digger—His Method of Capturing the Luscious Grasshopper.

Riding through the foothills, near Rockin, I saw a curious and unexpected sight. There are still a few wretched Digger Indians in this part of California, and what I saw was a party of these engaged in catching grasshoppers, which they boil and eat. They dig a number of funnel-shaped holes, wide at top, and eighteen inches deep, in a cleared space, and then, with rags and brush, drive the grasshoppers towards these holes, forming for this purpose a wide circle. It is slow work, but they seem to delight in it, and their encitement was great as they neared the circle of holes and the insects began to hop and fall into them.

At last there was a close and rapid rally, and half a dozen bushels of grasshoppers were driven into the holes; whereupon hats, aprons, bags and rags were in, to prevent the multitude from dispersing; and then began the work of picking them out by handfuls, crushing them roughly in the hand to keep them quiet, and crowding them into the bags in which they were to be carried to their raucheria. "Sweet, all same pudding," cried an old woman to me, as I stood looking on.

It is not a good year for grasshoppers, this year. No, they like the year of which an inhabitant of Roseville spoke to me later in the day, when he said, "they ate up every bit of his garden truck, and then sat on the fence and asked for a chew of tobacco."—California Letter.

A Young Lady Slays a Panther With a Pine-Knot.

On Thursday last a party of young women went out from Queen's Run to the mountain just back of the settlement, gathering huckleberries. One of them, Jerusha Bryan, advanced a little farther into the woods than the others, when she was attacked by a huge panther. Her companions, hearing the brute scream, sought safety in flight, but Miss Bryan, finding escape impossible, determined to stand her ground, and, seizing a huge pine-kot, gave her enemy battle. The contest was a close one for a few minutes, but human courge, judgment and coolness soon triumphed over brute strength, and the heroic woman soon had the satisfaction of laying the bloodthirsty monster dead at her feet. Her garments were torn into shreds, and her face and arms badly scratched, but she walked home with a firm step, and the light of triumph in her eye, and was able to give a good account of herself. The dead panther was soon afterwards found by the people of Queen's Run, and proved on measurement to be six feet ten inches long. Miss Bryan is the lion (or lioness) of the neighborhood, as she well deserves to be. We doubt whether an instance can be found on record of more cool, heroic bravery and wise discretion, developed by any woman, even in the most historic and perilous days of Pennsylvania.—Lockhaven (N. Y.) Letter.

According to the St. Louis papers, the Northern Line "is bound to have a big thing in Upper Missouri freights hereafter,"—not by placing boats on the Missouri, by a good deal, but by taking goods destined for Sioux City, Fort Benton, etc., to St. Paul on their Mississippi steamers, and forwarding the packages thence to Sioux City by rail. The rate to St. Paul is 40 cents a hundred. The steamer Rock Island, which passed up yesterday, had a large consignment of sugar for Fort Benton.—Davenport Democrat.

We are now able to understand the chief industry of the American Indians. They are chiefly engaged in raising hair.

Adams and Jefferson.

Mr. Parton, in defending Mr. Jefferson's religious character, in his sketchy way, in the July Atlantic, brings in comparison with it that of some of his contemporaries. He says:

Mr. Adams, however, was by far the more impatient of the two with popular creeds, as he shows in many a comic outburst of robust and boisterous contempt. He presented his utter inability to comprehend that side of human nature which made people object to paying a pittance for his new navy-yards, and eager to throw away their money upon such structures as St. Paul's, in London, and St. Peter's, at Rome. As for the doctrine of the Trinity, he greatly surpassed Jefferson in his aversion to it. He scolded Jefferson for bringing over European professors, because they were all infected with Episcopal and Presbyterian creeds, and all believed that that great principle which has produced this boundless universe, Newton's universe, and Herschel's universe, came down to this little ball to be spit upon by Jews. Mr. Adams' opinion was that until this awful blasphemy was got rid of there will never be any liberal science of this world. And yet he escaped anathema. Mr. Jefferson, on the contrary, was denounced by the pious and moral Hamilton as "an atheist."

Exploring the Mounds.

The exploration of the largest mound—the one on Fay's land—is being conducted under the direction of Professors Charlton, Townsend, and others. The entrance is made from the top, and will probably be carried down about sixty feet.

At ten feet below the surface a bed of charcoal was found, and below this there were remains of bones, which were almost completely decomposed, indicating their great antiquity. As soon as they were touched they fell into dust. Perhaps at a greater depth bones may be exhumed which are better preserved. The earth in the mound is found to be exceedingly compact and dry, well calculated to preserve the bones, but they are in a state of almost complete decay. This is a proof of great age, as human skeletons have been taken from burial places in England which were much less favorable for preserving them, and yet they were sound and well preserved, though they were known to be 2,000 years old. The crumbling and decayed bones that were exhumed from the mound on yesterday no doubt belonged to the old Toltec race, which inhabited this locality about 3,000 years ago; and it is hoped that some well-preserved bones and other remains representing that ancient race may be exhumed from this mound. We will report discoveries if any are made.—Vincennes (Ind.) Sun.

A New Golden Land.

A startling announcement comes from the Argentine Republic, which, if true, bids fair to rival the brightest days of California, the golden dreams of Australia, or the diamond glitter of South Africa. In the lovely valley of Famatina, situated in the Rioja, fertile only in spots where the soil is subjected to irrigation by storms, came a thoughful German. He had dreamed of gold amid the mountains of the Velasco, and like a hardy pioneer he wended his way, unchecked by disappointment, until he had reached the happy valley. Sure of his discovery he purchased one league, two leagues, and shortly thereafter nearly the whole region. The secret spread like wildfire. Gold, rich gold, lay in virgin heaps upon the soil, and Buenos Ayres, for some years falling into the backwark track, opened its eyes, and saw again prosperity at her gates. Messengers have sailed for England, and the enormous sum of $100,000,000 in currency has been paid for the lands. Everybody eagerly awaits the report of the engineers, who have been sent to investigate. Should the result be favorable, the hungry seekers after wealth will no doubt strike for the La Plata, and the land of siver be hereafter known as the land of gold.

A Paris Industry.

There is in Paris an aged woman who has for the last fifty years supported herself by an industry of which, we believe, she enjoys a complete monopoly. She supplies the Garden of Acclimatization in Paris with food for the pheasants, which food consists entirely of ants' eggs. These she collects in the woods around Paris, and receives about twelve francs for the quantity she brings back from each of her foraging expeditions. These generally last three or four days, during which she sleeps on the field of action, in order to watch the insects at dawn, and to find her way to their treasures. She is almost devoured by the ants, an inconvenience of which she takes little notice, but at the end of her harvest time, which lasts from the month of June to the end of September, her whole body is in a truly pitiable condition. Her services are, of course, highly valued, for, as there is at present no competition in this line of industry, it would be difficult to supply her place.

The Depths of Mid Ocean.

In her voyage from Teneriffe to St. Thomas the British exploring ship Challenger sounded and dredged every other day. The soundings showed that a pretty level bottom runs off from the African coast, deepening gradually to a depth of 3,125 fathoms at about one-third of the way across to the West Indies. If the Alps, Mont Blanc and all, were submerged at this spot, there would still be half a mile of water above them. Five hundred miles farther west there is a comparatively shallow part, a little less than two miles in depth. The water then deepens again to three miles, which continues over to the West Indies. At the deepest spots both on the east and west side of the Atlantic, the dredge brought up a quantity of dark red clay, which contained just sufficient animal life to prove that life exists at all depths. No difficulty was experienced in obtaining these deep-sea dredgings, and it was merely a question of patience, each haul occupying twelve hours. In depths over two miles little has been found, but that little was totally new.

Two new ideas have lately been extracted from an English tourist: That Buffalo is the place for bison shooting, and that the seat of American Mormonism is at Utica, N. Y.

Ben Wright and the Modocs.

In 1852, a small train, comprising only eighteen souls—men, women, and children—attempted to reach Oregon by the Rhett lake route. For several days after leaving the valley of Pitt river they had traveled without molestation, not having seen a single Indian, when, about mid-day, they struck the eastern shore of Rhett lake, and imprudenty camped under a bluff, now known as "Bloody Point," for dinner. These poor people felt rejoiced to think that they had so nearly reached their destination in safety; nor dreamed that they had reached their final resting-place, and that soon the gray old rocks above them were to receive a baptism that would associate them for ever with a cruel and wanton massacre. The tired cattle were quietly grazing, and the little party were eating their meal in fancied security, when suddenly the dry sage-brush was fired, the air rang with demoniac yells, and swarthy and painted savages poured by the score from the rocks overhead. In a few moments the camp was filled with them, and their bloody work was soon ended. Only one of that ill-fated party escaped. Happening to be out picketing his horse, when the attack was made, he sprang upon it, bare-backed, and never drew rein until he had reached Yreka, a distance of 60 miles.

The men of early times in these mountains were brave and chivalrous men. In less than twenty-four hours a mounted force of miners, packers, and prospectors—men who feared no living thing—were at the scene of the massacre. The remains of the victims were found, shockingly mutilated, lying in a pile with their broken wagons, and half charred; but not an Indian could be found.

It was not until the next year that the Modocs were punished for this cruel deed. An old mountaineer, named Ben Wright—one of those strange beings who imagine that they are born as instruments for the fulfillment of the red man's destiny—organized an independent company in Yreka, in 1853, and went into the Modoc country. The Indians were wary, but Ben was patient and enduring. Meeting with poor success, and accomplishing nothing except protection for incoming emigrants, he improvised an "emigrant train" with which to decoy the enemy from the cover of the hills and ravines. Winding slowly among the hills and through the sage-plains, Ben's canvas-covered wagons rolled quietly along, camping at the usual watering-places, and apparently in a careless and unguarded way. Every wagon was filled with armed men, anxious and willing to be attacked. The ruse failed, however; for the keen-sighted Indian soon perceived that there were no women or children with the train, and its careless movements were suspicious. After several months of unsatisfactory skirmishing, Ben resolved on a change of tactics. Surprising a small party of Modocs, instead of scalping them, he took them to his camp, treated them kindly, and making them a sort of Peace Commission, sent them with olive-branches, in the shape of calico and tobacco, back to their people. Negotiations for a general council to arrange a treaty were opened. Others visited the white camp; and soon the Modocs, who had but a faint appreciation of the tortuous ways of white diplomacy, began to think that Ben was a very harmless and respectable gentleman. A spot on the north bank of Lost river, a few hundred yards from the Natural Bridge, was selected for the council. On the appointed day fifty-one Indians (about equal in number to Wright's company) attended, and, as agreed upon by both parties, no weapons were brought to the ground. A number of beeves had been killed, presents were distributed, and the day passed in mutual professions of friendship; when Wright—whose quick, restless eye had been busy—quietly filled his pipe, drew a match, and lit it. This was the preconcerted signal. As the first curling wreath of smoke went up, fifty revolvers were drawn from their places of concealment by Wright's men, who were now scattered among their intended victims; a few moments of rapid and deadly firing, and only two of the Modocs escaped to warn their people!

New England Must Go South.

Such is the startling conclusion of the Charleston News and Courier, in view of cotton-spinning prospects. It says: The Southern cotton mills are working full time and are making money rapidly. Let the Northern mill-owners come down South and they can do the same. The statistics show that yarn can be manufactured in South Carolina, transported to the North, pay a commission of 5 per cent. for selling, be sold at the cost of Northern production, and yet yield a net profit of five cents a pound. And a certain class of colored goods can be produced here, and sold in the North at the cost of production of similar goods there, and yet yield a profit of over 10 cents a pound. Again, yarns made in the Saluda factory have been shipped to England, and sold in Manchester at a rate which left a net profit of 4½ cents a pound. The saving in cost of material, in wages, in commissions, in waste, in transportation, etc., enables the Southern mills to do a profitable business, while the Northern mills lose money; and when the Northern mills are doing their best, the Southern mills do still better. The moral of this is plain: "Bring your machinery down South, at once, ye manufacturers of New England; for to that, or closing your doors, ye must come at last."

Thirst Quenched Without Drinking.

It may not be generally known that water, even salt water, imbibed through the skin, appeases thirst almost as well as fresh water taken inwardly. In illustration of this subject, a correspondent has sent the following abridged quotation from a "Narrative of Capt. Kennedy's losing his vessel, and distresses afterward," which was noticed in "Dodsley's Annual Register" for 1869: I cannot conclude without making mention of the great advantage I received from soaking my clothes twice a day in salt water, and putting them on without wringing. It was considerable time before I could make the people comply with this measure, although from seeing the good effect produced, they afterward practiced it twice a day of their own accord. To this discovery I may with justice attribute the preservation of my own life and six other persons, who must have perished if it had not been put in use. The saline particles, however, which remained in our clothes, became incrusted in the heat of the sun and that of our bodies, lacerating our skins, and being otherwise inconvenient; but we found that by washing out these particles, and frequently wetting our clothes without wringing, twice in the course of a day, the skin became well in a short time. After these operations, we uniformly found that the violent drought went off, and the parched feeling was cured in a few minutes after bathing and washing our clothes, and at the same time we found ourselves as much refreshed as if we had received some actual nourishment. Four persons in the boat who drank salt water went delirious and died; but those who avoided this and followed the above practice, experienced no such symptoms.

A Husband's Triumph.

The Brantford Courier is responsible for the following: A gentleman on Besserer street last week tried an experiment which he says has completely cured his wife of jealousy. He says he was subject to a nightly curtain lecture from his better half, at a time when he wished to be wrapped in the arms of Morpheus, for returning an affection for an old lady friend. He bore it for several nights with Christian-like resignation, but he at last devised a plan for putting an end to it. He procured a piece of wood formed in the shape of a human being and dressed it in some of his wife's wardrobe, and then placed it in the garden, sitting in an iron chair. To this graven image he knelt down and poured forth impassioned addresses. The servant girl was standing at the kitchen door at the time, and overheard these appeals. She immediately notified her mistress of the fact. Presently both of them emerged from the kitchen, armed with broomsticks, made an attack upon the "dummy woman," while the husband, who had retired in good order, sat at the back enjoying the scene. After knocking the image over, they pounced upon and tore the clothing into rags. They soon discovered the cheat, and rushed back into the house, terribly mortified. The husband followed them, and said exasperating things. Whenever she shows any disposition to be jealous, he has only to mention that little scene in the garden, and she changes the topic. The servant has been induced to go to the States, where "wages are high."

The Printing Press Competition.

Never was there so mighty a competition as that now waging between the giant printing-machine builders of 1873. Hoe, Bullock, Walter, Campbell, and several English builders, have mammoth "web" and "perfecting" machines, and most of them will do book work and cut work as well as ordinary newspaper and fast printing. Last year it was thought quick work to make 8,000 perfect newspapers within the hour, and when the maximum was announced to be 11,000, the figures claimed for the Walter or Times printing machine, most printers thought the limitations of machine printing had been reached. Not so. The year 1873 finds the gentlemen who, last year, discussed the possibilities of a machine capable of printing 15,000, telling us of more than one machine ready to print 26,000 within the hour. The "Hoe," for instance, now printing Lloyd's Messenger, claims that capacity, as does also the Bullock, now building for a New York daily, while none know how much printed paper the new "Campbell Perfector," now in Frank Leslie's press rooms, will turn out. It was at work on the Day's Doings when we saw it, and the pressman said it was doing as much work as the five other large presses in the room together. With all these grand results, publishers are none too well satisfied, nor is the market over supplied with newspapers. Americans swallow all the printed matter they can get, and, like Oliver Twist, "ask for more." What is to be the capacity of the next mammoth press, and who is to build it?—American Newspaper Reporter.

Wonderful Chicago.

A correspondent of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser writes that paper as follows: "The change that has taken place in Chicago is simply wonderful. Nearly the whole area of the burnt district on the south side of the river has been rebuilt. In all directions from the Sherman House whole squares are covered with magnificent buildings of all kinds. Had I been set down in Chicago some night not knowing where I was, when I awoke in the morning I should scarcely have thought myself in an American city. Although having frequently visited all the principal cities in our own country, I have never seen a city built up in such a magnificent style. Evidently the cost of buildings in Chicago is a secondary consideration; and the result is that Chicago has the most elegant hotels and stores of any city in the United States. At the same time they are well and thoroughly built, and of the finest and most desirable material; many are fire-proof."

It is said that some of Jeff. Davis' former slaves serenaded him while he was in St. Louis, and that he invited them in, and, after a little chat about old times, made each a present.

Hon. John P. Hale recently fell on the sidewalk at Dover, N. H., and broke a hip-bone.

New Vanderbilt's Son-in-Law Killed Himself.

The recent death of Horace F. Clark was altogether unexpected, as he was not only one of the most capable and energetic railroad managers in Wall street, but one of the most healthful and vigorous. He had so much faith in his naturally robust constitution and excellent physical condition that he is said to have abused them. His father-in-law Cornelius Vanderbilt, who ascribes his activity and strength at his time of life—he is not far from eighty—to the admirable care he has taken of himself imputes the death of Mr. Clark to his regular irregularity of living.

Some months ago, as the story runs a certain banker called upon the Commodore, saying he wished to see Clark upon particular business. The hour was ten o'clock in the morning, and Vanderbilt, remarked: "Horace isn't up yet—he never gets up till about noon; but, if you want to see him very much, we'll go to his house and get the boy out of bed." The banker and and Commodore went. Clark had not risen; but he made a hasty toilet and descended to the breakfast room, where two were waiting. The meal was so ample and elaborate that Vanderbilt observed in his brusque way; "Horace you eat too much; you keep bad hours, too. You can't stand it my boy, strong and healthy as you are. If you don't stop this thing it will certainly kill you. I'd been dead years ago if I'd lived like you. People wonder at my vigor, and can't understand why I don't go to Greenwood. The simple ressonis I'm prudent. I go to bed early, and get up early; I don't eat very much; I take abundance of exercise, and I don't worry. Now Horace, you must stop this if you want to live. I tell you what I'll do; if you will live as you ought to—if you'll give me your word that you'll eat with moderation, that you'll go to bed and get up as a white man ought to—I'll give you right here a check ror $1,000,000.

Clark would not promise, and Vanderbilt's prediction was verified.

Emigrants' Home.

BY PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

LINCOLN, 1073.

Nebraskians talk about the Emigrants' Home at the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad statiou, in Lincoln, as a new thing under the sun. Yet Soloman was right in saying there is no such new thing. Analagous establishments abound abroad, and may be traced back a thousand years.

In Hamburg, traveling workmen live in lodging houses, called "Herbergen," or barborages belonging to their various trades,—and are furnished the loan of such tools as we need. But they pay the cost of whatever is furnished them; while, in Lincoln, shelter and lodging room are free—answering to the negro's definition of grace, as "something for nothing."

Herbergen—or industrial caravansaries, each serving as a house of call or labor mart—still survive in Prussia also. But the best counterpart of the Nebraska Emigrants' home are in Switzerland. At Olton, Stantz, Berne, and throughout the canton of Neuchatel, itinerant workmen find beds or other accommodations, free of charge.

Moreover, the "Hospices" scattered over the passes of the Alps, open their writer has himself been entertained in more than one of them, on the St. Bernards (Great and Little), St. Gothard, &c. No payment is expected from the poor, but other people are led carefully to the contribution box in the chapel.

All these European homes of hospitalety deserve the highest praise. The difference between them and that in Lincoln is this:—that they all send forth their guests to toil on the same low level as before, while the Lincoln house a stepping stone to a higher plane. It was last year, a refuge for hundreds of new emigrants till they could command higher wages than they ever earned, and for hundreds more until they secured homesteads, which raised them into the rank of landlords and lords of the land. The Alpine establishments are obsolescent and ready to vanish away, as having outlived ther usefulness, that beyond the Missouri is still in its cradle, but is yearly doubling its development.

All of them are as suns to guide, gladden and save; but, in spite of astronomy, the grand sun is setting in the East and rising in the West.

Helped on their way by the sister reception Houses in Burlington and Lincoln, 4,525 farm-hunters has bought 478,988 acres of railroad before New year's, 1873, or ten years credit, six per cent. interest, and on contracts made since that date, paying nothing of the principal till the end of the fourth year.

Ex-Senator Henry S. Foote, in the Washington Chronicle, writes: "It is known to many that Mr. Madison first tendered the commission of Major-General afterwards bestowed on Gen. Jackson, to Mr. Clay. Had he accepted it and fought successfully the the battle of New Orleans, as he doubtless would have done, how different might have been his own political fortunes, and how different the history of our country."

The Delphi Journal says that place was visited last Monday morning a week by a white frost.

The Greensburg Standard says, "We hear of a child born near this city having seven fingers on one hand. The doctor amputated the superfluous members, and the child is now doing well."

At Warsaw, on the 17th, Mrs. Florence Patterson, while engaged in ironing clothes, tried to increase the fire in the stove by pouring coal oil upon it from a can. The usual explosion and death, after hours of agony followed.

A man and wife (names not given) were found dead in bed, a few days ago, at their home, in Mt. Vernon, having died of cholera. When discovered their only child, two years old, was clamering over the dead bodies in a vain attempt to awake them.

"Cannot something be done to prevent young ladies from being insulted on our streets at night?" asks a Cincinnati paper. There can. Just have the girl's mother tuck her into her little bed about eight o'clock in the evening and lock the door on her.

A young lady at Eau Claire, Wisconsin, disapeared the other day, and after 300 peopled had searched for five hours, she was found sitting on the bank of the river with her lover, squeezing hands and talking nonsense, as if nothing had happened.

A certain amount of exercise is necessary to the enjoyment of good health. Neither very hard work nor great great muscular development are needed. Indeed it is almost certain that they are unfavorable. Great moderation in the occupation should be an agreeable one, adapted to the taste, and that it shall satisfy the ambiton.

The fair grounds of Whitley county have been sold at Sheriff's sale under a claim $3,400. The Post now rallies the citizens to come up and redeem the property which they will not fail to do. But the trouble to looked after, probably, is the careless waste of money and bad management at the fairs. There's where the leak generally is.

The Hoosier Capital boasts of another "foul deed"—a colored man beats his white mistress to death.—The city papers regard it as an act which excels anything in ferocity that has ever been enacted in that city abounding in newspapers and churches, and has an efficient police, the outside world is compelled to ask "why these things are thusly?"

John C. Stout tells this story to the Huntington Herald: 'During the storm on Thursday morning last, a colt belonging to W. P. Reee, in the vicinity of Kelso, became frightened and started ro run, went straight thro' a stiff rail fence, across a small lot, through another smaller sence, and then making a jump of about fifteen feet, he tore his way the through the side of a barn, and fell dead on the floor inside with his neck broken."

The Valapraiso Vidette truthfully remarks: "A local editor of many years experience has declared that the man is yet unborn who could write a local item and be perfectly sure that nobody would be offended. If we speak well of our neighbor, his enemy will be offended. If we speak disrespectfully of him his friend will stop the paper. If we write in favor of a city organization we offend those who oppose it, etc, but who cares. It will be a dull world if nobody moves in it."

A return to the old plan of apprenticing boys to trades is being advocated. The hosts of young men in every large city who apply for employment and fail to get it for the reason that they cannot truthfully affirm that they are educated or especially fitted for any particular business, constitutes a potent argument in favor of reform.—Under the apprentice system we should have fewer ignorant mechanics and incompetent business men. A trade is half a man's fortune.

A German settler in Ohio, found guilty of selling liquor, and sentenced to be imprisoned in the county jail for thirty days, protested as follows:

'Chail! Go to chail! Me go to chail! But I can't go! Dere's my piziness—my bakery. Who bakes my bread when I ben gone?' Then casting his eyes about the court appealingly, they fell upon the good natured face of jolly Chris. Ellwaner, a fellow-countryman who had no "piziness," and forthwith a brilliant idea struck him. Turning to the Judge he said, in sober earnest. 'Dere's Chris. Ellwaner! He got nothing to do; send him!'

WISHART

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to me to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it mus hold above all others in the market.

Eugenie has gone to Braemay, Scotland. It is situated among the most exquisite scenery of the Valley of Dee, almost within sight of Balmoral Castle and a drive from the mountain home of the Duke of Athol.

A tourist in one of the Shetland Islands, in the north of Scotland, recently fell over a cliff which rises perpendicularly to a height of 550 feet above the sea. His companion procured a boat and searched around the foot of the cliff, but could find no trace of the body.

The "hard labor" to which Frank Walworth is condemned at Sing-Sing is practically that of a clerk in a boot and shoe factory, with the necessity of living near the shop. Many a young man have been subjected to this dull career without having killed his father.

Brigham Young writes to a friend in San Diego that it is possible that, during the coming winter, after having planted his colony in Arizona, he may continue his trip through the Salt river country to Yuma, and thence come on a brief visit to San Diego, with a view to eventualties in the Southern Utah Railroad.

The stout gentleman, with a genial face full flowing sandy whiskers and surrounded with a bevy of gay damsels, is Secretary Belknap, of the War Department. Several young ladies here have sweethearts in the army, and they do not allow the widowed Secretary of War to suffer for want of agreeable attention.

When the Shah visited the Louvre he had an arm chair placed before the Venus of Milo, and "when he was seated," writes a correspondent, "the pedestal on which she stands was made to revolve on a pivot, thus revealing to the Persian Monarch her every beauty." His criticisms revealed the conoisuer, not only in the sculpture but in women.

The extortions, robberies and giant monopolies which have grown up under the fostering care of the Republican party, are palpable facts, the people are made to feel and know of them every day of their lives; and iust at present they are not in a mode to be hoodwinked and bambooseled by any clique of officials.

THE AMERICAN GIRL.

The Diary of "Minnie" at Saratoga Springs.

[From Eli Perkins in New York Graphic,]

Monday horribly cold. Arrived from Lake George to-day. Looked like a fright—know I did—when I got out of the omnibus. Wonder if the Vaughn are here. Phew! had to walk through fifty men smoking on the balcony. Eight dresses—eight days. Know Virginia is dying to see them. Such lace! Saw Bob Munson. Had same club house smell as Fred Walking's wine cellar. She kissed me in the hall twice. Pumped her about Dick. Didn't show in the parlor to-night. Make a sensation at breakfast. Who is this Dich? Loofis like a poke.

Teusday—Bob Munson's card before breakfast—the bore. Drank four glastes. Spooned with Bob on park seat; afraid it won't agree with me. I do belive he loves me. Said so. Squeezed my hand twice. The idiot. I'm too happy to live. Chops and codfish, Quaker style, for breakfast. Virginia called gith Dick. Such a dress—gored and puffed and fluted, and the dear knows what! Just saw an old flame, Albert, dear Albert. Bowed gracefully. Mamma frowned. Oh, dear! Asked him to call. Squeezed my hand a little. What did he mean? Virginia's mother very sick. Water was too much for me.

Wednesday—Such an event has happened. Dick called. Glad Virginia left him with me. Such a lovely waltz with Bob. Why don't he cut his nails? Horrible? I bite mine. After waltz spooned with Dick. Dick says I'm too sweet to live. Perfectly atrocious. Dick and I think alike. He likes the moon and I'm another. He is spoony' and so—well, I make him think I am. If that mean, jealous, Fanny Mason goes peering around again when Dick is holding my hand I'll scalp her. No, I'm to be her bridesmaid."

Thursday—Walked to the grave yard with Dick. Such a nice, sensible talk as we had. First, we talked about the soul—how destiny often binds two souls by an invisible chain. Pshaw, what an old Muggins Bob Munson is! Then we contidered the mission of a'man and woman upon earth—how they ought to comfort each other in sickness and in health If I looked like that fright who wore the blue dress I'd wear corsets. And then, Dick quite startled me by asking me if I ever cared for any one. Wore blue grenadide cut on the bias to-night. Told him, yes, for papa and mama. Always did look lovely grenadine. Dick is a darling. mean, Minnie, could you love me The fraud! Cut the Masons flat.

Friday—O dear! Rode to the lake Bob said, "I'm going to have a lemonade; what will you have?" Just as if I could say champagne after that Albert, dear Albert. Wore white muslin. Dick spooned again. "You look sweet enough to kiss," mustache tauchee my face. Said he longed for a chance to talk with me alone. Knew the precious time had come, and Dick was just a going to say it when ma came up with that dreadful old widower Thompson. O dear! Water disagrees with me again. Must stop it.

'Come, Minnie, you go with Mr. Thompson. I want to introduce your young friend, Dick, to the Masons.' I look like a fright. Don't pay to buy six-buttoned gloves to spoon in.

Dick flirted with Fanny Mason—the scare-crow! Wore Elizabeth ruffle four inches high. Did it to spite Fanny Mason. Where is Virginia?

Saturday—Dick proposed. Swell clothes did the business. I do love lavender gloves. Virginia is cut out, sure. Sang 'Rock me to Sleep' Fanny Mason said I had a cold. The meddling wudgock? Lavender is my color. Engaged to Dick. Gracious, I'm half afraid I love that fellow. He does kiss too sweet for anybody. Must stop drinking the water. Saw the educated pig. He's a boar. Mother caught Dick kissing me. Told father Stormed. Let out that we were engaged. 'Then you'll go home to-morrow.' O, dear, my fun is all over.—Must stop at the Point and take in the cadets once more. They can flirt Suck goslings. Dick goes with us, and Virginia—she's jilted! Ha, ha.

Grant's Minister in England.

From the Courier Journal.

You do Gen. Schench injustice when you charge that he swindled the public deliberately in the matter of the Emma Mine bubble, coming off himselt with full and dirty hands.—Unclean they certainly were, but not full I have taken the trouble while loitering here to look a little into the business, and I fancy I can give you a tolerably fair notion of Schenck' connection with it,

To begin with Schenck what most people would call a good fellow, who has had all life a turn for living beyond his means and a taste for draw poker. If Scheck had been born a lord, with a fortune, he would be dwelling in exile now on the Continent a fugitive from English duns and warrants. His official salary would not support a frugal Minister. It merely enables him to sustain a vicarious princely squalor. If Schenck sportive enterprises with the litature of the pictorial pasteboards were successful, they might enable him to eke out his income somewhat. But they are not. Schenck Spanish proverb says that they were designed by God to pick lice from poor men's heads. In other words Schenck was not meant for a Midas. That which he touches does not turn to gold—not even to silver. To make a long story short, he is poor, ambitious, genial, and thriftless; the very last man in America, despite his conceeded abilities, who should have been sent to a country like this- To make matters worse, he tell very soon after our arrival into a dissipated and expensive set; introduced the game of cards for which he has a mania, and has ever since thrown the serious work of the embassy on Mr. Morn, his Secretary of Legation, while he, with defficient skill and resources wresteled with the world, the flesh and the devil.

A party of English speculator, led by Albert Grant (who though no kin of the President, is an uncommonly. adroit and avaricious adventurer), seeing the embarrassment in which Schenck's affairs had fallen, laid hands upon him, finding him as a matter of course, an easy victim. A man who owes money which he cannot pay is not as a rule hard to seduce, provided his creditors are people of quality. A man who is obliged to keep up appearances in spite of himself soon loses the fine propriety. So Schenck fell into the Emma mine, taking Albert Grant's word that it was lined with silver, and, with characteristic heedlessness not looking to see that it was for him at least a mere mud ditch. He was not bribed at all. He did not receive a dollar in hand. He took a certain number of shares, gave his paper for them and holds them at this moment, having been swindle d with the rest. Had he had the sense to sell in time he would have realized handsomely, and had he been a swindler he would have sold in time. He is nothing of the sort. He is by nature and means to be by habit, a perfectly honest and honorable man. He is simply out of his element—a very roune peg in an exceedingly large and square hole. Instead of abusing him you should be sorry for him; for he is really a sprightly man, who, but for his habits, might have made a figure in the world. People in general here regard him as you do, and are surpised that he should be retained by the Government after such a scandal. But in society, where he is known as an easy card-loving, boon companion, he is liked, pitied, and tolerated.

Having now apologized for Gen. Schenck, let Mr. Watterson now try his hand at apologizing for President Grant's share in this little Emma business.

"Dan Berries."

HE GOES A FISHING.

Coville is well, and his boy has used that sequestered brick on the boy next door with success. The above named gentleman and myself went a fishing. I paid $3 for a blue shirt, $2,60 for my bait $11 for a pole, and $2 for a line. A chalk line would have answered just as well, and all the reel I had found in a pint of bourbon. We each had separate boats. Mine wasn't a good biting boat. I got into the boat and I saw a hatchway with a cork in it, and I thinks I I'll look down in the cellar I pulled out the cork, and for a half a minute I thought I was in Central Park. I started a beautiful fountain. I put the cork back in a hurry, and it reminded me of Bailey the way I had to bail water out. The Essex street man yelled out—

Says he, "You came pretty near being a sinker."

Says I, "Yes. We don't want sinkers, though; we are fly fishing.

Says he, "Dry up."

Says I, "I wish I could."

It's a fact; we were fly fishing. Old Cavill kindly selected My fly and put it on for me. I wanted to show my skill, so I stood up and swung the line around my head, and letting go I made a figure 8 in the air, and the fly went at least ten feet. Those other fellows kept hauling in fish, and I kept hauling in my bait- They would yell 'look at your bait.' And I'd look at my bait, and that's all I did do except get hungry, until 4 P. M., when old Covill rowed alongside with some fresh bait. The old one he put in his packet. I swung the line over my head, when the Nelson street man yelled out, 'What are you doing?' Says I, 'I'm fishing.' On inquiring into the matter I found my hook had got caught in the Nelson street man's larboad ear. He unpinned it and chucked it overboard and I got a bite. Then those cusses began to yell worse than Modocs. 'There she blows!'

'Haul in quick!' 'Steady now, steady!' 'Ease her up!' 'Play with it!' 'Drown it!' 'Have a care, my hearty,' and such like doings, until I landed my prize in the boat and found it to be about so——long. Old Covill yelled out, 'Take it to a dress maker!'

Says I, 'What for?'

Says he, 'To have it dressed'

The Essex street man said 'he'd like the second joint. The Nelson steet man 'wanted a piece of the breast.' The Wooster street man wanted the hind legs and the oil.' Old Coville said he'd lead me his marine glass to see it with.' The Essex street man said 'a glass of whisky would do better as that would make me see double.' Then they asked 'how in the world I would ever get it home?' That fish wasn't as big as a day old sardine. It didn't have any name it wasn't old enough. I took it to an apothecary shop to get it weighed. Ge said I 'had ought to use the fish's own scales as he had not any small enough.' That night we all assembled in the hotel which I didn't win in that lottery, and I figured up expenses

One blue shirt	$3 00
One bait	2 60
One pole	11 00
One line	2 00
One boat the spray	50
	$19 10

The boys seem to feel very funny about something. I told 'em I thought it strange that they should have such good luck and I none. Then Covill spoke up:

'You didn't use good bait.'

Says I, 'you put it on.'

Says he, 'I know it; here it is.'

And as sure as I live that one pulled my bait out of his pocket and it was a cast iron shoo fly breastpin. Then, I treated to champagne and left.

Lots of circuses coming to Auburn. Remember the two large ones next week

LAW OF DEATH.

BY JOHN HAY.

The s lvany. Fairest she

She had, so sweet and gay
And d as the light of day.
She w ng, and he so fair,
The s t eyes and the same dark hair,
To the blossomy way

Ther eath-dart from the sky.
Kilva r darling die.
The g shade his eyes invades;
Out o the red bloom fades;
His w feels the icy chill,
The s shudder and are still.
And y held him fast
Long's last pulse was past
As if could restore
The o out for evermore.

But saw her child was dead
She ashes on her head,
And small corpse, pale and sweet,
And wildly through the street,
She ll at Buddha's feet.

"Ma helpful! help me now!
Here et I humbly bow;
Hav Buddha! help me now!"
She on the marble floor,
And e dead child o'er and o'er.
And y upon the air
There answer to her prayer,
"Bri -night a Lotus tied
With from a house where none has died.'

She l laughed with thankful joy,
Sure god would save the boy.
She Lotus by the stream;
She it from its noonday dream,
And om door to door she fared,
To a house by death was spared
Her rew cold to see the eyes
Of all with slow surprise:
"Ki hou hast lost thy head;
Noth help a child that's dead.
Ther s not by the Ganges' side
A ho ere none hath ever died."
Thr ugh the long and weary day
From door she bore away
With heart, and on her arm,
A he ad, a deeper harm.
By g gold and ivory,
By w huts of poverty,
The refrain, heard poor Kilvany,
The are few—the dead are many.

The g came, so still and fleet,
An ook her hurrying feet,
And, sick, by the sacred fane
She fe d prayed the god again.
She so and beat her bursting breast:
"Ah! hast mocked me! Mightiest!
Lo! I h wandered far and wide—
There s no house where none hath died."
And Bud answered, in a tone
Soft as a at twilight blown,
But gran heaven and strong as death
To him w ears with ears of faith:
"Child, t art answered! Murmur not!
Bow, and pt the common lot."

Kilvany he with reverence meet,

THE ME WHO FACE DEATH.

Don't you [illegible] and make any mistake! The pictures [illegible] the comic papers, and all the rest of the jokes about policemen, may be [illegible] very well in their way, and I can laugh myself at a good joke at the expense [illegible] the force, but for all that there is n[illegible] so much in them as some of the would-be sharp ones make out. Most of 'e[illegible] are as stale as they well can be, and [illegible]ough for anything I know they may ha[illegible] been to the point sometime, they ai[illegible] now-a-days, not by a long way. There's a saying about life being all beer and [illegible]ittles, and you may take my word for it that life ain't all cupboard courtship for a policeman. Even if he had the inclination for it, his superiors would take precious good care that he didn't spend his time on duty making love to cooks and feeding in gentlemen's kitchens. That may be very well in pantomime, but it's about as much the real thing as pantomime fish and carrots are, and, whatever people may think, policemen don't always come up just when the fight [illegible] over, and it isn't only women and little boys that they collar—I should like to see some of them that talk that way have to tackle some of the customers that we have to do; they'd mighty soon alter their tone, I expect. Why, taking it all through, there are few businesses as are more risky than a policeman's. In plenty of neighborhoods he goes on duty with his life in his hand. People read and talk about the dangerous classes, but it is the policeman that has to deal with 'em, and it's him as knows how dangerous they are. They know whether it's only women or boys we collar; they know who lays them by the heels, and they remember it with a vengeance. "Revenge is sweet," is a motto with a good many of them, and when they are loose they will often go a long way to have it on the man that has been the means of caging them—that was how I came by the gash you see on the side of my face here.

I had got a customer two years ago for stealing lead, and I was one of those that escorted him to the van after he was sentenced, and as we passed along he growls out to me under his breath, "You scored this chalk, but you may lay odds that I'll score the next, if I have to die for it."

I could tell that he meant what he said, and I bore it in my mind. When he was out again, I kept well on my guard, whenever I saw him lurking about; but at length he was too sharp for me.

One rather foggy night I was passing the top of a dark side street, when hearing a rush, I wheeled around as quickly as I could—but it was too late. I just caught sight of the scoundrel making a swing hit at me with a bottle tied in a handkerchief, and the next instant I was stretched senseless. I shall carry the mark of the blow to the grave with me, as you may see, and it was very nigh carrying me to the grave; I was within half an inch of death, as you may say, for had it been half an inch more on the temple it would have been an end of me. As it was it laid me up for about three months, but beyond marking me, it did me no permanent harm.

When I got on duty again I said nothing, but made up my mind that there should be a third chalk to the game between me and the fellow that struck the blow. He had bolted as soon as he had done it, and hadn't been heard of since; but for all that I felt quite sure he would turn up in his old lurk again, sooner or later, for his wife and all his companions were there. So I watched and watched, and sure enough, at the end of a couple of years, I spotted him again. I found out that he had only been back a week, when I caught sight of him, and so I didn't try to flutter the news too soon. I let three months go by, so that he might think he was all right, and then I went in to score my next chalk.

I reported him, and half a dozen of us were told off to take him. Three went into the house after him, and two kept watch in the front, and I took my stand at the back, the way he was likeliest to come if he managed to make a run for it. As it turned out he did make a run, or at any rate he got a start.

It was a low-built house, and before those who went in could get up stairs he dropped out of the bed-room window, coming down safely on his feet, but before he could take to his heels I was facing him, my right hand holding my staff ready-drawn behind my back, my left hand ready to collar him.

"Oh, it's you, is it?" he grinds out between his teeth, and before I could say a word or move an inch, he whipped out a large clasp-knife. I could see murder in his eye, and I dashed in at once to seize him; but before I could lay hold of him he had gashed my hand to the bone—and then it was my turn. He was drawing back to make a running stab at me, when, quick as lightning, and all the strength I could put into it, I swung around my right arm and caught him with the staff in the face, felling him like a bullock. He was quite senseless, and by the time the others got round I had him quietly handcuffed. When we got him to the station we sent for a doctor to dress his wound, but he wouldn't have it touched, and insisted on being taken into court next morning without being washed and his face all marked; but though he certainly looked horrible enough, he didn't make anything by his move. He was well known, and besides, though I struck with a will, I struck in self-defense and for life. He had penal servitude, and didn't live to do his time out.

That is the sort of a customer a policeman has sometimes to tackle, and he never knows the day or hour he may have to tackle. Men as are wanted will generally come quiet enough when they find they are fairly dropped upon; but still you can never be quite certain of them; if the drink or the evil is in them at the time, they may take it into their heads to show fight, and when they do, they're not particular as to trifles—the first thing that comes handy they'll use. But, as I said before, it's when they go in for being revenged on you that they are most dangerous. It isn't a case of fighting then; they don't give you the chance to fight; they creep upon you—in the dark for choice—and are up to all sorts of cruel, cowardly ways of laming a man. Many a fine man has been made a cripple for life, in doing, or for having done his duty as a policeman, and some have been killed outright.

Then see how a policeman has to go into a row and take his chance of what may happen from interfering with wild or drunken men with their blood up; again, see how he has to go into a house where "murder!" is being shouted, and where, perhaps, the first thing that meets his sight is a man more than half mad, slashing right and left with a poker. Then there is being at fires, and being out in all kinds of weather, so that what with one thing and what with another, a policeman's is both a hard job and a risky one. If there's any one as thinks it ain't risky, just ask any policeman's wife as cares for her husband, how often she has lain awake, fearing something might happen to him, when he's been on night duty in a bad quarter.

What class of criminals are the most dangerous for policemen to have to deal with? Well, I hardly know; the regulars, or "habitual criminals," as they are called, are much of a muchness. A sneak-thief may turn Turk upon you, while a burglar or garroter, as you might think likely to show fight, will often let himself be took as quietly as a lamb. The chance cases are often rough ones. A mad-drunk sailor ain't a nice customer to handle, and a mad-drunk soldier—especially when he takes to the belt—is a decidedly nasty one; and sometimes your swindling clerk or absconding bankrupt will show his teeth—pull his pistol, or pick up a decanter or a chair, and talk of knocking your brains out if you lay hands on him; though of course we do lay hands on 'em for all that. If you dash in boldly at them they generally knock under.

Conners used to be about the worst, but there's not many about now. There is one customer, however, as is more likely than not to make a fight of it before he'll be taken, and as is generally a rough un to fight, and that is the escaped convict. It's generally a rough and desperate hand that does manage to escape, and one that's dreadfully fond of his liberty, and knows that if he is took again he may bid a long good-bye to it. A gentleman of that stamp gave me the toughest tussle I ever had, and the one I'm proud of, for I fought him fair and took him single-handed. When he made his escape he got clear away, and he had sense enough not to hark back again to his old London haunts while the search was hot; but about a year afterward he did venture back, and I accidentally got wind of it.

I knew that there was five pounds for any one that took him, and I had a pretty good idea that the governor of the prison he had broke out of would stand something more; but more than all that, I—well, I may as well say it—I had not been long in the force at the time, and I wanted to show that I had something in me; and so, though I could have asked for help, I made up my mind to try and take him myself. I was twenty-seven at the time, stood five foot eleven, weighed twelve stone—good fighting weight—and, though I say it that shouldn't, the convict, escaped or unescaped, didn't breathe that I feared to take single-handed.

It was not of the man himself that I was afraid, though I knew he was a Tartar; what made the job so risky was the danger of being set upon by the whole of the gang to which he belonged, and who always went about together, and would, I knew, think nothing of murdering a policeman. I waited a few weeks to see what chance might turn up, and at length one afternoon I heard that the gang had picked up some sailors and were spreeing with them in a public-house some little distance from their regular lurk; and thinking to myself that I might wait long enough without finding any much better opportunity, I determined to try my luck there and then, and down to this public-house I went.

There was no one then particular in the bar, and so I passed through to the back, and there in a shut-in skittle alley I caught sight of the gang, eight in number, and with three sailors in tow. I felt qualmish, but I knew that it wouldn't do to give way to that feeling, and so seeing my gentleman there in the midst as large as life, I put on my boldest face, bounced into the alley, and shutting the door, placed my back against it. Though the gang were taken by surprise, they acted cleverly enough; they didn't know which of them was wanted, and neither of them said a word or moved an inch, but I noticed my man pick up a beer-pot and make a pretence of sipping at it, though I could see easy enough that his real move was to be ready to fling it at my head if it should turn out that he was the man wanted.

I caught his eye, and in an off-handed tone said:

"Oh, you know it's you I've come for, then; but take my advice, don't do anything in the pot-throwing line. It will only make things worse for you, for the house is surrounded, and there are men enough in reserve to take a houseful of you."

"I shall make it death or glory this time," he answered, "and so here goes;" and as he spoke the words, he threw the pot as hard as he could, and then made a dash for a window at the end of the alley. The pot just skimmed my ear, and then I was on him like a panther, and dragged him back just as he had got about half out the window. I downed him, and had all but mastered him, when one of the gang, that had popped out as soon as soon as my back was from the door, came running back to tell the others that it was all gammon about there being a reserve. This was enough for them. Without another word said, they made a rush towards me, and, though I still held my man, my heart grew cold, a prayer flashed through my mind, for I felt that I was face to face with death. I knew that they'd stick at nothing, and that the very same gang had kicked a man to death only a few months before. But I was in luck.

I would have called to the sailors for help, but they looked helplessly drunk, and two of 'em was, but the third, as it happened, was only half-seas over. He was a big lump of a fellow, a Yankee mate, as I knew afterwards, and about as cool and bold a card as there well could be. As they sprang forward, so did he, in an aggravating sort of way. "Gentlemen, fair play is a jewel, and I like to see it respected—and so I will. They are man to man, and pretty fairly matched, and if the officer can take him he shall." Whether or not he would have fired at them, they must have believed so, for they slunk back. All the same, they had done a good thing for their mate.

While this had been going on I had, without knowing it, slackened my hold, and my man putting out all his strength in a sudden move, threw me off, and got on to his feet, and before I could close with him again, had drawn a life preserver. He made a dash at me with it, and aimed a crushing blow at my head.

Fortunately it only reached my left shoulder, but even there it was a crippler for the time being, for I felt my arm drop useless at my side. He staggered a bit from partly missing his blow, and before he could recover himself I was alongside of him, and he went over like a ninepin, and held up his hands to have the bracelets put on.

It was only about a two minutes' job altogether, but it was mighty tough one, I can tell you, and a dangerous one too; and what I say is, that when people talk about policemen, they should remember that they never know the day or hour when, in the way of duty, they may have to tackle a job in which their life is at stake.—Cassell's Magazine.

Contagious Lunacy—Singular Facts.

Dr. Dudley, the Assistant Superintendent of the insane asylum at Lexington, Ky., committed suicide a few days ago, while in a state of mental derangement. He had been for twenty-two years in daily intercourse with insane people, and had acquired remarkable proficiency in the treatment of all kinds of mental maladies. The local papers do not assign any specific cause for his own aberration; but we incline to believe that it was the result of constant association with insane people. It has been stated by the highest authority on such subjects that no man or woman can perform for a long period of years such duties as fell to the lot of Dr. Dudley without effect upon their own minds. A few years ago an eminent physician resigned the superintendency of an eastern asylum which his skill had rendered famous, and he assigned to his friends no other reason for his conduct than that he felt certain he could not remain five years longer in his position without becoming a fit subject for one of the maniac's cells. He said that frequently, after making the daily round of his patients, he would feel a sensatson which he interpreted as a premonition of lunacy, and of which he could only rid himself by leaving his post and mingling with the outside world for a few days. It would seem, then, that lunacy is a slowly contagious mental disease.

Rifle Ball Removed from the Brain.

Dr. H. F. Biggar, assisted by G. J. Jones and Mr. Woolcot, of Grafton, yesterday skillfully removed a rifle ball from the brain of Mr. Charles Pierce, of Liverpool, by trepanning. On the 4th of December last Mr. Pierce was shot by the accidental discharge of a rifle. The ball entered the upper lip on the right side, passed through the soft tissues, and, jumping over the eye, struck the projecting ridge of the bone above it. Here it was broken, a piece passing off through the peak of his cap, and the rest penetrating between the tables of the skull and the top of his brain. Ever since he has had frequent and violent spasms—as many as 900 since the 4th of July, his father says. The pressure which caused them being removed, the spasms will eventually entirely cease.—Cleveland Leader.

A GREAT GEOGRAPHICAL FEAT.—One of the most remarkable exploits of modern geographical research was recently recounted by its performer before the Royal Geographical Society. In 1872 Ney Elias, a distinguished English traveler, started from Pekin westward to cross the great desert of Gobi, and in honor of his splendid march of 2,000 miles to western Mongolia and his survey, which he accomplished unaided, he has just received the Founder's Gold Medal of the Royal Geographical Society. His total journey from Pekin, China, to St. Petersburg, across the heart of Asia, is probably the longest land journey on record, and one of the most interesting to geographers.

The Whip.

The term "whip" has a great variety of meanings, all derived from one root. To the collegian it suggests the dullard who stands at the foot of his class in point of scholarship. To the fox-hunter it suggests the huntsman who keeps the hounds from wandering. Thackeray calls fishing with a hook and line "whipping" a stream. To "whip the cat" is, in the slang of England, to be either extremely parsimonious, or an itinerant tailor, carpenter, or the like, and strolling from place to place in search of a job. Sailors have a meaning peculiar to themselves for the term. Its most notable use, aside from the primitive meaning as an instrument for driving, is parliamentary.

Each party in Parliament has its "whip." He is a distinct officer, recognized, permanent, and responsible. He is, in effect, the adjutant. He does nothing of any importance without instruction from the leader, nor would the government do anything without consulting him. The rank and file of the party are obedient to the "whip." If Mr. Snodgrass is making a speech, it matters not what his subject, the "whip" asks the leader of the party, Gladstone or Disraeli, as the case may be, who he wants to have speak in reply. The whip at once notifies the person designated, and when Mr. Snodgrass sits down no one presumes to rise in reply unless he has been "whipped."

Another duty of the whip is to see that the members of the party are all on hand when an important vote is to be taken, or, as the English is, a division is called. If a member is necessarily absent, the whip arranges, if possible, to pair him off with some member of the opposition. This arrangement is made with the whip of the other party, and duly entered in the pair-book kept for that purpose.

He is paid a regular salary from a fund contributed by the Ministers and leading clubs of the parties—Carlton and Reform. The position is regarded as an honorable and important one. The Right Hon. Henry William Bouverie Brand, present Speaker of the House of Commons, was the Whip of the Liberal party up to the time of his promotion to the vacancy caused by the resignation of the Hon. Evelyn Dennison, who resigned the Speakership and was then made Viscount Ossington. Mr. Brand succeeded Sir George Hayter as Whip in 1859.

Escape of a Convict.

The art of escaping from prison is so fast becoming extinct that it is a relief to find an occasional daring exploit in that way. While the steamer L'Orne, from France, was lying at the port of Melbourne, Victoria, with 500 Communist prisoners on board destined for the penal settlement of New Caledonia, one of the prisoners, named Serigne, at dusk got over the side of the vessel, and hanging in the portauvans waited until 7:30, when, dropping into a collier, he lay concealed among the coals until 9:30. He then tied his pocket-book and papers in his handkerchief to keep them dry, and, lowering himself over the side of the lighter, swam to the stern, where a boat was in tow. Cutting the rope with his knife, and hanging to the portion of the rope which remained, he drifted into the bay with the boat until about 300 yards from the vessel, when, hearing a cry and thinking an alarm had been given, he loosed his hold of the boat and struck out in the direction of the lights on the Sandbridge shore. After swimming for about three-quarters of an hour, he caught the cable of a vessel and rested there for nearly an hour in a state of exhaustion. He then started again for the shore about midnight, and after half an hour's swim got safely to land.

A Discouraged Editor.

Yesterday we engaged a new "local"—that is, a new assistant. The old one we had last week evinced almost human intelligence, but as a general rule his time was so fully occupied in trying to throw four sixes against some bar-keeper's tray-full that we didn't receive much benefit from his labors. We can't say that as a purveyor of news the new one is much better. He was out all day yesterday, and after the paper had gone to press he rushed into the office with his first and only item: We give it verbatim:

"STARTLING ACCIDENT.—A horse run away, about a half hour ago, hitched to a buggy. If some folks who was crossing the street awhile before he came along they would have got hurt at a tremendous rate of speed as their legs, ect., would have got broke, if they hadn't got out of the way.—Stockton (Cal.) Gazette.

C. M. WHEAT tells an incident that illustrates the immense immigration into Texas. He was talking with a man in Dallas, one day, who had just come through from Saline county, Missouri, and was detained at the Canadian river, in the Indian Territory, for nineteen days, two days on account of the high water, and the remaining seventeen days simply on account of the press of business at the ferry, 478 emigrant teams waiting to cross. The rapidity with which the northern counties of Texas are settling up is beyond description.—Winona Republican.

A SINGULAR case is reported from the Massachusetts State prison in an application for the pardon of one Clark, now serving out a life sentence. In 1861 he was put in for life on charge of arson, but was pardoned out ten years after on a showing that he was in all probability falsely imprisoned, the condition of his release being that he should be recommitted if he should be convicted of any other crime, to serve out his life sentence. Last May he was arrested for assault and battery, and, according to the terms of his pardon, sent back.

A GENTLEMAN was chiding his son for staying out late at night, and said: "Why, when I was your age, my father would not allow me to go out of the house after dark." "Then you had a deuce of a father, you had," said the young profligate, whereupon the father very rashly vociferated: "I had a confounded sight better one than you have, you young rascal."

MELANCHOLY suicide—A little boy, on being threatened with a whipping, hung his head.

The Greatest Crop of the World.

A question widely discussed involves the relative value of the wheat, cotton, tea and hay crops of the world. Which of these products employ the greatest amount of the world's capital? It is said that hay leads the rest, and the items that enter into the account as stated are somewhat startling, and will make a granger's hair stand on end. Cotton and tea are local crops, while hay is produced everywhere the world over, and thus the hay crop greatly outweighs either of the other two. The aggregate reported value of all farm products for 1870 was $2,447,538,658; but as this includes additions to stock, "betterments," etc., it is probably too high. Now the hay crop for that year—that is the grass dried and cured for use or sold—is reported at over 27,000,000 tons. This, at half the selling price in the large cities, would amount to $405,000,000, and is far greater than the aggregate home value of the cotton crop or any other crop. But the cured "hay" is but a portion of the grass crop. The other portion is used on the ground, and it requires considerable calculation to get at the value so used, even in a rough way. In the first place live stock, including horned cattle, horses, sheep, swine, etc., to the value of $1,525,000,000, were fed from it that year. Averaging the lives of these at five years, we have one-fifth of that sum as representing the grass fed to them in 1870, viz.: $305,000,000; next we find the value of the animals slaughtered for food in that year to be $309,000,000. and as this is an annual product, the whole of it will for the present be credited to the grass crop; next we find that the butter crop of 1870 was 514,000,000 pounds, which at the low average of 25 cents, amounts to $128,000,000, and this goes to the credit of grass; next we have 235,000,000 gallons of milk, which, averaged at the low estimate of 10 cents a gallon, adds $25,000,000 more to the credit of the grass crop; then we have 100,000,000 pounds of wool at 25 cents a pound, adding $25,000,000 more; and finally 53,000,000 pounds of cheese at 10 cents, adding over $5,000,000 to the total of these credits to the grass crop of 1870, which aggregates $887,000,000. Now let us add the value of the "hay" crop as given above—viz., $405,000,000—and we have a grand total for "hay" and the products of grass consumed on the ground amounting to $1,292,000,000. This is of course subject to the deduction, as the meat, butter, milk, cheese and wool-producing animals consume other food besides grass and hay. To make ample allowance for this we deduct the entire value of the corn and oat crops of 1870, estimated at $270,000,000, and this leaves a remainder of $1,082,000,000 to be credited to the hay and grass crop of that year, when the reported aggregate of all farm products was $2,447,538,658. If our estimates make even the roughest approach to accuracy, the value of that crop was two-fifths of the aggregate value of all farm products, and hence we may infer that two-fifths of the capital then invested in agricultural pursuits was devoted to the grass crop, and this in the United States equals (in round numbers) $4,575,000,000. From these figures the deduction is palpable that king cotton is uncrowned and dethroned, and we may be forced to admit that "all flesh" and all else is hay, if not "grass."—Memphis Appeal.

How to Get Rich!

That is what everybody is trying to do, but we wish that the poor understood the secret of it better, or, rather, carried it out into practice. Some think that it lies wholly in receiving high wages. It is not so! A mechanic might be paid $50 or $75 per week, but if he spent all this money as he went along, he would never get rich in the world. Thus it is that a prudent man, whose wages are but $12 a week, is in a fair way to obtain a competency eventually, while a spendthrift whose weekly pay is $25 or $30 will very likely bring up at last in an almshouse. Are these notions old-fogyish and not worthy the attention of young fellows of energy, dash, spirit, and all that? Perhaps some may come to such a conclusion, but the notions are true, nevertheless.

It is the money a man SAVES, not what he gets, that makes him rich. Now the poor don't save. It may seem odd, and perhaps rough, to assert such a thing, but it is oftentimes true. "The poor are always prodigal," and the money they expend foolishly in tobacco, drinks, ornaments, and other superfluities and follies, would, if retained and placed on deposit, amount in a few years to a considerable sum. Laying by but 55 cents a day, and depositing it in a savings bank, foots up $200 in a year, and in ten years $2,600. Here is the secret of getting rich, and if poor men and young beginners in life would pay attention to these facts, a competency would soon be obtained by many who may not otherwise procure it, but who have to live from "hand to mouth" all their days. Young men, and women, too! think of these things.—Boston Investigator.

An Adroit Reproof.

A presiding elder of the United Brethren Church was preaching in Minnesota, and was much annoyed by persons talking and laughing. He paused, looked at the disturbers, and said:

"I am always afraid to reprove those who misbehave in church. In the early part of my ministry I made a great mistake. As I was preaching a young man who sat before me was constantly laughing, and almost continually making uncouth grimaces. I paused and administered a severe rebuke. After the close of the service, one of the official members came to me and said: 'Brother, you have made a great mistake; that young man whom you reproved is an idiot.' Since then I have always been afraid to reprove those who misbehave in church, lest I should repeat the mistake and reprove another idiot."

During the rest of the service, at least, there was good order.

THE "coming man" is delayed, not being able to get through, because he is a dead-head and the pass system is abolished.

EARTH'S ANGELS.

I never saw an angel,
Except the ones in books;
I don't believe a mortal
Knows how an angel looks.
We guess at something misty,
With trailing wings of white,
With amber tresses floating,
And garments strangely white.

But I believe earth's angels
Walk here in mortal guise,
Though we discern but faintly
Through heavy-lidded eyes,
Or see them as they leave us,
Who walked beside us here,
Their angelhood quite hidden
Because it lived so near.

I can remember angels
Who seemed like common folks,
Who wore old-fashioned bonnets,
And faded winter cloaks:
Who came when dire disaster
Crowned lesser home mishap,
Or younger claimants crowded
The dear maternal lap.

With curving arms wide open
To take the weary in,
With patient love to listen
To childish want or sin.
What better thing could angels
For childish sinners do,
Than listen to their story,
And bid them promise new?

I think of fireside angels,
Upon whose faded hair
There shone no crown of glory,
And yet the crown was there;
When tender love, true-hearted,
Forgave the wrongs it knew,
And patient voice gave answer
The days of trial through.

Ah, me! the childish angel
Who beckons as I write!
Perchance I should not know him
In mystic robe of white.
He wears a schoolboy's jacket,
And cap, and boots, to me,
As when we walked at twilight,
His head against my knee.

There are dear mother angels—
We each perchance know one—
Whose robes of better glory
Are daily being spun.
With loving hands to guide us,
With loving speech to cheer,
Said I not well, earth angels
Walk daily with us here?

Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

It appears from the annual report of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, that during the past year 835 horses have been killed by them which were permanently disabled, besides other smaller animals; 753 sick, lame and disabled horses have been ordered out of harness and sent home to their stables. Nearly 1,500 horses which had fallen sick or injured themselves in the streets have been removed by ambulances since their introduction. By the statistics of the New York Rendering Company, it appears that 2,575 horses died from the epizootic, and 682 were destroyed with rotten feet, caused to a great extent by traveling last winter through the salted streets. The income of the Society for the year, including previous balance, was $33,130.43. The expenditure during the same period was $27,297.18. Total balance on hand May 1, 1873, $14,232.41. Liabilities same date, $20,000, being the balance of purchase money on headquarters.—New York Express.

A Great City Dropping to Pieces.

M. de Beauvoir, a French traveler, to whom we owe the best and most picturesque description of Peking yet given to the Western world, says that city is but "an epitome of decay." "Thebes, Memphis, Carthage, Rome, are ruins which tell of violent vicissitude; Peking is a skeleton dropping into dust. The ravine-like streets are knee-deep in every sort of rubbish; the moats, the canals and the rivers are all and always dry; the parks, the once marvelous ponds, are turned to desert places. Triumphal arches stand side by side with wretched tumbled-down booths, surmounted by a forest of little poles, whence paper 'signs' dangle in the air, and uniformity is lent to all by the thick layer of evil-smelling dust which lies upon them, the same dust that is always whirling around, hurting the eyes and offending the nostrils." This great city, in which nothing is repaired, and where it is penal to pull down anything, is slowly dropping to pieces; and it is the opinion of M. de Beauvoir that, before a century has passed, it will have been abandoned and ceased to exist.

How Many Gods?

In the good old days when flogging was considered as a means of grace, and anniversary processions, picnics, and Christmas trees were in the very distant future, a boy was asked by his Sunday-school teacher: "John, how many Gods are there?" "Two." (Sternly)—"How many?" "Three, sir." "John, how many Gods are there?" "Four, sir." At five the flogging commenced and continued, while John rose rapidly and by regular progression, to ten. Beyond ten he refused to go, and was finally sent home. As he "dragged his slow length along" he met a boy on his way to the same school. "Going to that Sunday-school?" "Yes." "You are, are you? Well, how many Gods are there?" "One," stoutly answered the boy, "one!" "One," chuckled John; "go on, my boy. Go on up there with your one God, and a good time you will have of it. I had ten, and they flogged me nearly to death."

An Appreciative Bird.

A correspondent of a Georgia paper writes that in Athens, that State, in a beautiful residence, sat in a snug grove, live Mr. Y. L. G. Harris and his wife. For five years a pair of red birds have built their nest in a tree very near the parlor window; and each successive year the old birds bring back their young of the year before, to live upon the bounty of their benefactors. The most peculiar thing, though, is the passion which the patriarch bird has for music. As soon as any one commences playing on the piano in the parlor, this remarkable bird flies to the window-sill, and there, by the grotesquest motions, shows how completely his soul is aroused by the harmony. When the window is down he will dash himself against the pane of glass with the utmost fury, as if to get inside, but when the window is raised never ventures further than the sill.

AT a social meeting in Boston, Gen. F. A. Walker read a paper on the prospective population of the United States, in which he contended that, instead of reaching 100,355,185 in the year 1900, as calculated by Elkanah Watson, or 100,337,408, as calculated by DeBow, or 107,000,000, as calculated by Commissioner Wilson, it will only be somewhere between 69,000,000 and 84,000,000, most probably 73,000,000 to 76,000,000.

GREAT RAILWAY ENTERPRISE.

The Gigantic Work of the New York Central and Hudson River Company—Four Steel Rail Tracks from Buffalo to New York.

The New York Central and Hudson River Railway Company is now engaged in the active prosecution of a work, the magnitude of which few of the people fully appreciate. This work consists in the laying of two additional tracks from New York to Buffalo, with all the necessary accompaniments, making it a four-track road, and the most complete in the world. The enterprise is no visionary or ill-considered undertaking. It grows out of the imperative necessities of the company's rapidly increasing traffic. It springs from the pressing demands of commerce. In 1862 the combined earnings of the Central and the Hudson River from passengers, $3,604,700.32, and from freight $7,810,015.31. In 1872, the earnings of the consolidated company were, from passengers, $6,662,006.82, and from freight, $16,259,646.82—more than double in both departments. This enormous advance tells the story of the increasing needs.

But this is not all. The company has over ten thousand freight cars. It runs over sixteen miles of trains every day. It has more than five hundred locomotives. If its locomotives and cars were placed on the track in a continuous line, they would extend one hundred and twenty miles, or nearly all the way from this city to New York. At any given point on the line more than a hundred through trains pass every day—that is, one in every ten or fifteen minutes. All this vast business cannot be crowded upon the present tracks without great difficulty and extra cost. Besides the freight trains, the company runs a large number of fast passenger trains every day. These, of course, have the precedence. Every freight train is obliged to get out of the way of every passenger train. Fifteen minutes before the latter is due the former must be off on a side track, and, to guard against accident, it is not permitted to move until ten minutes after the passenger train has passed. Thus there is a loss of twenty-five minutes in every case. The economy in railwaying consists in keeping the rolling-stock moving, and this loss of twenty-five minutes several times repeated every day with the whole sixteen miles of freight trains is a heavy expense and tax. If it could be avoided, freight could be carried from ten to twenty per cent. cheaper, and that saving is enough to make it pay to build two additional tracks. Authority to so enlarge the capacity of the road was obtained from the last Legislature, and the work of track-laying, grading, and equipping the line is now being pushed forward with practical rapidity. The company has already bought for this purpose 60,000 tons of English steel rails, which are now being delivered. None but steel rails are to be used in any part of the work. As it requires from 2,500 to 3,000 ties per mile, full 2,000,000 ties will be used for the whole, including the sidings. About seventy miles are already graded and ready for the laying of the track. It is expected that 250 miles will be graded this fall, and that the whole will be completed in two years.

It is designed that the two north tracks shall be used for passenger trains and the two south tracks for freight. In laying the new tracks the effort is made to straighten out the line as far as possible, and take out the curves, and with this view the new tracks are not placed throughout on the same side of the old, but they are adjusted so as to best accomplish this end.

The cost of this work is estimated at gom $15,000,000 to $20,000,000. Before rf was undertaken, there was no mortitage on the road, only bonds, taken up from the roads which entered into consolidation, to the amount of $15,000,000. The road has now been mortgaged to the extent of $40,000,000 to cover these bonds and the cost of the new improvements.—Albany Journal.

The Proposed New State.

The new State which it is proposed to make out of certain counties in Kentucky, Tennessee and Mississippi, will embrace an area of from 25,000 to 30,000 square miles. It will take seven counties from Kentucky, having a population of 79,741; nineteen counties from Tennessee, with a population of 359,399; and eighteen counties from Mississippi, with a population of 281,785; in all, forty-four counties, with a total population, according to the census of 1870, of 720,925, which, with the increase since that time, it is estimated, will amount in round numbers to 800,000. The principal towns which Kentucky will lose in this event are Blandville, Paducah, Benton, Moscow, Mayfield, Murray and Hickman. Tennessee will lose Memphis, Tiptonville, Union City, Dyersburg, Ripley, Humboldt, Jackson, Lexington, Brownsville, Somerville, Bolivar, Purdy, and others. Mississippi will lose many places which are now of historical interest, growing out of their being the scenes of stirring events during the war; among them, Hernando, Holly Springs, Corinth, Iuka, Brownsville, Batesville, Fulton, Aberdeen, Oxford, Coffeyville, Grenada, Charleston and Pontotoc. The entire new State indeed was the theater of many of the most important battles of the war of the rebellion. This division of counties will take from Kentucky all that area included between the Tennessee and Mississippi rivers, the area in Tennessee between the same rivers, usually known as West Tennessee, and about one-third of Northern Mississippi, the Yallabusha river being the southern line. The boundaries of the new State will be the Ohio river on the north, the Tennessee on the east, the Mississippi on the west, and the Tallahatchee and Yallabusha on the south.

"What Am I?"—At a meeting of woman suffragists in Cincinnati, Mrs. Talbert, a somewhat colored woman, was introduced, and in the course of her remarks she stated that her father was Dutch-Indian and her mother Irish-negro, and then asked "What am I?" The audience incontinently "gave it up," when she informed them that she was not a negress; she was neither white nor black, but simply a woman of color. They assented.

A Wise Precaution.

The late Gov. Geary had a policy of $10,000 in the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, and many of the leading citizens of Pennsylvania hold policies in the same company. The Penn Mutual was organized in 1847, and its career has been one of unexampled prosperity. It has now an accumulated fund of over $4,000,000. The "Penn" has recently increased its new business largely, and the agents of the company find it easy to represent, owing to its strong financial condition and honorable record of twenty-six years.

Gentlemen who desire to represent a strong mutual company are requested to address the office, at 921 Chestnut street, Philadelphia, when liberal arrangements will be made with honest and energetic men.—[Com.

Duty Done.

It has come to pass, and rightly too, that public opinion considers the duty of no man with a family really done before he has insured his life for its protection. Life insurance meets a public want as universal and exacting as that which is met by fire insurance. The demand, too, is for low rates, financial strength, liberal policies and prudent management, and we believe that on the whole list of companies in the field, there is none which perhaps so fully comes up to all these requirements as the National Life Insurance Company of the United States of America, headquarters at Philadelphia, E. A. Rollins, President; Jay Cooke, Chairman Finance Committee. This Company wants an agent everywhere, and our advice is —write it.—[Com.

No More Heroics.—The deadly vegetable alkaloids such as Mercury, Strychnine, and Prussic Acid cannot cure disease or produce any but the most disastrous results. Perhaps no event has occurred of late years which is so well calculated to disabuse the public mind of a blief in the efficacy of mineral poisons and bleeding as to the discovery of Dr. Walker, of California, of a certain medicinal herbs, whose healing principles he has extracted and combined in the form of Vinegar Bitters. The cures wrought by it seem marvelous. Its action is mild and agreeable, but at the same time rapid and effectual, and being unimpeded by the presence of alcohol or fermented liquor of any description, is attended with results hitherto unachieved by any remedial agent. The cures of Bilious Complaints, Malarious Fever, Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Scrofula and all diseases arising from impurities of the blood, attest the paramount excellence of this medicine, and justify us in recommending it.—[Com.

Old Probabilities. — Our learned friend, who sits at Washington, and receives from the signal stations of a continent, reports on the vicissitudes of the weather, sorts, compares and infers from them the daily bulletins which everybody reads, might reasonably add, in view of our late sudden changes, "Colds, Coughs and Affections of the Throat and Lungs will prevail in the East and North. Warning signals continue in the West and South." In view of the truth of these probabilities, we commend to all sufferers that excellent and potent specific, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has, in countless instances, saved life, and has, within the knowledge or every one, alleviated most alarming symptoms and effected cures almost surpassing belief. So excellent is it that the medical faculty largely use it in their practice. In cases of seated consumption, it prolongs life and softens the stay of the afflicted sufferer. About these days it is well to have it in the house. By its timely use, serious disease may be checked and turned aside.—Nashua (Iowa) Post.

What We Need When Debilitated.

Appetite and digestion languish at this season. At the very time when the body most needs renovation and suppo^t, the stomach, its commissariat department, is [illegible] to prove delinquent. Under such circumstances the necessity for a wholesome stimulant, tonic and corrective is self-evident, and consequently the demand for that peerless combination of the three required elements, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, is never more urgent than at midsummer.

It is true that a few medical bigots—fossils "left over" from the dark ages—recommend violent purgation and water gruel as a cure for indigestion and its accompanying ills; but they make few proselytes. The majority of the community are sane, and all sane people are aware that a pure and powerful vegetable tonic with alterative properties, like Hostetter's Bitters, is the only cure for dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation, nervousness and the "consequential damages" they inflict.

The human intellect, unless hopelessly diseased or egregiously humbugged, declines to astonish the weakened human stomach with fierce cathartics that, rushing like an avalanche through the intestines, threaten to take the inner membrane with them. To use a significant catch-phrase, the knock-down-and-drag-out methods of treatment are "played out."

It is clearly understood that a medicated stimulant is essential to the renovation of an exhausted frame, and that you cannot strengthen man or woman by dosing them with prostrating preparations. This is an era of common sense, and common sense approves of Hostetter's Bitters as the best article extant for invigorating, regulating and purifying the system and defending it against poison in the air we breathe, or the water we drink.

For Diseases of the
THROAT AND LUNGS,
SUCH AS
Coughs, Colds, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, Asthma and Consumption.

The few compositions which have won the confidence of mankind and become household words among not only one but many nations, must have extraordinary virtues. Perhaps no one ever secured so wide a reputation, or maintained it so long, as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has been known to the public about forty years, by a long continued series of marvelous cures, that have won for it a confidence in its virtues, never equaled by any other medicine. It still makes the most effectual cures of Coughs, Colds, Consumption, that can be made by medical skill. Indeed the Cherry Pectoral has really robbed these dangerous diseases of their terrors, to a great extent, and given a feeling of immunity from their fatal effects, that is well founded, if the remedy be taken in season. Every family should have it in their closet for the ready and prompt relief of its members. Sickness, suffering, and even life is saved by this timely protection. The prudent should not neglect it, and the wise will not. Keep it by you for the protection it affords by its timely use in sudden attacks.

VINEGAR BITTERS
VEGETABLE
PURELY
DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA
VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of Vinegar Bitters?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of Vinegar Bitters in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of Dr. Walker's Vinegar Bitters are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim Vinegar Bitters the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to Dr. J. Walker's Vinegar Bitters, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with Vinegar Bitters. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, Walker's Vinegar Bitters have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Billious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of Walker's Vinegar Bitters occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Aug. 14, 1873

The Republicans are now admitting that the reform the talk about and promise New York is all a humbug The Times now declares that the men elected to office by that party are be having worse than the old Tammany officials. Such is Republican reform —a step backwards.

The Indiana salary-grabbers are as follows: O. P. Morton, Wm. E. Niblack Jeremiah M. Wilson, D W. Voorhees, M. D. Manson, James N. Tyner, John P. C. Shanks, Billy Williams and Jasper Packard—six Republicans and three Democrats. Two Republicans and two Democrats refused the plunder.

A year ago this time we were daily treated to editorials informing the country of the rapid decrease of the public debt under the wise, economical add efficient management of Mr. Grant, and his Secretary of the Treasury. Since the election last fall, we hear nothing upon the subject. In fact the silence is an ominious one, and it is suggested that all the blow of reducing the public debt, and the parade of figures which were made to lie in that interest, was mere gasconade for political effect. If the debt is being reduced the people ought to know it now as well as then.

Are the farmers, laborers, and mechanics of the United States aware that several hundred persons are each drawing $625 per month, and receiving the money regularly, for doing absolutely nothing! This too, while farmers are earning on an average $419 a year, and all classes of industrial persons averaging only $532 a year. Remember, farmers, that one of one you must toil for doing nothing a single month. In the general pursuits of life, when people do nothing they get nothing. Congress is doing nothing and will do nothing until December. In the interval $625 is sent to each member every month, and $2,058,850 will be distributed in this way before the session begins.

A Poor Rule.

It has always been a matter of great satisfaction for the Republican party to affirm and reaffirm that it was their party that saved the nation in the civil war with the South. At each successive National Convention since that event, it has been heralded to the people in the way of a plank in their platform. No recognition was made of the material assistance contributed by Democrats in the achievement of this object. That party was in the minority, and was not entitled to any credit for the part they took. But since this party has passed the salary steal, and since this party controlling about three-fourths of all the votes in Congress, besides the President has learned that the steal is not popular with the people, the small Radical sheets throughout the country cry out, that Democrats voted for the bill as well as Republicans. Had this bill been some popular measure, this party would have declared at the first opportunity that it could have proceeded from no other source than "our glorious party." Now they want to shirk from the responsibility, and escape from the great condemnation they deserve by dragging in the individual Democrats who are guilty alike with them. The Republicans could have defeated the bill under any and all circumstances, the Democrats could not, so that they as a party are responsible. As to the Democrats who voted for it, we have nothing but loathing for the thieving contemptible rascals, and we trust that when their names come before the public, they will carry with them the odium and obliquy they deserve. But the Radicals must be held to the point of the responsibility and the President whose signature could have prevented it is as much a thief as any.

Senator Morton, will open the campaign in Ohio. Lookout for a showing up of the mongrels.—Indianian.

Senator Thurman will open the campaign in Ohio. Lookout for a showing up of the Salary Grabbers.

Last Saturday night a party of Waterlooians went to Auburn, a temperance town—Auburn furnished the "soda," and the party furnished the "syrup"—Auburn folks drank and pronounced it good —What was the syrup? Will Mays rise and explain?—Angola Republican.

Nitro glycerine or some other gentle tonic, we should judge. Come down and have a whack, Mac.

Brick Makers Wanted.

Auburn offers special inducements to a few good brick makers, as the demand for this material is increasing with little on hand. We have a good article of clay for their manufacture, and all it wants is a few good men to take hold of the enterprise. Prices are good.

Personal.

I take pleasure in introducing and recomending Dr. H. A. Moyer, to my friends and patrons, and here say that none of my customers need fear to entrust him with work in the line of dentistry that they have to be done, as I know him to be as good a workman as there is in northern Indiana. He having been with me some six years ago and since then attended the Pennsylvania College of Dental Surgery, besides being associated with Dr. Baughman, in Columbus Ohio—one of the best offices in that State—for over two years, any of my old customers will be as wise in placing themselves in his hands. Any one that needs any repairing of old work will confer a favor by calling on and reporting the same to him, as we shall be more or less in connection. All persons indebted to me will please call and settle at once, either at the office or at the store of L. A. Thomson & Son.

W. L. ANDREWS

Having permanently located at the well known stand of Dr. W. L. Andrews, I would respectfully call attention to the following prices: Gold filling, small, $1.50, and upwards. Tin, silver, or cement, one half the price of gold. Full artificial setts, $24 and $30. I have constantly on hand the Liquid Nitrous Oxide for the painless extraction of teeth, and several valuable patents for the perfect adaptation of the same. Persons having badly fitting plates will please give me a trial. I guarantee satisfaction or make no charge.

The adjourned session of the Circuit Court did not do much. It commenced on one case when it was found the pleadings were wrong and it was dismissed.— There was simply nothing accomplished for the case is to be reinstated.

W. C. McGonigal now controls the Angola Republican, and we must say that a large improvement has been made since his connection therewith. Mac is genial, clever and popular, and if he receives the encouragement he deserves there is no doubt of his success.

Shows are on the increase in this part of the county if the bill boards on Main street are any evidence. First comes Warner, and then Montgomery Queen wants attention. Over three hundred feet in length of boards twelve feet high, have been temporarly erected.

The anniversary of the DeKalb County Bible Society will be held in the Baptist church, at this place, next Sabbath evening. The State Superintendent will be present to address the people. All are invited.

Davenport & Co., of the Pioneer Drug Store are supplying the trade with a good article of everything kept in the drug line. They keep school books, writing paper, Thomas' celebrated ink, &c., and other articles.

There will be a grand Bower Dance, on next Monday, just South of the Rainier Hotel, under the management of Campbell and Boughan. Preparations are being made for a good time, and first-class music has been engaged.

Our friend A. Conrad of Corunna, is making things lively in the brick business in that place. He is to get 2500 brick if he hauls them at one load from the yard across the bridge. He got to the foot of the bridge Saturday night all right

FINE INK.—We have been using Thomas' black ink, manufactured at Reading, Mich., and pronounce it superior to all others made. It flows equally as well as Arnold's while the color is much superior going on in deep, jet black. Several have tried it and pronounce it first class.

The German Lutheran congregation will dedicate their new church just west of the school house, in this place, next Sabbath. Two services will be held during the day in the German language, and one at night in the English. The public are cordially invited to attend.

Trotting.

The N. E. Indiana Agricultural Association will give a Trotting fair and horse show on their grounds at Waterloo, on Friday and Saturday, Aug. 29 and 30. There will be three trotting races, one pacing and one running. About $1000 in premiums are offered.

One of the most popular Hotels in the country is the Lent House, at Waterloo. Since Mr. Cowles has been in charge it has gradually improved, and now with the addition recently of Mr. Lew Fell, of Kendallville, as clerk there can be no doubt of its excellence in management and accomodation.

The races are now taking place at Fort Wayne. To-morrow, a fine race for pacers comes off. A DeKalb county horse is entered. On Saturday a running race for $1000 will take place, and is creating considerable excitement in the city. Friday and Saturday are the last days of the summer races.

A prisoner named G. W. Young, charged with counterfeiting Post Office Money Orders, escaped from the United States Marshal by jumping from the train on the L. S. & M. S. Railroad, on the 8th of August, about half way between Edgerton and Melburn, in Williams County, Ohio. $250 are offered for his arrest.

A fellow got on a bender at Kendallville the other day, got a livery rig, and two fast women and sallied forth. After a time the proprietor of the team became uneasy, and Gus. Leas started on the track, overtaking the party at Bryan, He was brought back somewhat sobered off, the round trip costing over $100.

We would suggest that the obtuse editor of the Press read the article again where he claims we admit of a mistate in regard to the citizens of Corunna. There was no admission made because it did not require any. The article for which we apologised was put in intentionally during our absence, and how we could admit of a mistake is more than we can conjecture.

The Immortal J. N. desires us to state that he will lift the pressure on Saturday, the 23d of this month, at this place. His eloquent and brilliant efforts in the cause of truth, and his desire to lift the pressure from the minds of the whole people, are sufficient evidences of the popularity of his mission and the mere announcement that he will be with us on the above day will be received with great satisfaction by his friends in this locality.

A bold, daring and extensive robbery was committed on our premises the other day. Two of our old, cast off shirts taking their last bleach preparatory to going into the rag-bag, were unceremoniously and clandestinely, "scooped up" by some poor, misguided but "honest" traveler through this vale of tears. We regret exceedingly that the printer's ink was not entirely erased, but cannot but commend the excellent taste of the thief in his liberal investment of this article.

The Commissioners of Elkhart county have ordered the fencing of the court yard at Goshen, with wrought iron—the posts to be seven feet apart, set in blocks of dressed stone, fourteen inches square.— There will be nine gates, two of which will be double, ten feet in the clear, and the other seven, four feet. This fence will cost $4.50 per lineal foot, and there will be 1500 lineal feet—making the entire cost $6,850.

The Commissioners of DeKalb county have ordered a fence around the Courtyard here that will cost 10 cents per lineal foot. That's the difference between counties and Commissioners.

Remember that Warner's large circus and menagerie exhibits here next Monday This mammoth establishment has spread its canvass in this county once before during the present season and all pronounce it good.

Guy Plum, the insatiate Guy, who loves money as a duck loves water, only for the good it will do him and his fellow beings announces this week that he has established a broker's office, wherein real estate will be bought and sold upon the most satisfactory terms and when not busy in this branch of business, will take in a little on the collection and insurance line, just to please those who may desire a little attention in such matters. Guy is some on the collect, and means business generally.

The basket meeting held by the Universalists, in Hall's grove, last Sabbath was largely attended. The day was beautiful and its warmth made the deep, green foliage a desirable retreat. The Rev. Mr Chaplain, of Michigan delivered two sermons on the faith, both powerful efforts, attentively listened to. Mr. C. brings some strong arguments in favor of Universalism and being a profound thinker and a hard student, makes things pretty lively to those "fernest" him We hope the doctor will succeed in establishing this faith beyond a doubt as it will save us a good deal of valuable time.

Our farmers are busy plowing for the fall crop A good rain is needed very much. The oats crop now being cut is not so heavy as it was last year, but better than was expected early in the season The yield of wheat is below average and from careful inquiries from all localities we find the farmers rather disappointed in the yield. Corn is looking finely, promising nearly an average crop. Farmers generally are reconciled to the situation and laying out for heavier operations in the future.

SOLD OUT.—Messrs, Wood & Williams have sold out their large stock of dry goods to Messrs. Miller & Casebeer, recently of Hicksville, Ohio. In withdrawing from the business, the first named firm leave many warm friends made through their uniform promptness and gentlemanly deportment while connected with the trade. They will still remain with us.— The new firm are highly spoken of, possessing the experience and ability to conduct the business to the satisfaction of the large patronage with which this popular establishment has been favored.

The Winnamac Democrat says: "We learned a great many nautical names from our friend Mays of the Auburn Courier during our trip up the lakes which we expect to use the first time we go sailing up the Tippecanoe. "Larboard Starboard and Poop" are as familiar now as household words."

Yes, but Doctor, you remember when that storm struck us coming out of the bay, carrying away the forward davit of the quarter boat and some twenty feet of the rail, tearing up and breaking off several of the stanchions of the poop deck railing, and carrying the after binnacle adrift into the lee scuppers. Don't forget that.

CORUNNA.—Temperance society meets this week....The new church is now under full headway, and in a short time will be ready for use....Lafe Miller, Esq., is the happiest man in town, because the farmers are drawing their wheat to this place. Large quantities are received every day....The contractor of the new school house has failed to come up to the mark. There was to be five windows put in the north end, according to "whoil," and for some reason it has been completed without a single window in this part of the building, giving it, of course, a very awkwark appearance from a north view. The citizens, however, are determined to have it done right to the letter....There seems to be a difference in the opinion of the people as to the insanity of Mrs. Wm. Heist, of which we made a note the other week.

The Great Mastodon and Arabs

It will not be forgotten that on Thursday August 21st, "The Great Mastodon," with its beautiful procession, strange Arab visitors, ferocious and monster animals, antiquarian curiosities, and army of riders, leapers, tumblers and funny fools will pitch its city gas-lit tents among us. As a series of grand exhibitions, projected on a scale of vast liberality and creditable management, it has probably no rival, and so universally commands magnificent success to require but due promulgation of its appearance to insure a rush by communities. Of the marvelous performance of the Arab athletes, the Cleveland Herald says:

"But, after all, superior as the general circus performance is, it is completely overshowed and almost eclipsed by the feats of the Arab Athletes, whose wild reporter embraces a multitude of frantic gymnastic essays, not dreamed of in the muscular phylosophy of Christendom.— Such bewildering and eratic evolutions as they dive, whirl and vault, under the apparent influence of ungovernable impulse, would alone seem possible to one of their native sand storms, while, superadded to these dizzy conceptions, are feats of tremendous strength and delicate equipoise which evince the possession of physical powers little less than miraculous. These, it will be remembered, are the only performers of their race in the country; and as this is their last visit, previous to their return to Arabia, the opportunity to see them should be improved."

A correspondent, describing the awful affair, says: "The women played a conspicuous part in the massacre, as they did in Paris during the Commune. Nothing which occurred in Paris, even in the last frenzied agony of desperation and baffled fury, at all approaches this brutal massacre. The defenders of the Town Hall, after being subjected to other horrible insults and injuries, were stripped naked and held up from the balcony, in full view of the howling mob below. Their names were called out, one by one, and the mob was asked whether it would have them dead or alive. According to the answer, either their heads were cut off and their mutilated bodies thrown down from the balcony, or they were thrown down still alive, the mob below trying to catch them, as they fell, on bayonets and pikes, and everybody then rushed to assist in dispatching what remnants of life were left; or, if too late for this, to further mangle and disfigure the breathless bodies. One of the principal and most respectable inhabitants was seized by the insurgents, and after his clothes had been sprinkled with petroleum he was set on fire and made to run, while shots were taken at him. Other atrocities scarcely less terrible are reported."

This is the first instance, since 1852, of a Conservative candidate being elected for the borough, and the result is accepted as an almost certain indication that the Conservatives will return to power after the approaching general election, with a fair working majority.... Facts Worth Knowing.

One-tenth of the entire railroads of the United States are in Illinois. This State leads all others in the extent of its railway facilities. Its present total mileage is about midway between 6,000 and 7,000, with new links being added all the time. The total of this State is about the same as the amount added to the total of the nation during the last twelve months. From "Poor's Railroad Manual" we take the following condensed paragraphs worthy of special note:

"The earnings of the roads of the different sections, of course, differed greatly, the most productive roads being those of the six New England States, the earnings of which, the past year, were $48,519,835, or 21.10 per cent. on a cost of $230,609,794. The cost per mile of the roads (4,574 miles) was $50,418; the earnings per mile, $10,636; earnings per head of population, estimated at 3,586,000, $13.53. The number of inhabitants to each mile of road was 709.

"The cost of the 11,617 miles of road in operation in the six Middle States equaled $922,700,774, or $79,427 per mile. Their earnings were $169,205,702, or 18.30 per cent. of their cost. The earnings per mile were $14,565, and $15.86 per head of population. The number of inhabitants to each mile of road was 792.

"For the ten Western States and their contiguous Territories, the cost of the 28,778 miles of railroad in operation was $1,472,625,232, or $50,550 per mile. Their earnings equaled $193,826,258, or 13.10 per cent. of the cost. Their earnings per mile were $6,735; per head of population, $13.76. The number of inhabitants per mile of road was 490."

With such profits for railway investments, no wonder the people "groan, being burdened," and ask in a tone of command for transportation reform.—Chicago Journal.

A True Story.

Mr. Joaquin Miller must have had some queer experiences in his short life, if his own record of them is to be believed. We have already seen him "with Walker in Nicaragua;" he is said to be writing an autobiography, in which he tells of his residence and adventures with the Modocs, and here is the substance of a "true story" of frontier life, which he relates to the readers of the last Independent. The scene of the story is laid in Shasta county, California, a few years ago, and the dramatis personæ are a little company of miners, of whom six were suddenly prostrated with the scurvy. They were very likely to die, for the camp was a lonely one, far away from all such food, medicine, and conveniences, as the sick require. One of the miners, however, had heard of a remedy which he had proved while he was a sailor, and which was not beyond reach, and to make trial of this was at once resolved upon. Six deep pits were speedily dug in the warm soil in the shadow of a huge pine; in these the patients, stripped to the skin, were placed, and then the fresh earth was carefully shoveled back, so that each man was securely buried up to his chin. In this position they were to stay all night. Now, the sleep of the miner, when his day's toil is over, "is not so much a sleep as a stupor," and, soon after the last of the buried men had dozed off, their friends also sought their beds and fell into a slumber, from which none woke till dawn. At that hour they went to visit their buried comrades, and, to their horror, found that the wolves had come down during the night and eaten off every one of the heads level with the ground!

Fresh Danberries.

[From the Danbury News.]

—New apples are one dollar and ten cents a quart. Ten cents for the apples and a dollar for the doctor.

—When you see a man who is hastening across a street to avoid a team, step on a piece of mud, and lose his balance, and come to the earth, and tear the skin from both his wrists, and smash his head against a post, you want to shout as quickly as possible: "The more haste the less speed." Then you want to pick up your feet, and get out of that neighborhood like lightning.

—An exchange tells an interesting story about a little boy who applied to a city store for work, and while searching his valise for a letter of introduction let fall a copy of the Bible, and the city merchant asked him what he did with that, and he said he read it, flashing his eye in a gritty way at the time. Then the city merchant took him in, and made him his clerk, and by and by his confidant, and eventually his partner. We have no doubt of this. It is a probable story, and anybody who is interested in it can find the concluding chapters in the telegraphic columns of the daily press.

—A stranger who is visiting Danbury proposed to one of our citizens, Saturday, that he would get a barouche if the citizen would furnish ladies, and take a drive out of town in the evening. The citizen agreed, and went home to get ready. His wife noticed the particular toilet, and asked him what was up. He didn't appear to know that anything was up, and she said no more. Shortly after he left, she went to his place of business and learned that he was to take a drive. The carriage was out in front of the hotel the party was to start from, and near it the curious woman found her husband's partner in the scheme. She asked him if the carriage was going to R——, and he believing her to be one of the invited, replied in the affirmative, and helped her in. She was no more than comfortably settled in the back seat, when her husband came down the hotel steps with the couple he had engaged, and reaching the carriage, proceeded to bow them in, when his smile was petrified into ghastliness by the vision of his affectionate wife, pleasantly located on the back seat, and going through a brief rehearsal with her fingers. One instant he gazed frantically at her, and then giving expression to his pent-up feelings with the simple exclamation, "By hokey!" he turned and fled.

—A Nelson street dry goods man, who is well known for his politeness, has a father who is an excellent citizen, but not a very smooth talker. They were so busy at the store Saturday afternoon that the old gentleman was called in to help. Among the customers was a young lady who appeared to be waiting to trade with him whose elderly appearance invited her confidence. Soon an opportunity offered, and leaning over the counter as an invitation for him to do the same, she whispered her order. He bent closer to her, and said, "What's that?" in a voice that started the perspiration to her forehead. Again she whispered. "O, elastic!" said he in a tone that could be heard on the walk, and looking much pleased with his success. "What kind of elastic?" he added, bending his head closer to the burning face of the perspiring maiden. Once more she tremblingly whispered. "For garters, hey?" he repeated, even louder than before, without noticing the horror-struck expression of the almost fainting young lady, "Something fancy, I suppose,' he went on to say, in happy oblivion of the store full of people; "young people now-a-days want things nice. My old woman uses a shoe string, and sails around without noticing the difference." Then he got down with the box, and turned around to show it, but the customer was gone. He stood around with the elastic some five minutes in waiting, but she did not return, and it is likely he has forgotten all about the circumstance now.

Humors of the Telegraph.

Not long since a countryman came into a telegraph office in Bangor, Me., with a message, and asked that it be sent immediately. The operator took the message as usual, put his instrument in communication with its destination, ticked off the signals upon the key, and then, according to the rule of the office, hung the message paper on the hook with others that had been previously sent, that at night they might all be filed for preservation. The man lounged around some time, evidently dissatisfied. "At last," says the narrator of the incident, "his patience was exhausted, and he belched out, 'Ain't you going to send that dispatch?' The operator politely informed him that he had sent it. 'No yer ain't,' replied the indignant man; 'there it is now on the hook.'"

So far as the exact use of the language was concerned, the man was right. Still more ludicrous mistakes sometimes occur. Thus, the German papers reported that at Carlsruhe, toward the [illegible] the late war, an aged mother [illegible] the telegraph office, carrying a [illegible] of saurkraut, which she desired [illegible] telegraphed to Rastadt. The [illegible] could not convince her that the te[illegible] was not capable of such perfo[illegible] "How could so many soldiers be[illegible] France by telegraph?" she ask[illegible] finally departed grumbling.

Almost every operator meet[illegible] equally amusing instances. One [illegible] related the following incident: "[illegible] tleman came to my office to send [illegible] sage, and after writing it, wai[illegible] people often do at small offices, t[illegible] sent. I called 'Office,' and the o[illegible] at the other end of the line said, [illegible] —wait a minute.' So I leaned b[illegible] my chair to wait, when the gen[illegible] said, 'Have you sent it?' Strange Hallucination.

The Davenport (Iowa) Gazette vouches for the absolute truth of the following, though from obvious reasons all names are suppressed: One of the leading citizens of North Davenport had an only daughter who was betrothed to a young man of fair promise, a clerk in a leading commercial house at Dubuque.

His visits to that city were regular, and arrangements had been made for an immediate union, when the bride-elect was stricken down by typhoid fever, and, in spite of all which skill and care could do, died. The Gazette reporter says: "We saw her in her coffin, dressed for the bridal of death, not for the consummation of all earthly love. We witnessed the agony of her lover as he bent in speechless, tearless abstraction over the satin-lined burial case."

After the melancholy journey to Oakdale the young man returned to Dubuque. Nervous fever set in, and a peculiar hallucination seized him that his lost one was present in the room, draped in the garb which had enveloped her clay. All remonstrance was in vain. He minutely described her dress, her appearance, and her position in his chamber; even when his parents or friends would sit or stand where he declared her to be, he saw her glide away and take another place. This went on for weeks, and the patient was gradually sinking under the physical and nervous excitement, when a friendly ruse was tried to cure him of his ecstacy.

Coming to Davenport, his mother found that the funeral garments were purchased at the store of C. & M. and made by Mrs. B. She procured the material, had it made up in fac simile, and returning, a young lady as near in height and appearance as could be found, was dressed to resemble his deceased love, and during one of his fevered and brief slumbers was introduced into the room, taking her seat in a shaded corner.

His awakening was anxiously watched, and sanguine hopes of removing his hallucination were indulged in. He woke at length, and, turning his eyes in the direction of the pious fraud, stared with fixed eyeballs for a few seconds, then raising himself almost upright in his bed, flung his arms aloft, and shrieking in an unearthly voice: "My God, there are two of them!" fell back and expired.

The Garden-Hose.

Yesterday, a Park street man thought he would use his garden-hose. In fact, this is a thought which strikes him regularly three times a day, and his neighbors reckon he has lowered the Leicester reservoir elven inches himself since April 1. So he got his hose and screwed it together, and put a piece of paper around the pipe to keep it from leaking, and Bridget turned on the water for him, and as he squirted away calmly at a post on the opposite side of the street, a gratified smile rose softly on his manly features, like the glow of a pumpkin pie just out of the oven. And he didn't wet himself much, either,—only one boot and his false wristbands. By-and-by his wife called him in to supper, and he left his hose squirting on the lawn, so as not to lose any time, and went right in. His four-year-old son stayed behind and took up the hose and began to play at that post across the street, and squirted the water all over Deacon Burchell, who happened to be going by on the nearest sidewalk. Then the Deacon set up a yell like a nitro-glycerine explosion, and the father came out of his house and went for that boy, and the four-year-old calmly turned the hose full upon the author of his being, and that man almost immediately became wetter than the author of anybody's being has been since the days of Noah. The water struck his clean shirt-bosom, and meandered silently but speedily down his boot-legs, and the pockets of his new summer suit filled up, and the hair-oil all came out of his head and ran down the back of his neck, and the only thing about him that was not cool was the words that came out of his mouth. He is now dry, but that four-year-old received a lesson in logic last evening, with illustrations in the argument a posteriori, which he will remember until he has reached the age of forty-four.—Danbury News.

Prof. Ferrel, [illegible]f our most eminent mathematicians, [illegible]s work on the "Motion of Fluids [illegible]Solids Relative to the Earth's Sur[illegible]" very satisfactorily explains this [illegible] which has long been a puzzle to [illegible]icists. He thinks that the differ[illegible]has been occasioned by the fact that [illegible] and mountain ranges predominate [illegible]e north. The resistances are great[illegible]and, consequently, the eastward mo[illegible] of the air, upon which the deflect[illegible]force depends, is considerably less. The result is that the more rapid motions of the southern hemisphere cause a greater depression there, and a transfer of a greater part of the atmosphere to the northern hemisphere. To this phenomenon is, no doubt, due the superior force of the southwest trade-winds. It is very likely, too, that not a little of the superior force and culture of the northern races is due to this cause.

FARM AND GARDEN.

Cultivating the White Ash.

The value of the white ash for timber is so well known that it may seem almost superfluous to name it. There is scarcely a farm implement, from a rake-handle up to a reaper or mower, of which the tough white ash does not form a part. But the cultivation of this valuable tree has been, and is still, sadly neglected in regions where good timber for the purposes named is and ever will be needed. The time must soon come when the implements required for agricultural purposes on the far Western prairies will be manufactured there, and good timber must be had; therefore it requires no great stretch of the imagination to see that a profitable market will soon exist far away from the present source of supply. The cultivation of such timber is like money put out at compound interest, and a man investing a very small sum at first will soon find himself the possessor of large and constantly increasing capital. The white ash is a tree easily grown from seed, which may be obtained in unlimited quantities and very cheaply. The seedling may be easily transplanted without fear of loss, and they will succeed in any good rich soil. At first the seedlings appear to make slow progress in comparison with cottonwoods and willows, but, when fairly established, their growth is rapid and in every way satisfactory. As soon as the trees are a few inches in diameter, the timber is ready for use, and thenceforward continues to increase with age. Farmers who are in need, or likely to be, of good timber should not neglect the cultivation of this most valuable tree.

Live Fence Posts.

J. R. Allen, of Madison county, Ill., writes to the Prairie Farmer: I see in your paper a good deal is said about live fence posts, and no one gives a practical idea. I have seen quite a number of live fence posts growing. If any of your numerous readers wish to try it, let them get either willow, cottonwood or Lombardy poplar, large enough for post, cut it off the right length, space it off the width they want the planks apart, take two-inch augur, bore two or three holes—to suit the board for six-inch fence plank two holes are enough—then chop out the center with a long, narrow bit ax, point the plank so each end will pass into the post, dig the holes, set the posts in early spring as soon as the frost is out of the ground, taking care not to injure the bark, and either of the woods named will grow. Get young, thrifty timber, not too large. Cutting holes through the post does not injure it from growing, and the plank remains firm, if not broken, for years. I know of posts and rails made in this way that have been in use fifty years, and good yet; the post of willow and the rails of white cedar.

The center post, if inch plank is used, will have to be bored with inch auger and cut out to let the plank slip through. If of poles (or good rails are best), then only the ends want pointing to pass in the post.

Sickness of Animals.

Nearly all sick animals become so by improper eating, in the first place. Nine cases out of ten, the digestion is wrong. Charcoal is the most rapid and efficient corrective. It will cure in a majority of cases if properly administered. An example of its use:

The hired man came in with the intelligence that one of the finest cows was very sick, and a kind neighbor proposed the usual drugs and poisons. The owner being ill and unable to examine the cow, concluded that the trouble came from overeating and ordered a teacup of pulverized charcoal given in water.

It was mixed, placed in a junk bottle, the head held upward, and the water with the charcoal poured downward. In five minutes the improvement was visible, and in a few hours the animal was in the pasture, quietly eating grass. Another instance of equal success occurred with a young heifer which became badly bloated by eating green apples after a hard wind. The bloat was so severe that the sides were almost as hard as a barrel. The old remedy, saleratus, was tried for the purpose of correcting the acidity. But the attempt to put it down always caused coughing, and it did little good. Half a teaspoonful of powder charcoal was next given. In six hours all appearance of bloat had gone and the heifer was well.

To Break a Pair of Steers.

To an inquiry at the New York Farmers' Club, S. E. Todd replied:

"The first step in my practice was to get steers in a small yard, then into a stall, put a rope around the horns, tie them in a stall, and teach them to stand quietly when tied. All harshness was avoided. The next thing was to establish a confidence between myself and the steers, which was done by patting, currying, and feeding nubbins of corn. Wild steers would soon learn they were not going to be hurt. They were then trained to be led single, after which two were tied together by their horns, and were led around the yard and along the highway until they were as tractable as a gentle horse. Then a yoke was put on their necks, and two were allowed to run loose for a few hours every day in the yard while wearing the yoke. A sweep was then made by setting a post in the ground, allowing it to extend two or three feet above the surface, the butt end of a pole, twenty or more feet long, was placed in a horizontal position on the post, with an iron bolt or crowbar running through to the small end of the pole, with a hand-sled attached and they were trained to draw the driver on the sled. After a few lessons on the sweep, they were prepared to draw a light sleigh to the woods and bring home a small load of wood.

Permanence of Orchard Grass.

A writer in the Philadelphia Press says: We have a field of it, on a strong, sandy loam, which has stood for more than thirty years. It has been cut for soiling; it has been cut for hay; it has been pastured; it was first sown with red clover and timothy, which it long ago run out, and, although the white clover and blue grass venture their presence to a limited extent among it, the orchard grass maintains its supremacy, and, breast-high at maturity, lords it over its diminutive trespasses in a bounteous crop, while its humbler attendants, good in their place, modestly fill up a great nutritious undergrowth at the bottom. No grass which we have ever grown has yielded so heavy swath as this, nor one from which so much cattle food to the acre can be grown, aside from lucerne, which our American climates will not consecutively, year after year, produce.

Time to Cut Clover for Hay.

Opinions of agriculturists being at variance as to the proper time to cut clover for hay, Profs. Heiden and Voight instituted a series of experiments to determine this point. Equal portions of a field were cut on the 9th, 17th, and 24th of July, at the periods respectively of budding, early blossom, and full bloom. The grass and resulting hay were carefully weighed, and analyses made. Their conclusions were, that clover has less value as provender when cut late, on account of the diminution of the amount of nutritious nutrogenous matter and the increase of cellulose or woody substance; and that an actual increase of nutriment in the crop from early blossom to full bloom does not take place. They conclude, therefore, that it is best to cut clover in early blossom. Furthermore, by reason of the woodiness of old clover, the nutriment it contains cannot be as readily extracted by the animal, so that it is not practically as valuable as its analysis would indicate.

Working Corn.

The Farmers' Union says: The great evil to the corn crop in this part of the West is, farmers will work it too much. Of course the weeds must be subdued, but the practice of putting a shovel plow into the corn field up to the beam is a bad one, especially after it is in the tassel or silk. Before that time this kind of a plow may be used with profit. The breaking off of the roots of corn by plowing has a tendency to put back the ripening of the crop. New roots and fibres have to form, which retards the growth of the ears and grain.

To Fix Pencil Drawings.

A simple method, and sufficient for general purposes, is to put into a large flat dish a mixture of equal parts of milk and water. The back of the drawing should be floated over the surface of the milk and water, once or twice, according to the thickness of the paper, suffient to wet it through, but not enough to allow any of the liquid to run on the surface of the drawing. Put it on a line to dry. Some prefer pure milk.

Playing With Nitro-Glycerine.

Two Providence boys, aged twelve and fifteen, recently, while in search of adventures, discovered in a field near that city a box, which they at once broke open, and found that it contained a considerable quantity of gunpowder and several packages, of the nature of which they were ignorant. They, however, confiscated the whole, and at once commenced a series of pyrotechnic experiments, which, however, did not prove satisfactory on account of the absence of noise. They at last found an empty water pipe lying in the street, and proceeded to load it up. While the oldest boy touched it off the youngest boy looked into the other end to see the fireworks. The result was highly satisfactory to the party acting as cannonier, but highly unsatisfactory to the little fellow who had his nozzle thrust into the end of the pipe, his face, hands and one foot being badly burned, and the victim ran roaring home with his hair on fire, jumping into a providential cistern which he came across, to extinguish the conflagration.

The remaining boy, after enjoying a hearty laugh at the discomfiture of his companion, proceeded to devise new methods to amuse himself, and loading an old fruit-can that he found, which, not taking effect as soon as he expected, walked up and gave the can a kick. There was no delay this time, for the powder exploded at once, knocking the boy a distance of fifteen feet, setting his clothes on fire, filling his face and hands with gunpowder, and injuring him severely. The police, hearing of the matter, looked up the box, and discovered that the packages before mentioned were nitro-glycerine cartridges, and the only wonder now is that a whole neighborhood was not blown up. The boys state that they threw away two of the cartridges, so that there is a chence yet for another explosion, unless they are found and taken care of. The box containing these deadly materials was left in the field last fall by some workmen and forgotten.—Boston Transcript.

Caring for an Umbrella.

An incident that befell a recent traveler on a New Hampshire railroad is thus told by the Portsmouth Chronicle: "He had occasion to get out of the car at New Market Junction, leaving his umbrella lying across the seat he had vacated. Returning, two nicely-dressed ladies sat in the seat ahead, and as he resumed his sitting one of them said, 'You may pass me that umbrella, if you please.' He replied, 'Is it your umbrella, madame?' 'I will take charge of it,' said she, and the accommodating gentleman passed his umbrella over to the lady. Then a pause. 'Now, if you please,' suggested the gentleman, 'I will trouble you to return my umbrella. It's a silk one, and a good one. I paid $10 for it, and I'd dislike very much to part with it.' The passengers by this time had become interested in the conversation, and, as the umbrella was returned to its owner, the lady who had shown such a peculiar interest in it was observed to flush deeply, while the owner regretted that he had found it necessary to rebuke her."

The Battle of the Bullfrogs.

Many of the citizens of Vermont will remember to have seen on one-dollar bills of the Windham County State Bank a vignette representing bullfrogs fighting. This was engraved to commemorate the Battle of the Bullfrogs. The facts were as follows: "Many years ago, when the town of Windham was newly-settled, there came a very dry season. There are two large ponds in Windham, separated by an intervening strip of land of considerable extent. Each of these ponds was inhabited by a large community of the reptiles abovenamed. The smaller pond dried up and its inhabitants started in a body for the lower and larger pond. They were met in the intervening space by the community from the larger pond, and a fierce and long-continued battle ensued between the rival communities. Such was the hideous bellowing of the frogs during their fierce encounter that it alarmed the inhabitants, who at first supposed it to be the whoop of the hostile savages. But curiosity getting the better of their fears, they cautiously proceeded to the spot whence the hideous sound issued, and there beheld the strange spectacle of two immense armies of bullfrogs, covering many acres of ground, engaged in a fierce and deadly battle. This battle continued more than twenty-four hours, and when it was over the ground was literally covered with the slain, and and it became necessary, to avoid the noxious effluvia, to gather and bury them."—Boston Transcript.

A Novel Lottery.

The directors of the Dublin (Ireland) Tramway Company have become suspicious of their conductors, and have been trying to circumvent them. At first each conductor was given a strip of tickets, and he was to give one ticket to each passenger, who was then to tear it up. The conductor's receipts were to correspond with his ticket strips. But people hated the company worse than the conductor, and would not tear up the tickets; the conductor would use them over again, and thus his income was kept up. But now the remedy is reached. Every ticket is numbered, but the number is printed on it; and at the end of each month the company has a grand lottery with three hundred prizes, ranging from ten pounds to one one shilling. Each ticket has a chance in the drawing. Nobody throws away his ticket now; every passenger is too busy looking after his own interests. Persons of nobility travel incognito in the cars for the sake of chance in the lottery; and the affairs of the company are unprecedentedly prosperous. The plan is soon to be imitated in England.

A Remarkable Prophecy.

The following, which is known as "Mother Shipton's Prophecy," was first published in 1488, and republished in 1641. It will be noticed that all the events predicted in it, except the two last lines—which is still in the future—have already come to pass:

Carriages without horses shall go,
And accidents fill the world with woe.
Around the world thoughts shall fly
In the twinkling of an eye.
Waters shall yet more wonders do;
Now strange, yet shall be true.
The world upside down shall be,
And gold found at root of tree.
Through hills men shall ride,
And no horse or ass be at his side.
Under water men shall walk,
Shall ride, shall sleep, shall talk.
In the air men shall be seen,
In white, in black, in green.
Iron in the water shall float
As easy as a wooden boat.
Gold shall be found and shown,
In a land that's not now known.
Fire and water shall wonders do;
England shall at last admit a Jew.
The world to an end shall come
In eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

A Strange River.

The Palatka (Fla.) Herald says: "The St. John's river is very remarkable. It is separated from the ocean throughout its entire length by a strip of land not over forty miles in width. Its banks are low; the soil, when examined, is found to contain very little silicia, being composed mainly of minute shells. At elevated places along the banks the coquinea, a species of shell rock, can be seen. Wherever this is found the soil is very fertile, and particularly favorable to the growth of the orange. Live oaks tower to the skies, and their branches, spreading some fifty or sixty feet each way, covered with a drapery of solemn moss, and cypress, bay, gum, palmetto, and magnolia trees, with the beautiful palm with crested crown standing like a sentinel along its shores, and orange trees bearing from five hundred to one thousand splendid oranges each, make a man think that he is in the land of fable; yet this is all sober fact."

Mutton Chops by the Million.—I met Mr. J. J. Armijo in the Lindell Hotel this morning. He and his brother are probably the largest sheep owners in the United States. They live in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Their herds number nearly 250,000 head. The brother has just made his appearance in Denver with a flock of 30,000 sheep, and Mr. J. J. Armijo tells me that he has a drove of 7,000 wethers but a few days' journey from this city. The brother was formerly the teller of a bank in New York city, but he finds sheep-raising more profitable than operations in Wall street. The father of these two gentlemen has been in the sheep business over thirty years, and the sons thoroughly understand it—Puebio (Col.) Cor. New York Sun.

The new "trade dollar" that was authorized by the last Congress has been incontinently snubbed by the Japanese Government. The purpose of this coin was to replace the Mexican dollar as a medium of exchange in Japan, and to facilitate this object, the Secretary of the Treasury selected a die patterned almost exactly after the Mexican coin. But the Japanese were not to be deceived by such a device, and they persist in their preference for the Mexican dollar.

During the prevalence of the cholera at Gallatin, Tenn., it was noticed that mocking-birds and canaries in cages sickened and died, while those which frequented the gardens instinctively fled to the woods, and did not return until the cholera took its departure.

Machine Politics.

As soon as the Republican leaders discovered how strong the popular indignation was against the Credit Mobilier corruption and the back-pay steal, they at once trimmed their sails to catch this breeze, and with desperate audacity have sought to make capital by pretending to condemn outrages for which their own party is exclusively answerable.

Ohio held the first convention and sent out the pattern resolution, which was subsequently adopted, without altering a word, by Maine and Iowa. This little fact shows the preconcert of the managers, and proves that the scheme was a deliberate deception from the start. And now Minnesota has passed the machine resolution, as follows:

"Resolved, That we heartily appland the active measures of the late Congress for ferreting out and exposing corruption. We have seen with profound regret, in the developments made thereby, evidence of political and official corruption and abuse of responsible position, by men of all political parties, to further personal ends, and we demand pure official conduct and the punishment of unfaithful public servants, State and national, who, having betrayed the confidence freely extended to them, shall not be shielded from the disgrace of their acts by any partisanship of ours; and we denounce all Credit Mobilier transactions, whatever be their form."

This declaration is identical in the four platforms of Ohio, Maine, Iowa and Minnesota. Stripped of its artful disguises, the attempted fraud becomes glaring, and the falsehoods detect themselves. It is not true that the late Congress adopted any "active measures for ferreting out and exposing corruption." An investigation of the Credit Mobilier jobbery was forced by the independent press, and when the testimony convicted the most prominent Republican chiefs of corruption, the "late Congress" refused by repeated votes to expel or condemn the guilty members.

It is not true that men "of all political parties" were involved in that iniquity. The late James Brooks was the only Democrat implicated. Schuyler Colfax, Henry Wilson, Henry L. Dawes, James A. Garfield, William D. Kelley, John A. Bingham, Oakes Ames, James W. Patterson, Glenni W. Scofield, William B. Allison, James F. Wilson, and James Harlan, all leading Republicans, and holding the highest places of honor and trust in the party, are the men whom that investigation branded with infamy, and not one of them was punished by the "late Congress," to which most of them belonged.

These resolutions therefore extol the very rogues who voted themselves innocent, and who packed the House of Representatives with the most formidable lobby ever collected there, representing all the great corporations, to coerce a verdict by terrorism, or to purchase it with money. This is the way the Republican majority "ferreted out and exposed corruption."

Equally false is the declaration made by these conventions, "We demand pure official conduct, and the punishment of unfaithful public men, State and national, who, having betrayed the confidence freely extended to them, shall not be shielded from the disgrace of their acts by any partisanship of ours." Not a single name of all the convicted Republicans has been held up to reprobation. These conventions have done exactly the opposite of what they professed, by "shielding from disgrace" the "unfaithful public men who had betrayed their confidence."

Another machine resolution is in these words:

"We condemn without reserve the voting for or receiving of increased pay for services already rendered, and demand that the late act of Congress by which the salaries were increased should be promptly and unconditionally repealed."

After the horse is stolen by their own confederates, they are very energetic about closing the stable door. It was carefully left open until the booty was carried off. The back pay having been pocketed and the increased salary drawn, they pretend to want the law repealed by the very men who were most active in passing it! And it is attempted to palm off this sort of stuff on the public for reform, just as the Philadelphia Convention declared for a purer civil service and against further land robbery, after having demoralized the first and voted away the the public domain to huge monopolies which purchased successive Republican Congresses at so much a head.

Minnesota is the last to make this deceitful utterance. She had two members in the "late Congress"—Mark H. Dunnell and John T. Averill—who labored zealously by night and by day to pass the increase of pay and to extend it back two years, after having already been paid in full for the whole term and receipted for their salary. They were re-elected to the next Congress. Yet the Minnesota resolutions, which in one breath would not shield public men who betrayed confidence from disgrace, has not a syllable against these, its chosen representatives, who did exactly what the Republican Convention professed to denounce.

All these conventions are purposely silent as to the responsibility of the President in the back-pay grab and increase of salary. They know that he was the greatest beneficiary by that outrage, and that the Constitution forbids any change in his compensation during the period for which he is elected. They know that without his approval it never could have become a law, and that if he had vetoed the bill there was abundant time to eliminate this odious amendment and repass the appropriation pure and simple. The pretence that the Supply bill was in any danger is a sheer invention. Besides, the money for carrying on the Government until the 1st of July had already been provided, so that in the extremest supposable case there could be no derangement from a veto.

But the President was a party to the conspiracy, and the increase by which he was to pocket $100,000 illegally—for he was elected when the act passed—was the basis of the whole scheme. If censure is deserved by anybody, he first of all others ought to be the object of wrath, for it was in his power to prevent the consummation which was perfected by his prompt signature.

An attempt is made to relieve the Republican party of this burden, and to share it with the Democrats. That dodge will not answer until it can be shown that a minority is stronger than a majority. The last Congress stood as follows:

SENATE.		HOUSE.
Republicans	52	Republicans	134
Democrats	17	Democrats	104
Liberals	5	Liberals	5

The Republicans of course controlled all the committees, and held the whole machinery of legislation in their hands. No bill could be reported even without their consent. With these majorities in Congress and their President in the White House, escape is impossible. The acts of individuals on either side are of no importance except in a personal aspect. Let the guilty be punished and the innocent be applauded. But the responsibility of this legislation, like all other for the last twelve years, belongs wholly to the Republican party, and they must expect to confront it.—New York Sun.

The Last Job.

Minnesota now contributes her last scandal to the national disgrace in the form of a gigantic swindle commenced under a Democratic administration, carried successfully through three Radical administrations, and consummated in a fourth. The facts are briefly as follows:

In 1858 the War Department, then presided over by Mr. Floyd, agreed to transfer to Mr. Franklin Steele and his associates (unknown) the "Fort Snelling Reservation," at the confluence of the Minnesota and Mississippi rivers. This tract of land contained 7,800 acres. Apart from the natural beauty of the situation, the Falls of Minnehaha being situated in its midst, the soil of this tract was unusually fertile, and no doubt could have rested on the mind of any observing man that the future great city of the Northwest would ere many years include it within its limits. The transfer was made under a law authorizing the sale of forts not required for military purposes. The consideration was $90,000, of which one-third was paid in cash, another was to be paid in one year, and the remainder in two years, without interest.

Here there was actual robbery, for not only was Steele prepared to give $110,000 for the land, but other would-be purchasers, had the sale not been secret, held it worth $200,000, and would have paid that price for it. The annual payments, which had to be made ere a title could be given, were not made by Steele. Thus far the carelessness or corruption—either being censurable—of a Democratic official is identified with the Fort Snelling swindle. But no title had been issued, no title could issue, and it remained for a Republican Administration to insist on the fulfilment of the contract or cancel the sale."

Instead of this the Republican Administration, prompted by Senators Ramsey, Pomeroy, and other Christian statesmen, who took an interest in Mr. Steele, although he was a Democrat, maintained a garrison at Fort Snelling. In 1868 Mr. Steele presented his little bill, charging the United States $162,000 for the rent of their own premises, and deducting $60,000 as the balance which he owed the Government, his magnanimity in acknowledging the debt apparently absolving him from the necessity of making any mention of the eight years' interest on the amount. After some investigation Secretary Belknap allowed the claim, and paid Mr. Steele $102,000, then settled the land claim by retaining the fort buildings and 1,000 acres of land, the title in the remaining 6,300 being confirmed to Mr. Steele. In short, counting interest, Mr. Steele was paid $120,000 for consenting to receive 6,000 acres of land as a free gift. Having secured a title, he sold off the land last month, the valuation placed upon it in settling up his accounts with his partners being $500,000.

This recital needs no comment. Though the fraud was planted by a Democratic gardener, it was Republicans who not only neglected to extirpate it but dug around it and dunged it and shared the final fruit. That the job must have been a constant source of profit to the Republican ring at Washington is evident from the silence which has been maintained upon the subject for twelve years. Mr. Belknap will now have an opportunity for distinguishing himself without going to Mexico.—New York World.

A Very Rare Disease.

There exists only one case on record in medicine of the enormous overgrowth of all the bones of the body and the wasting of the muscles. It was observed by Sancerotte. Another case, however, of this kind, as described by Prof. Friedrich in Virchow's Archiv, possesses a peculiar interest. Sancerotte's case was that of a man, aged 39, the weight of whose body rose in four years from 119 to 178 pounds, by the increase of his bones, the muscles all the while wasting. The head of this man was enormous, his eyes being pushed forward to the level of his forehead, and the lower jaw attaining an immense thickness. Attacks of insensibility and difficulty of breathing characterized his complaint. M. Friedrich has described his patient as a man of 26 years, being one of six children, all of healthy habit, except the youngest, who exhibits a minor form of the same affection. At 18 he began to feel his feet and ankles growing heavy, then the hands and fingers, the lower and upper limbs becoming of enormous size, due entirely to the growth of the bones, the muscles being wasted; the internal organs healthy, and no disturbance of the brain; medicines ineffectual except some comfort from cold baths.

Antiquities.—A citizen of New Hampshire writes to the local journal that he is the proud possessor of "one span of horses, united ages 26 years; one pair of tongs 86 years old; one chopping-knife 80 years old; one tea canister 53 years old; one pair of flat-irons 55 years old; one pair of shears 54 years old; one gun 51 years old; one chisel 51 years old; one brass kettle 45 years old; pair steelyards 43 years old; one ink-bottle 43 years old, and a cooking-stove that has been in constant use for 26 years, and is a pretty good stove yet."

Giant Powder.

Chemistry itself is at a loss to estimate the power of nitro-glycerine, and yet this new agent of death is twenty per cent. stronger! That our readers may be able to form a faint conception of the danger of such a preparation, we will give a brief description of the process by which nitro-glycerine, giant and Hercules powder are supposed to be manufactured, and of the extreme caution necessary in their manufacture.

In the manufacture of nitro-glycerine two tubes, each about a quarter of an inch in diameter and six inches in length, lead into a single tube of double their capacity but of the same length. Nitric acid is introduced into one and sulphuric acid into the other of these small tubes. The large tube contains glycerine. The two acids are then forced quite gradually into the glycerine, and the chemical combination thus forms an explosive of incalculable power. So powerful and dangerous is this article that not an ounce of it is allowed in the manufactory while this little tube, six inches long and half an inch in diameter, is being filled, and this tube is kept constantly swathed in ice during the process. To make giant powder, this nitro-glycerine is allowed to drip upon a clay (similar to meerschaum) imported from Germany. This clay is the only perfect absorbent of nitro-glycerine known. As Hercules powder is darker, it is believed that that explosive is manufactured by the same process, charcoal, an imperfect absorbent, being used instead of said quality of clay. If, in the manufacture of nitro-glycerine, a strong tube is kept swathed in ice, and a quantity of the liquid only six inches in length and half an inch in diameter is allowed in the building at the same time, no wonder that Gen. Von Bokkelen, with his preparation twenty per cent. more powerful, remarked that he would have it handled thermometer in hand!—Virginia City Chronicle.

The Moon and Fuel.

The Pall Mall Gazette speaks as follows of a curious superstition: Householders who are laying in their stock of coal for the winter will do well to study the moon, which is believed, in some quarters, to exercise no small influence on fuel stacked or stored at certain seasons. The Skye correspondent of the Cornish Telegraph mentions that, during the fortnight which began on the tenth of last month, the people of Skye were busy stacking their peats and securing their winter firing, being anxious to complete the operation while the moon was waning. During the fortnight commencing on the 24th of June, when the moon was crescent, no real Skyeman would stack his peats for any consideration, believing that unless stacked under a waning moon the peats will neither light nor heat when burned. "A power of smoke" is all that can be expected from peats stacked under a crescent moon. In Skye the crescent is called "fas," and the wane "tarradh," and under these two terms the moon not only exercises a great influence over peats, but also over many other things. In some parts of the Highlands, sheep, pigs, and cows are only killed in the "fas," as meat made in the "tarradh" is supposed to be good for nothing but "shrinking" when in the pot.

The Hair.

Somebody who has been studying the matter of the form and substance of the human hair in different races, finds that the hair of the North American Indian is cylindrical, that of the white race is oval, and that of the negro may be termed elliptical. It is also found that when the hair is cylindrical the stretching and shrinking powers are equal on all sides of the filament, and this condition gives it the lank, straight appearance of that of the pure blood Indian. The oval hair displays a greater number of fibers upon the flattened side than elsewhere, a condition which gives to such hair a tendency to curl or curve in that direction. When eccentrically elliptieal it not only always curls, but often assumes a spiral shape, as on the head of the negro. The hair of the Chinese is nearly cylindrical, and hence it is that curled hair is almost unknown among that people.

A Colorado correspondent writes: "Our butcher is a graduate of Yale; one of the gentlemen working in the printing office is a graduate of Cambridge, and a winner of the Bishop's medal for proficiency in the classics; a ranchman near here is the son of a general in the British army, and a near relative of George Stephenson, of railroad fame. Four other ranchmen are the sons of a former governor of Bengal, who is still very wealthy. Two are the sons of an eminent London banker. A graduate of one of the universities manages a dairy, and attends to most of the milking personally."

A Bustle as a Life-Preserver.—Mr. Musser and a young woman rode out together last Sunday, to Lancaster, Pa. "The lady held the reins, and, in rounding a curve, turned too suddenly, resulting in a tilt of the buggy, which threw her head-foremost from her seat. Her body had already left the buggy, and she was descendidg upon her head between the wheels, when Mr. Musser, with that quickness of thought which comes to some persons in the hour of danger, seized her by the bustle with the left hand, when he grasped the reins and checked the horse with the right hand. The bustle was fortunately well secured, and the lady was saved."

Treasure at the London Mint.—An official statement of the operations of the London mint gives many highly interesting details, which show the extraordinary and growing demand for gold, silver, and copper coins. Within twelve months the mint has worked off no less than 119 tons of gold, 137 tons of silver, and 114 tons of copper, out of which a total of 52,841,048 pieces were coined. The value of the gold coined amounted to £15,000,000 that of the silver £1,250,000, and that of the copper £50,000. How greatly the mint has lately been in demand appears from the fact that prior to 1871 only £5,000,000 were coined, on an average.

An English lady has written a book to show how a lady may live on $75 a year. It didn't cost Eve anything like that.

PINE TREE !

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

A. J. RALSTON, Assinee.

The big sink is swallowing most of the knobs in South Albion, and leaving level territory. Owen Black's three-acre purchase has quite a hill in the south-west corner, which he has donated to the railroad, and it will soon be cast into the yawning pit, leaving a splendid site for a hotel.—New Era.

Deputy Sheriff Bradley delivered Edwin Huggett, a fugitive from the Poor House of DeKalb county, but arrested here as a suspicious person, to the authorities of that county on Monday, who promptly made allowances incurred in the delivery.—Lagrange Standard.

The wide-wake ink-slinger of the Martinsville Gazette insists that the imprudence of the Modocs of Oregon, the Apaches of Arizona and the Kickapoos of Texas, in "bucking" against the United States Government, is only equalled by that of a subscriber to a newspaper, who cries "Stop my paper," when the "onery" cuss hasn't paid a cent toward its maintenance for months, and often for years

The news of the betrothal of the Duke of Edinburg to the Princess Maria, of Russia the Czar's only daughter, says a London letter, is naturally the sensatson of the hour of palatial circles. This new tie between the families is said to greatly please the sister Princesses, but to be less agreeable to the Czarowitch. It is reported that, like marriage of the Prince of Wales this is a love match.

Will some good Republican paper tell us why it is that the Congressmen who voted for the salary increase are all "thieves" and the President who signed the bill and thus made it the law is only responsible for an "error in judgment?" If one is a thief the other is equally so, and if one is to be excused on the grounds of error in judgment all should be acquitted for the same reason.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind July 27.—Judge Vinton of the Tippecanoe circuit court, has rendered an elaborate decision in which he concluded that the railroad act passed at the special session of the legislatture, requiring railroad companies to issue stock paid for by railroad companies to taxpayers is unconstitutional, and therefore null and void. He holds that the stock is the property of the whole people, held in trust by the county commissioners. An appeal will be taken to the supreme Court.

The Kenalvills Standard insists that the Democratic members of Congress, were, numbers considered, more deeply implicated in the back pay and salary grab business, than the Republicans. This we judge is perfectly true. But we are puzzled to know why the Standard should care to make this point at all. It enjoys the "bad eminence of being about the only paper in Indiana which openly defends the "grab" and "steal," and if the thing was right, why should a Republican journal take pains to show that more Democrats (in proportion) than Republicans voted for it?

The above is from the Laporte Herald a paper that is honest enough to place the responsibility where it belongs.

The reason why Billy Williams the thief and grabber has deserted the State and his constituency and taken up his residence in Washington is palpable in the following bit of news in the N. Y. Sun.

The Hon. Wm. Williams of Indiana was a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia in the last Congress, and one of the most unqualified defenders of all the plunder and outrages which are now notorious to the country. His zeal is perfectly understood. At the time of the investigation he was engaged in a big speculation, and this permit to build was to improve a part of it. He was here a few days ago, busily employed with the Ring chiefs in concerting their new raid for next winter.

What kind of a drum is that which is always the best when it cannot be beaten? A conumdrum.

THE NATIONAL DEMOCRACY.
What the Democratic Name Represents the Body Not Dead or Sleeping.

[From the New Albany Ledger Standard.]

Recently much has said and written of the "dead Democracy." Those who are so anxious that the Democratic party should die, forget that so long as the vital principles upon which this government is founded remain in the memory of men, it cannot perish. It is not of that mushroom growth, builded upon a single idea, that has marked all other parties that have been formed to oppose it, and wring from it the government of the country in order that they might use it for their own bad purposes. The death of the Democratic party cannot be brought about until the fabric of civil liberty has been overturned, and in its stead sits enthroned a government not of the people, and even then the great truths which lie at the foundation of our government will still survive. We have endeavored to point out to our friends that so far from the Democratic party being ready for its funeral, it was still not only formidable, but promised an early victory, and that a party which has controlled the government from its foundation with the exception of twelve years up to 1860, a period of three-fourths of century, was not to be destroyed by sixteen years successive defeat. If it was not destroyed during the reign of terror under the two last years of Mr. Lincoln's first term, when twelve Democratic States of the Union did not cost a vote, and when thousands of Democratic voters in the North were intimidated by the threatening of the military power, then we would have those who so loudly proclaim that the Democratic party is dead, to inform the people what would cause its death. It came out from this sore ordeal, and in 1868 cast nearly 1,000,000 more votes than at any previous election and 856,000 more votes than any period in its previous history. Where could there be greater indications of vitality. In 1872, when hundreds and thousands of Democrats refused to participate in the elections it showed an increase of 125,000 over the vote of the previous election. A contsant and steady growth that betokens future success. It is a little curious to examine the figures at the last six Presidential elections—the one in 1852 being the last contest between the old Whig party and the Demorocy—and for that purpose we append the Democratic vote cast for twenty-four for President

Yrs.	Vote.	Increase.	Decrease
1852	1,386.578
1856	1,838,166	451,591
*1860	1,275,152		463,012
†1864	1,808,725		29,444
1868	2,709.713	900.888
1872	2.834,079	225,460

*In 1860 the vote of the Southern Democracy was cast for Breckenridge

†Shows a falling off of only 29,444 from the vote, notwithstanding the vote of twelve Southern States was not cast at all, as compared with the largest vote ever cast by the Democracy.

These figures give no cause for despondency, or even for the discussion of the abandonment of the Democratic banner, or the organization of a new party. The figures themselves only give evidence the Democratic party will be returned to power, when the people have time for a sober second thought; when reason, not passion, shall control their actions. Hundreds of thousands of good men have been estranged from the ranks of the party by senseless cries, and it may be a few from moral cowardice, when bayonets ruled and not the ballot. Thank God that hour is passing away, and soon men will be released from the bondage of fear, their eyes will be open to the enormities practiced by the present ruling party, and they will once more stand in the ranks of the Democracy, battling for the maintenance of genuine republicanism. If defeat demanded the disbandonment of the Democratic party, then it should dissolved after the second election of Mr. Lincoln. Since that time it has gradually been closing up its broken columns, while the ranks have been recruited from among those who deserted under false apprehensions. Stronger than at any time in its history, it is yet prepared to give battle under its old leaders, who will rally the last man in the great battle which is yet to be fought for the maintenance of civil liberty in this land of the free. If we shall keep ourselves alloof from entangling alliances, repudiate the fallacy of changing front in the presence of the serried columns of the corruptionists, victory is certain. We are confident that the masses of the Democracy will repudiate any movement which looks to the overthrow and obliteration of the party and place their feet upon those who propose the disgraceful surrender.

SOD HOUSES.

Nebraska Brown Fronts.

PROF. J. D. BUTLER.

LILOLN NEBRASKA.

The last United States census of Nebraska farms showed one acre of woodland for every three under tillage. Nevertheless a large portion of that State is timberless. South of the Platte River lumber for building is chiefly obtained from Chicago or the Mississippi River, via the railroad running westward from Burlington. But such lumber is expensive, one-third more so than in New England, and many a pioneer has no money, or next to none. How then can a poor man obtain a house? He can build a sod house himself, incurring no expense whatever except for a door and window, which he can buy ready made for $4 at any railroad station.

The sod house builder finds his material ready to his hand, in every furrow of the virgin prarie his plow turn up. The sods, compacted by the tramp of buffaloes and bound together by the root of the "devil's shoe-string" and every other vegetable product, form better bricks than the Hebrews could have furnished Pharoh even before he denied them straw. Out of this prairie quarry about nine days labor of one man suffices to complete a sod-house on the inside,—a dwelling warmer in winter and cooler in summer than any frame house. I have seen such an abode nine years old, yet still in good repair. Many dwellers in houses of this sort have assured me that they had suffered nothing from dampness, even when they had no floors, no ceilings no plastering nor paper hanging. But these four additions soon garnish the original simplicity of many sod-houses.

The very roof of sod-houses are often made by sods supported by poles which the settler can cut along the bank of every watercourse. But if he lives near no stream he must buy at least rafters, and perhaps boards and shingles for covering his house top. Sod roofs are warmer, lumber roofs are less likely to leak. This novel style of architecture is increasing popular and prevalent in Central Nebraska. A majority of the dwellings on the homesteads in Saline and York counties, along the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad as it pushes west from Lincoln are sod-houses. No doubt those in other counties are so too. So are the inhabitants of many among the 4,000 buyers of railroad land of the Burlington and Missouri River Railroad Company.

In a week's ride just now through the sod-house region,—while calling many doors and entering not a few,—I have found no man, no woman, no child homesick for the land they came from. On the other hand all were full of heart and hope,—assured that by becoming landlords' they were about to become the lords of the land. As the Homestead Bill gives them free farms so the sods give them free houses; and they are doubtful which is the better boon.

The railroad lands above mentioned have been bought on ten years credit, six per cent interest, and on purchases made since 1872, nothing of the principal if payable until the end of four years, while twenty per cent. is thrown off from the land prices for prompt payment.

The Sheriff of Gibson county, Indiana calls attention to the law governing the office of Sheriff as enacted by the recent Legislature. Under this law it become the duty of the Sheriff to make a levy and offer property for sale within sixty days after he has received his writ. The particular attention to which reference is here made reads as follow:

When an excursion against any property of any person is issued to the Sheriff, he shall serve said execution, upon the defendand or defendants in said county and levy the same, if not paid upon property, and make at least one offer to sell property levied upon within sixty days after such execution comes to his hands, if property can be found, unless otherwise directed by the plaintiff or plaintiffs, of his or their agents.

Parties interested in these matters will at once observe what Sheriffs are required to do and should govern themselves, acordingly.

The Freedmen's Bureau accounts are $700,000 short. Radical sheets should boil over with indignation at this plunder of the negroe's money, but wonderful to relate not a word have they to say on the subject.

JERUSHY.

BY SAUL POTTS.

You must come 'n see us agin, John, when the folks is all t' home;
I reckon they'd like to see ye, 'f ye feel inclined to come;
Come when ye've a mind to, there's most always some on us about—
I'm sorry it happened so to-day, that both the gals was out.

Ye need n't be partic'lar about our bein' home,
We're in and out consid'able, and over to Father's some,
But the gals you'll find good company, espesh'ly Sairy Jane;
'N I think they'll both on 'em be glad to have ye come again.

Jerushy, she's more quiet like—hain't been so much to school;
But I tell ye what, ef I do say it, she ain't nobody's fool;
She's more "domestic," as they say, but she knows what she's about,
'N most likely you'll find her to home, if Sairy Jane is out.

"She's quieter 'n Sairy Jane?" Wal, I should say she was;
You'd think so 'f you should hear the way that gal goes on—O laws!
She ain't so showy nigh as Sal (I sometimes call her Sal
For short, though she don't like it much), but she's my favorite gal.

Our Sairy Jane was down to Brooklyn, goin' on nigh two year,
'T school there at the "Packard"—it was her ma's ideer:
She thought our deestrick school wa' n't quite enough for Sairy Jane,
'N we did talk a little this spring 'v sendin' her there again.

I kinder hate to have her go—not that I mind the expense,
But in all this "finishin'" business, there don't seem to me no sense—
What with French, Dutch and Italian, and thumpin' the pianny,
Gals now-days ain't of no account, at least not much if any.

Mother and me was both on us brought up to like to work,
I've almost always had to, and my woman ain't no shirk;
And both our gals is used to it, but somehow Sairy Jane
Don't take to it so nat'ral as Jerushy, that is plain.

And sence she's been to boardin' school she kinder thinks it ain't
Quite so genteel to cook and wash as 'tis to read and paint,
Or set in the best settin' room dressed up o' afternoons,
'N practisin', on our new pianny, all her fancy tunes.

But Jerushy somehow's always busy 't one thing or another,
A seein' about the housework, or a helpin' of her mother;
She never hires no sewin' done, she runs her own machine,
And yet with all her workin' reads a good deal in between.

"You've noticed what a difference there was in them two gals?"
Wal, yes, Jerushy's face, to most folks, ain't so fair as Sal's;
And Sally is more showy, with her city ways and clothes,
N it's nat'ral that of the two she'd take best with the beaux.

Well, Sairy Jane is bright and smart and pretty, I'll allow,
'N if she ain't so useful—What? don't tell me John! Wal, now!
You like Jerushy better; and—and what's that you say?
You've come to ask for my consent to give my gal away?

Why, John, 'f I'd seen the angel Gabriel comin' through the skies,
I really think I couldn't a been more chock full o' surprise;
And yet now that I think on't, it kind er strikes me too,
I've heered Jerush' say so'thin' about her likin' you.

Wal, John, so far as I'm concerned, I can't say 's I object,
And her mother won't do nothin' to hinder, I expect;
But it's so kind er sudden, it most takes my breath away,
When Sairy Jane hears on't I wonder what on airth she'll say.

Don't go yet, John, sit down a spell, it ain't so very late,
Here is Jerushy comin' now through the back garden gate;
"Wal, wal, young woman, where 've ye been, and what d'ye think that John
'S been tellin' me about ye here and your sly goin's on?

"And ye never said a word to me—ye what? ye spoke to mother?
Wal, I must say she kep' it dre'dful secret somehow 'n' other;
But it's all right, Jerushy—though I hate to let ye go—
It's just the way with blessin's we count most on here below."

Wal, John, take good care of her, she'll make a first rate wife.
I reckon you love her—love 's 'bout all there is worth much in life;
And riches, you know what the Scriptur' says of thieves and moth—
I wish ye joy, Jerushy—John—and may God bless ye both.

A GEORGIA SERMON.

In the autumn of 1830 I attended a camp meeting in the interior of Georgia, and heard a sermon which I have never been able to forget or describe. I have attempted several times to write it. But it cannot be put on paper. The main force of it was in the snuffing and spitting and groaning and hound-after-a-fox sort of yelp and whine, to which no pen can do justice. It must be intoned to be appreciated. I have preached it a thousand times for the amusement of friends, and have been satisfied with my effort. I have used it as a remedial agent in exercising the demons of hypochondria, and have never failed "to send them down a steep place in the sea," or somewhere else, to the great relief of the sufferer.

The speaker had just been licensed, and it was his first sermon. In person he was small, bullet-headed, of a fair, sandy complexion, and his countenance was indicative of sincerity and honesty. His remarks evinced great reverence for the works of God, as manifested in zoology and natural history, and "was taking up the Bible in regular order for the first time in his life." He had gotten as far as the history, the ark, the flood, etc. Besides, just before his conversion he "had been reading Goldsmith's 'Animated Nater,' and the two together, by the aid and assistance of the sperit, had led him into a powerful train of thinking, just as he stood at his work-bench day in and day out." But whatever his sermon may have been, it was his own. The text was, "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be." After commenting upon that portion of Genesis descriptive of the flood, he "warmed up" suddenly, and broke out in the following strains:

"Yes, my brethren, the heavens of the windows was opened-ah, and the floods of the g-r-e-a-t deep kivered the waters-ah, and there was Shem, and there was Japheth-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah.

"And there was the elephant-ah, that g-r-e-a-t animal-ah, of which Goldsmith describes in his 'Animated Nater'-ah, what is as big as a horse-ah, and his bones as big as a tree-ah, depending somewhat on the size of the tree-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah. And the heavens of the windows was opened-ah, and the floods of the g-r-e-a-t deep kivered the waters-ah, and there was Hem, and there was Sham, and there was Japheth-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah.

"And there was the hippotamus-ah, that g-r-e-a-t animal-ah, of which Goldsmith describes in his 'Animated Nater'-ah, what has a g-r-e-a-t horn-ah, a-stickin' right straight up out of his forewardah, six feet long-ah, more or less, depending somewhat on the length of it-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah.

"And there was the giraffe-ah, my bretherin, that ill-contrived reptile of which Goldsmith describes in his 'Animated Nater'-ah, whose forelegs is twenty-five feet long-ah, more or less-ah, depending on the length of em-ah, and a neck so long as he can eat hay off the top of a barn-ah, depending somewhat on the hithe of the barn-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah. And the heavens of the windows was opened-ah, and the floods of the great deep kivered the waters-ah; and there was Hem, and there was Sham, and there was Japheth-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah.

"And there was the zebra, my brethern-ah, that b-e-a-u-t-i-f-u-l animal of which Goldsmith describes in his 'Animated Nater'-ah, which has three hundred stripes a runnin' right round his body-ah, more or less, depending somewhat on the number of stripes-ah, and nary two stripes alike-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah.

"And there was the anaconder-ah, that g-r-e-a-t sarpint of which Goldsmith describes in his 'Animated Nater'-ah, what can swallow six oxen at a meal-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah. And the heavens of the windows was opened-ah, and the floods of the great deep kivered the waters-ah, and there was Shem, and there was Ham, and there was Japheth-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah.

"And there was the lion, my brethren-ah, what is the king of beasts, accordin' to Scripter-ah, and who, as St. Paul says-ah, prowls around of a night, like a roarin' devil-ah, a seekin' if he can't catch somebody-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah.

"And there was the antelope-ah, my brethren, that frisky little critter-ah, of which Goldsmith describes in his 'Animated Nater'-ah, what jumped seventy-five foot straight up-ah, and twice that distance down-ah, provided his legs will take him that fur-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah. And the heavens of the windows was opened-ah, and the floods of the great deep kivered the waters-ah, and there was Shem, and there was Ham, and there was Japheth-ah, a-l-l a-gwine into the Ark-ah."

Just at this point he stopped speaking a few moments, wiped his forehead, turned back his wristbands, ran his fingers through his hair, spit and rubbed his boot in it, drank a little water, commenced on a lower key, and proceeded as follows:

"But time would fail me, my bretherin, to describe all the animals that went into the Ark-ah. Your patience and my strength would give out before I got half through-ah. We talk, my bretherin, about the faith of Abraham and the patience of Job-ah; but it strikes me they didn't go much ahead of old Noerah. It tuck a right smart chance o' both to gether up all that gopher-wood and pitch and other truck for to build that craft-ah. I am a sort of carpenter myself, and have some idee of the job-ah. But to hammer, and saw, and maul, and split away on this one thing a hundred and twenty years-ah, an' lookin' for his pay in another world-ah—I tell ye, my bretherin, if the Lord had a-sot Job at that, it's my opinion he would a-tuck his wife's advice inside of fifty years-ah. Besides, no doubt, his righteous soul was vexed with the filthy communications of the blasphemous set that was always a-loferin' and a saunterin' around-ah, a-pickin' up his tools and a-misplacin' 'em, and a-callin' him an old fool or something worse-ah; and, to clap the climax, he was a preacher, and had that ongodly gineration in his hands every Sunday-ah. But the Lord stood by him and seed him through the job-ah; and when everything was ready he didn't send Noer out to scrimmage and scout and hunt all over the wild world for to get up the critters and varmints that he wanted saved-ah. They all come to his hand of their own accord, and Noer only had to head 'em in and fix 'em around in their places-ah. Then he gethered up his own family, and the Lord shut him in, and the heavens of the windows was opened-ah.

"But, my bretherin', Noer-ah had use for patience after this-ah. Think what a time he must a-had a-feedin' and a-waterin' and a-cleanin' out after sich a crowd-ah. Some of 'em, accordin' to Goldsmith's 'Animated Nater'-ah, was carniverous, and wanted fresh meat-ah; and some was herbivorious, and wanted vegetable food-ah; and some was wormivorous, and swallowed live things whole-ah; and he had to feed everything accordin' to its nater. Hence, we view, my brethren-ah, as the nater of the animals wasn't altered by going into the Ark-ah, some of them would roar, and howl, and bark, and bray, and squeal, and bleat, the whole indurin' night-ah, a-drivin' sleep from his eyes and slumber from his eyelets-ah, and at the first streak o' daylight the last hoof of 'em would set up a noise accordin' to its nater-ah, and the bulls of Bashan wern't nowhar-ah. I've often wondered how their women stood it. Scripter is silent on this pint-ah; but I think I know of some that would a-been vaporing and nervious under sich circumstances-ah, and in an onguarded moment might a-said somethin' beside their prayers-ah."

Here the speaker stopped again, spit, took water, etc., and hastened to a conclusion:

"My bretherin," said he, "one more word for old Noer-ah, and I will draw to a close-ah. After the outbeatin time he had, first and last, for so many hundred year-ah, if he did, by accident or otherwise, take a leetle too much wine on one occasion-ah, I think less ort to a-been said about it-ah. Besides, I think he was entitled to one spree-ah, as he made the wine himself, and, accordin' to Scripter, it makes glad the heart o' man ah. My brethern, as it was in the days of Noer-ah, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be-ah. The world will never be drowned again-ah. It will be sot a-fire, and burnt up, root and branch, with a fervient heat-ah. Oh! what will wretched, ondone sinners do on that orful day-ah? They won't feel fit for to live, nor for to die-ah. They will be put to their wit's end, and knock and straddle around in every direction-ah. For all at onct, my bretherin-ah, they will behold the heavens a-darkin-ah, the seas a-roarin'-ah, the tombs a-bustin'-ah, the mountains a-meltin'-ah; and everything, I think, will be in a confused and onsettled state. May the Lord add His blessing. Amen!"

A House Built in a Day.

The newspapers of Lancaster, Penn., publish an account of the building of a brick house in that city in ten and a half hours, the materials having been prepared on the site previous to the commencement. The house is twenty feet by thirty on the ground floor, two stories in height, and contains eight rooms. There were in all upward of 100 workmen employed. The cellar foundation was already laid, and at precisely 6 o'clock the men went to work. The Examiner thus describes the labor:

Mr. J. T. Reading, photographer, was present with his apparatus, and took views every fifteen minutes of the building and workmen while in motion, which, of course, produced some ridiculous pictures—men, white and colored, in almost every position, are to be seen represented. At 8 o'clock a. m. the structure was advanced to the height of one story, with two floors—ground and second—laid, partitions in, and lathed and partly plastered, doors hung, stairways up, and a view taken with the doctor in the midst of his workmen. The scene is a busy and comic one—the bricklayers erecting scaffolding for the second story; 10 o'clock a. m., view taken of western front on Prince street—second story brick-work two-thirds up, with carpenters ready to lay floors, and plasterers commence lathing; western front painted and brick penciled to first story, and masons run short of brick, and then some delay in consequence, but it was remedied in a short time.

Eleven o'clock a. m., the bricklayers are up to square of ceiling for third floor, with corners laid to the height required to receive the rafters for roofing. Tinners waiting. The process of white-coating is now about completed to the first story. At 11:18 a. m. first rafter for roof laid. At 11:11 the last brick was laid upon the chimneys, and the bricklayers are done. Roof sheathed and tinners begin to lay roofing. At 12:50 scaffolding all removed from building. At 2:30 p. m., sash in windows of first story and painters finished up; wash-boards down and rubbish cleaned away. At this writing the tinners are leaving the building; roofing and spouting completed. Plasterers still at work in the second story. The building has been insured, and in a few hours will be ready for a tenant.

German Ignorance of Politics.

At first view the empire is very strong. But it has many elements of weakness. In the first place, the people, as a whole, seem to be grossly ignorant of their political privileges, and indifferent to them. In Dresden, two university men, both of age, were unable to tell me whether the members of the Imperial Parliament were elected or appointed. Neither knew the qualifications for voting. One did not know whether the Federal States had separate Assemblies or not. The other was wholly ignorant of these Assemblies' time and places of meeting, and of their prerogatives. Both concurred in saying: "If you wish to know about any such things, you must ask a lawyer; nobody else knows or cares." To infer from the ignorance of these two men that of the whole nation would be painfully like M. Taine's inference of all the views of all Englismen on all subjects from the looks and talk of his one fellow-traveler between Liverpool and London. It might even suggest that standard story of the danger of inductive reasoning from too few facts, which runs in this wise: A tourist in America entered in his note-book: "Was shaved this morning; the barber had red hair. Mem.: All barbers in the States have red hair." But many other Germans have since confirmed what these two men said. Again and again have I been told that it was idle to expect anybody but a lawyer to know anything about the structure of government. And, as far as my limited experience goes, nobody else has known. Such apathetic ignorance has sometimes been relied upon by despotisms as their surest support. Witness Napoleon III. and the French peasantry. But experience and common sense unite to prove that people who show such indifference, while they will not fight to overthrow their government, will not willingly fight to maintain it when domestic foes attack it. They are indifferent to local changes, so long as their own throats and purse-strings are left uncut.—Cologne Letter.

American Explorations in Palestine.

Advices from Lieut. Steever, commanding the Palestine exploring expedition, dated June 14, just received, give an outline of the work done this season in Moab. A detailed report will soon be forwarded. They have selected and satisfactorily measured a base line near Herban, five miles in length; they have established suitable trigonometrical stations, and actually triangulated 400 square miles, besides having almost completedt he detail of the same, including the hill shading. The elevation above the Dead and Mediterranean seas has been well obtained. The height of all important points and elevations within the triangulation has been determined and the meterological observations regularly taken and noted. This alone is deemed an invaluable acquisition to geographical knowledge. Every day's work has revealed ruins unknown and unmentioned by any traveler. The Bedouins tell of ruins of cities a few days' journey to the south and east, which it is impossible at this season to visit. In the department of archæology and biblical research the expedition has not been less successful. Prof. Paine has prepared a voluminous report, identifying Nebo and Pisgah. The expedition would soon go into summer quarters. Lieut. Steever advises resumption of the work in the autumn rather than with the coming spring. All were in good health and spirits.

THE tonnage of the four largest transatlantic steamers appears, by the New York Custom-House, to be as follows: Ville du Havre, of the French line, 5,160 tons; Egypt, of the National line, 5,089 tons; Spain, of the National line, 4,871 tons; City of Chester, of the Inman line, 4,565 tons.

Moral Courage in Every-Day Life.

["Moral Courage" was printed in large letters and put as the caption of the following items, and placed in a conspicuous place on the door of systematic merchant in New York for a constant reference, and furnished to us by him for publication:]

Have the courage to discharge a debt while you have the money in your pocket.

Have the courage to do without that which you do not need, however much your eyes may covet it.

Have the courage to speak your mind when it is necessary that you should do so, and hold your tongue when it is prudent you should do so.

Have the courage to speak to a friend in a "seedy" coat, even though you are in company with a rich one, and richly attired.

Have the courage to own you are poor, and thus disarm poverty of its sharpest sting.

Have the courage to tell a man why you refuse to credit him.

Have the courage to tell a man why you will not lend him your money.

Have the courage to cut the most agreeable acquaintance you have when you are convinced that he lacks principle; a friend should bear with a friend's infirmities, but not with his vices.

Have the courage to show your respect for honesty, in whatever guise it appears, and your contempt for dishonesty and duplicity by whomsoever exhibited.

Have the courage to wear your old clothes until you can pay for new ones.

Have the courage to prefer comfort and propriety to fashion, in all things.

Have the courage to acknowledge your ignorance, rather than to seek for knowledge under false pretenses.

Have the courage, in providing an entertainment for your friends, not to exceed your means.

Have the courage to insure the property in your possession, and thereby pay your debts in full.

Have the courage to obey your Maker at the risk of being ridiculed by man.

St. Augustine, Florida.

The aspect of St. Augustine is quaint and strange, in harmony with its romantic history. It has no pretensions to architectural richness or beauty; and yet it is impressive from its unlikeness to anything else in America. It is as if some little, old, dead-and-alive Spanish town, with its fort and gateway and Moorish bell-towers, had broken loose, floated over here, and got stranded on a mud bank. Here you see the shovel-hats and black gowns of priests; the convent, with gliding figures of nuns; and in the narrow, crooked streets meet dark-browed people with great Spanish eyes and coal-black hair. The current of life here has the indolent, dreamy stillness that characterizes life in old Spain. In Spain, when you ask a man to do anything, instead of answering as we do, "In a minute," the invariable reply is, "In an hour;" and the growth and progress of St. Augustine have been according. There it stands, alone, isolated, connected by no good roads or navigation with the busy, living world. Before 1835, St. Augustine was a bower of orange trees. Almost every house looked forth from these encircling shades. The frost came and withered all; and in very few cases did it seem to come into the heads of the inhabitants to try again. The orange groves are now the exception, not the rule; and yet for thirty years it has been quite possible to have them.—Mrs. Stowe's "Palmetto Letters."

About Alligators.

All our alligators, says a Galveston (Texas) paper, as well as the crocodiles of the tropics, are oviparous. They are gregarious in their habits, although they do not seem to act in concert in obtaining their prey. During the winter season the alligators remain in a state of torpor, buried generally in the mud of the marshes and bayous. The first warm weather restores their suspended vitality, and a few may then be seen sunning themselves on logs and other floating debris.

They fish principally during the night, and lie in the sunshine half asleep on the surface of the water during the day. A splash in the water, or any slight noise in fact, will instantly arouse their attention, and as their curiosity is great, they will swim slowly here and there to ascertain the cause of the disturbance. The whine of a puppy seems to excite them more than aught else; why, I cannot tell, for it is equally efficacious where dogs have never previously been, and where it were impossible to suppose the alligators had ever heard them. The resemblance to the noise or bark of their young has been said to be a cause; but such reasoning is fallacious, as at seasons when their young no longer bark, they are equally attracted by a whine. Their ferocity and other equally dangerous qualities have been very greatly overrated and exaggerated. That they are extremely voracious is unquestionable; but they generally confine their ravages to fish and other small prey. The harrowing tales of families being devoured by them are the "veriest coinage of the brain," and have in reality no existence whatsoever.

What a Pet Toad Does.

The Macon (Ga.) Messenger says that one of its citizens has a well grown toad in his garden which is disposed to be quite tame and sociable. Recently he threw before it a stout piece of cooked ham about half the weight of the ugly reptile. The creature eyed it wistfully, then stretching itself at full length on the ground, began gradually to crawl (not jump) toward the meat. It would move an inch or two, then wink its eyes and lick its chops in the most curious manner, evidently meditating an attack. When about half a foot from the object, suddenly, quick as thought, it pounced upon it and then leaped back as rapidly. This attack and retreat was repeated several times, until satisfied that it had vanquished its inert antagonist, the frog seized the meat, and with a tremendous effort gulped it down. Other bits of bacon were laid before it, but the creature, surfeited with its repast, took no notice them. The toad is not very choice as to the quality of its food. The writer has seen one seize and swallow buckshot after buckshot as it was rolled toward it, until, weighed down with the load it bore, further motion became impossible.

HOW DOES HE DO IT?

Mesmerism, Magnetism, Odic Force, or What?—A Young Man Who Possesses a Most Inexplicable Faculty for Finding Things.

[From the Chicago Times.]

A young gentleman named J. B. Brown, 21 years of age, though looking rather younger than that, and of an intelligent and rather promising appearance, has come to the city from Red Oak, Iowa, to give exhibitions before such as choose to investigate, of what may be termed a power of divination through mesmerism or psychology. Mr. Brown claims to have possessed this strange gift from childhood, and by its means alleges to have traced a murderer to his hiding-place. He was born in East St. Louis, but for many years attended school at Morrison, Whiteside county, this State, and Mr. M. R. Kelly, formerly Superintendent of Schools in that county, now accompanies him. The young man's power may be defined as "mind reading," though he does not choose to give it any name, but prefers that every one shall investigate for him or herself, and form their own conclusions. His strange gift may be illustrated in this way: A person unknown to Mr. Brown hides any object he pleases in any place he pleases, and then approaches the subject, who is blindfolded. The person who has hidden the object places himself in rapport with the operator by allowing him to take his left arm, which must be entirely sound, or it will destroy the connection, and the person must be eminently sober, for the power can under no circumstances be induced to make a beast of itself. This arm he manipulates first at the elbow, apparently to see if it is sound, and he then places the hand on his forehead, holding it there with his right hand, while his own left hand he places on the forehead of the investigator, thus forming a complete magnetic chain. This position is maintained for perhaps half a minute, when he withdraws his hand from the inquirer's forehead, but keeps the latter's hand to his own head, and then starts off in search of the hidden object. But through it all the party having hidden the object must keep his own mind intent on the locality where it is secreted.

In pursuance of an invitation extended through the press, a company of thirty or forty well-known gentlemen of this city met in the club-room of the Sherman House yesterday afternoon to witness experiments. Among those present were Messrs. J. H. McVicker, Corporation Counsel Tuly, Gen. I. N. Stiles, Dr. Blake, Ald. Sherwood, Col. Shirley, and many other equally well-known gentlemen.

Mr. Brown was blindfolded, and announced himself as ready for experiment. A local journalist in the meantime quietly slipped a tiny leaf from a carnation pink under another gentleman's foot, a circumstance known only to the two persons party to the transaction. Mr. Brown went through the preliminary maneuver already described, and immediately started straight for the place where the leaf was hidden, dragging his appendage after him. He bent down his head—he was following a "light," he said—and tapped the boot with his forehead. The gentleman lifted his foot and the leaf was revealed.

Gen. Stiles then announced that he had hidden something, and placed himself in rapport with the mesmeric subject. They soon started away together, going hither and thither about the room, Mr. Brown proceeding with his head down, and his action rather reminding one of a terrier who has lost the scent of a rat. Several minutes were consumed in dashing about from place to place, and Mr. Brown was all the time getting his head nearer the floor, and finally stopped and remarked that the object he was looking for was on Mr. Stiles' person, near the ground. The General "acknowledged the corn" by drawing a Spanish dollar from his shoe.

Mr. Tuly was the next gentleman who had hidden something. In a few seconds the subject started off with him, dragged him along two hall-ways, and finally lifted a heavy trunk, under which lay concealed the dilapidated jack-knife of the learned jurist.

Card-board letters of the alphabet were then placed on as many chairs, which had previously been placed in a circle. A gentleman in the audience then entered the ring with the blindfolded subject, who passed—with some halts and straying hither and thither—from letter to letter until he had spelled out his companion's name. Each letter was correctly picked out in order.

A Miraculous Escape.

A Mrs. King had a surprise at Shawneetown the other day. It was an accident that Mrs. King happened to be at Shawneetown. She did not intend to go there, but the steamboat Jennie Howell, on which she was traveling, struck a snag, and sank in the Ohio river. Several of the passengers were drowned, and among them some children. Mrs. King had a child on board whom she mourned as lost, and was taken to Shawneetown without her babe. The Jennie Howell sank deep in the water, and the next morning men went to the vessel to recover the bodies of the lost. Soon after daylight a mattress was discovered floating in the cabin, which was filled with water nearly to the ceiling. Upon examination, a child, a little boy, was discovered on the mattress sleeping as peacefully as if nothing unusual had happened. His bed was not very dry, for it had sunk a good deal from soaking, but still sustained its living freight. In due time the child was sent to Shawneetown, where the other passengers had been landed the night before. Its coming made an excitement among the wrecked travelers, for more than one mother had lost children by the disaster. It was a touching scene when Mrs. King recognized the child as her boy whom she had mourned as lost for nearly twenty-four hours. The preservation of Moses in the bulrushes was not so miraculous as the safety of Mrs. King's boy. He had been tossing about on the waste of waters in the cabin all night, and was brought to his mother alive in the hour of her deepest woe.

THE Holy Father has, so the story goes, little cups and saucers lying on his writing table before him, filled with unset gems of great value, out of which he occasionally takes little pinches to give as presents to his most favored attendants and visitors, making as free with the glittering baubles as if he were merely dispensing pinches of snuff.

CONNECTICUT has lost a remarkable clergyman in Rev. Daniel Williams, who had preached for upward of half a century without a regular salary, but for the sake of doing good and from love of the cause, and who delivered between two and three thousand funeral sermons. Such wholesale administering of consolation is as unusual as it is beautiful to think of.

THE Times boasted that it had a "Walter press," from London; the Tribune says there is none in New York, and that Mr. Hoe is rendering the importation of one needless by the invention of a new printing machine that prints both sides of a paper at once, from a continuous roll of paper, and at such a rate of speed as puts all previous machines into the shade.

An Amusing Experiment.

The gas of our cities can be lighted by frictional electricity, excited by a lady's ordinary fur muff. Thus—place four tumblers, upside down, upon the floor or carpet, and upon these lay a board or other substance to stand upon, within reach of the burner. Upon this insulated board let a person stand, and a second person take the muff and rub it a number of times down the back of the coat of the first, by which he or she (if it be a lady, with a woolen shawl on) will become charged with electricity sufficient to light the gas with the tip of the finger, as effectually as if done with an ignited match. To perform the experiment well requires three persons, one to turn on and off the gas, for if done by the person insulated and charged he will not only receive a shock, but discharge the electricity before applying it to the gas. A number of persons can participate in the amusement at the same time, by insulating themselves and joining hands. Let the friction of the muff be applied to the person farthest from the burner until all become charged, and the person at the other extreme can light the gas, all feeling a sensible shock at the time of ignition or discharge of the fluid.—Exchange.

The Age of the Earth.

Dr. Herman J. Klein has just published at Cologne a somewhat curious inquiry concerning the age of the earth, in which he severely criticises the attempts of the geologists to compute the length of time required for certain formations. Thus Biddel calculates the age of the Mississippi delta, from the amount of the present yearly deposit, to be four hundred thousand years; Lyell, the receding of the Niagara Falls from Kingston to their present site, to be thirty-five thousand years; and Bischof, for the formation of coal, to be nine millions of years. But all these and numerous other similar calculations have, Dr. Klein thinks, this fault, that they are all based upon present conditions and experiments on a small scale, from which conclusions are drawn to determine general developments of the most gigantic dimensions.

A Band that Beat Gideon's.

George Harding tells this story in the Indianapolis Sunday Herald:

Col. George Parker is not naturally a truculent or vindictive man. But he has a dreadful temper of his own, and when it is thoroughly aroused he will sometimes indulge in the most diabolical threats. Col. Fred Knefler tells an instance of the kind: During the war Col. Sam Stout, of the 17th Kentucky, took into his obstinate old head that he must have a regimental band. He made a liberal contribution, assessed the officers, and thus raised $900 for the purchase of instruments. Then he detailed a dozen stage drivers of his regiment to work on the horns, and a cross-roads singing-school teacher to instruct them. The sweat stood in great beads upon Col. Knefler's forehead as he recounted the horrors entailed upon the brigade by that dreadful band. Even at this late day he cannot recall his sufferings without a shudder. The woods were filled with the most discordant brays and squawks, and agonized groans. The men diserted in whole battalions, several officers went mad as March hares, and the suicides averaged nine a week. Even the rebels fled in wild terror before the acoustic shrapnel of Stout's band. Old Stout, however, regarded it as the grandest musical combination of the time, and every evening, after dress parade, he would put the devilish stage drivers to work on the horns, and, while the rest of the brigade were stuffing cotton in their ears, or taking wildly to the woods, he would light his cob pipe, hoist in four inches of commissary, lean back against a tree, close his eyes, and lap his soul in elysium. So much by way of preface. One day Col. Parker, at that time a captain, became terribly enraged at one of his men. Capt. Parker raged and howled, and threatened all manner of diabolical punishments, but the soldier had taken "the studs," and was obstinate and defiant. At last the captain thought of a threat that would "fetch" him. "D—n you," he roared, "I'll lock you up for twenty-four hours with that 17th Kentucky band, and, by Jove, you shall stay there!" The soldier turned deadly pale. He fell on his knees and shrieked: "Don't! captain, don't! Anything but that! I'll do anything you want. Buck and gag me, but don't drive me mad." Capt. Parker relented.

Anecdote of Palmerston.

Lord Palmerston's wit was in such unmistakable Saxon that the edge was often too sharp for very free use. Few persons have earned themselves a greater reputation for philanthropy than Lord Shaftesbury, who, by the way, married Lady Palmerston's oldest daughter by Earl Cowper, her first husband. Lord Palmerston was never weary of telling stories about his son-in-law, whose religious zeal he did not much believe in or care for; and Lord Shaftesbury, it was said, always took them in good part. It must be nearly twenty years ago that I overheard the then Home Secretary call across the table to Lord John Russell, who sat reading a newspaper at the Garrick:

"Russell, have you read Tony's (the nickname by which he always designated the Earl of Shaftesbury, whose name is Anthony Ashley Cooper) speech last night before the parsons and parish paupers at Exeter Hall?"

"I have not, my Lord," replied Lord John, whose priggishness never permits him to treat or address any person familiarly.

"Well, read it. It's devilish good, and the examination of the children at the close, I am told, was better still."

"How so?"

"Tony was asking the children a variety of questions of a scriptural nature, to which he had received very satisfactory answers. Just as he was concluding, he addressed a girl somewhat older than the rest, and, among other things, inquired, 'Who made your vile body?' 'Please, my Lord,' responded the unsophisticated girl, 'Betsey Jones made my body, but I made the skirt myself.'"

Horrible Tragedy in Utah.

On Thursday, at Bingham, a mining town of perhaps 3,000 inhabitants, twenty-five miles from Salt Lake, Gabriel L. Cotton, Gilbert Cotton, and Gabriel Cotton, Jr., father and two sons, were shot by Samuel L. Butcher and a man unknown. Butcher quarreled with an employe of Gabriel L. Cotton. This employe invoked the aid of his employer. He, securing a navy revolver, went to Butcher's house, and was shortly after followed by his two sons, each on horseback—one with a repeating rifle, the other with a double-barreled shot-gun. The old man Cotton, after some sharp words with Butcher, went to a neighbor's house. Meantime one of the young Cottons (Gabriel, Jr.), aged nineteen, came up to Butcher's place, asked the latter where his father was, gave the lie, snapped his shot-gun and was shot by Butcher and instantly killed. The other son, Gilbert, aged twenty-one, then came up and asked for his brother, and began discharging his rifle into Butcher's house. He was hurried away and into a neighbor's house, when the old man Cotton appeared, quarreled with Butcher, fired two shots at him, and was instantly killed by a ball from Butcher's gun. Butcher then turned and fired three Derringer balls into the son Gilbert, who had been deprived of his gun and had again come upon the scene. After killing the three Cottons, Butcher and his companion went into the house of one Thomas Thompson, and swore they would "clear out" him and his son; but surfeited with blood they finally left him. The three dead bodies were thrown into a wagon by three women, mother and sisters of the boys, and drawn home by hand.—Salt Lake Cor. New York World.

OLD AGE.—Patriarchs are still among us; and the human race is not degenerating in point of years. Eighteen men and sixty-three women died during the past year in England at the of 100 years or over. There were still living, when the census was taken, six men and twenty-two women, 100 years old; one man and fourteen women, 101 years; three men and eleven women, 102 years; two men and six women, 103 years; five men and seven women, 104 years; two women, 105 years. A woman died in Huddersfield at the age of 107, and a man in Staffordshire was 108 years old when he died.

Wanted.

THE NATIONAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY of the United States of America wants an agent in every town in the country, and will pay liberally for business secured. The principal features of the Company are its great financial strength, its low premiums, and its liberal policies. Its plans are easily understood, and those devoting only a portion of their time to insurance are enabled often times to accomplish gratifying results. We do not know of a company better deserving of patronage by those wanting insurance, nor one with which an agent could more advantageously connect himself. E. A. Rollins is President, and Jay Cooke is Chairman of the Finance Committee. Address branch office of Company, at Philadelphia.—[Com.

POPULAR FALLACY AND DECEPTIONS.—It is an infirmity of man to cling to the teachings of a past generation, and to stubbornly resist the light of reform and progress. Health-reform and Temperance-growth are jealously watched over by the Poison Bitters compounders. One great prevailing deception of the present age, is the impression that every human biped of either sex must be stimulated, and the poisoned chalice is labeled "Medicated Bitters," the better to palliate their use and prolong the epidemic. One of the most zealous workers to cure this malady, DR. JOSEPH WALKER, Inventor and Proprietor of the famed CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS, believes in making Bitters that are "true medicine," and advises the sick man to swallow a draught that will wash out the Leprosy of his disease. In this faith he is steadfast, and his VINEGAR BITTERS, though a contradiction to the general character of all other Bitters, are, as a great success and Life Vitalizer, evidence of one popular fallacy and corrected.—[Com.

THE London Spectator, commenting on the domination which Europe is extending over every part of Asia, asks whether the strange spectacle of a handful of aliens holding half the population of the world in subjection is likely to be a permanent one, and adds; "One real defeat of the Europeans would enlighten all Asia, and Asia can wait long and quietly for her news. She is now nearly subjugated, and, we do not doubt, will remain so for a time; but there may be terrible struggles yet—struggles so fierce that the curious federation of Europe which now governs Shanghai may be called into existence to keep Asia down till her education is complete. The thorough extinction of the white man in China would call Europe to very different work than its present one of squabbling whether dead dynasties are corpses or sacred mummies."

MANY OF OUR READERS, who are looking about for something to do, can find pleasant and profitable employment in the business of life insurance. It requires no capital, save a horse and buggy to travel through the country, and to active men the recompense is certain. We commend the selection of some strong old company like the New York Life, with large assets and liberal plans, one that is popular wherever known, and one, too, that everybody knows. A man who takes applications for life insurances is doing good. It is in every sense a good business. A letter dropped to the home office of this company, at 346 and 348 Broadway, New York, will meet with a ready response. Try it.—[Com.

A Good Investment.

Most persons having money to invest, whether much or little, desire to place it where it will be secure, as well as profitable to them. There is no more profitable investment than an Endowment Policy in a good Life Insurance Company. Of these, one of the oldest and most reliable is the Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, a company of twenty-six years standing; and one in which the insured will be certain to secure his policy at the lowest possible rates, as all of the surplus premiums are returned each year to the insured. For Policies or Agencies, address J. W. IREDELL, Jr., Superintendent of Agencies, No. 78 West Third st., Cincinnati, O, or the home office.—[Com.

Medicinal Poisons on the Wane.

The patriarchs took no mercury, no bismuth, no iodine, no bromide of patassium, no strychoria, no quinine. Happy old gentlemen! they did not even know of the existence of these "specifics," and yet they lived until it seemed as if Death had forgotten them. Their medicines were herbs and roots. They have left this fact on record, and the world seems to be now taking note of it and returning to the first principles of medication. HOSTETTER'S STOMACH BITTERS, the purest and most efficacious vegetable restorative of the day, is also the most popular. Thousands of persons who only a few years ago believed implicitly in all the poisons which figure in th pharmacœpia now pronounce this palatable tonic and alterative an all-sufficient remedy for dyspepsia, nervous debility, constipation, bilious complaints, headache, intermittent fevers, and all the ordinary disturbances of the stomach, the liver, the discharging organs and the brain. The time is not far distant when most of the powerful and venomous drugs now so recklessy administered by practitioners of the "heroic" school, in cases that might easily be controlled by milder treatment, will be utterly discarded by all philosophical physicians. As it is, the thinking public, who are generally ahead of the professionals, have already put the dangerous preparations aside and adopted Hostetter's Bitters in their stead as safe and excellent household medicine, adapted to almost every ailment except the organic and deadly contagious diseases. For more than twenty years this famous restorative and preventive has been annually strengthening its hold upon the public confidence and it now takes the lead of every advertised medicine manufactured in this country

AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

This compound of the vegetable alteratives, Sarsaparilla, Dock, Stillingia and Mandrake with the Iodides of Potassium and Iron makes a most effectual cure of a series of complaints which are very prevalent and afflicting. It purifies the blood, purges out the lurking humors in the system, that undermine health and settle into troublesome disorders. Eruptions of the skin are the appearance on the surface of humors that should be expelled from the blood. Internal derangements are the determination of these same humors to some internal organ, or organs, whose action they derange, and whose substance they disease and destroy. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA expels these humors from the blood. When they are gone, the disorders they produce disappear, such as Ulcerations of the Liver, Stomach, Kidneys, Lungs, Eruptions and Eruptive Diseases of the Skin, St. Anthony's Fire, Rose or Erysipelas, Pimples, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter and Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Ringworm, Ulcers and Sores, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Pain in the Bones, Side and Head, Female Weakness, Sterility, Leucorrhœa arising from internal ulceration and uterine disease, Dropsy, Dyspepsia, Emaciation and General Debility. With their departure health returns.

Has made the most astonishing Cures; so quick, so rapid are the changes the Body undergoes, under the influence of this truly Wonderful Medicine, that Every Day an Increase in Flesh and Weight is Seen and Felt.
THE GREAT BLOOD PURIFIER.

Every drop of the SARSAPARILLIAN RESOLVENT communicates through the blood, Sweat, Urine, and other fluids and juices of the system the vigor of life, for it repairs the wastes of the body with new and sound material. Scrofula, Syphilis, Consumption, Glandular disease, Ulcers in the throat, Mouth, Tumors, Nodes in the Glands and other parts of the system, Sore Eyes, Strumorous discharges from the Ears, and the worst forms of Skin diseases, Eruptions, Fever Sores, Scald Head, Ring Worm, Salt Rheum, Erysipelas, Acne, Black Spots, Worms in the Flesh, Tumors, Cancers in the Womb, and all weakening and painful discharges, Night Sweats, Loss of Sperm and all wastes of the life principle, are within the curative range of this wonder of Modern Chemistry, and a few days' use will prove to any person using it for either of these forms of disease its potent power to cure them.

If the patient, daily becoming reduced by the wastes and decomposition that is continually progressing, succeeds in arresting these wastes, and repairs the same with new material made from healthy blood—and this the SARSAPARILLIAN will and does secure—a cure is certain; for when once this remedy commences its work of purification, and succeeds in diminishing the loss of wastes, its repairs will be rapid, and every day the patient will feel himself growing better and stronger, the food digesting better, appetite improving, and flesh and weight increasing.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Aug. 21, 1873

The next Ohio State fair is to be held at Mansfiled, September 1, 2, 3 4, and 5, 1873.

The Democrats of Maiu have nominated Joseph Titcomb for Governor and adopted the progressive resolutions passed by the Ohio Democrats,

That egg with a snake in it has been found at South Bend this year. They have marked it "S. C.—1873—$1200," and put it where it would do the most good.

It is asserted that positive truth exists of a deficit in the Treasury department at Washington of ten millions of dollars. The smallness of the amount is the only surprising thing about it.

Would it not be well to explain to the soldiers' convention called to meet in Pittsburg in September next, why the sister of ex-guerilla Mosby can get employment in the department at Washington without passing an examination, while the widows and orphans of soldiers are rigidly examined and turned away if their answers are not satisfactory.

The Chicago Times, a newspaper of the blatherskiting order, denounces the Democracy of Ohio for nominating a "straight-out" ticket: If we are not mistaken, this is the same Chicago Times that was so tortured last year because a "straight-out" ticket was not nominated. "You pays your money and takes your choice." However, it matters very little, so far as influence is concerned, what the Chicago Times supports or opposes.

Butler originated the salary steal, and Grant made it effective by signing his name to the bill, thereby making it a law. Hence the Radicals alone is responsible for this iniquitous measure. Has any one heard the Radical press condemning the President for his conduct, or any Radical convention expressing dissent thereat? They have denounced the Democrats, which was all right and proper, as every one of them who have the back pay deserves denouncing, but this is as far as they have gone. Not a word escapes any of them when it comes to Grant. It is all right with him, but all wrong with Democrats and Liberals.

The telegraph announces another terrible railroad accident on the Chicago Alton & St. Louis Railroad, near Lamont, whereby eleven persons were killed outright and thirty-seven wounded several of whom will probably not recover. The accident was a collision between a south-bound passenger train and an incoming freight train, and occurred about ten o'clock on Saturday night. The engineer of the freight train was John Puffenburger, who formerly ran on the Pittburg road and he has been arrested on a charge of manslaughter. The conductor named Bear, fled and has not been captured. It is said they were criminally careless.

The total number of Farmers' Granges in operation at this date is 4,750, with an aggregate membership of 350,000. The order is said to be growing the most readidly in Iowa, Illinois and Minnesota, and is making favorable progress in Nebraska, Kansas, Wisconsin and Indiana. The order is not political in the popular acceptation of the term,—that is the members are not professional office-seekers. But its purpose is to have representatives in the halls of legislation who will pay some regard to the wants of the great agricultural interest; who will legislate for the laboring masses instead of solely for the banks, railroad, manufacturing monopolies, and the thousand and one "rings" by which a few are made rich from the people's treasury, and the many are kept poor by footing the bills. The Granges know that their relief must come through the ballot-box and they are setting their houses in or for the time when they shall be called to act for themselves, fearlessly without prejudice, without affection, and as other interest act for theirs.

A young lady was knocked down in the street, at Peru, recently, by a flying goose.

ForePaugh's big ostrich died a few days ago, at Waterloo, of suffocation. The body was shipped to a Chicago taxidermist.

The following statement is furnished by a reporter from Poughkeepsie.

"The Rhinebeck Gazette charges that President Grant was drunk when he landed from the steamer Chauncy Vibbard at that place on his recent trip to Overlook Mountain. The Roundout Freeman, a Liberal Republican paper, the editor which was with the Mayor of Kingston, who received the President, denies the chrage."

This may be an interesting subject for gossips; but of what practical importance it is whether Gen. Grant was or was not drunk on this particular occasion? He has been drunk a great many times, and the people don't think any worse of him especially the temperance men.

Steadily and surely the grand old Democraite party is rising to the requriements of its noble mission. In Ohio no monopoly, No Protective Tariff, No Irredemmable Currency are the watchwords of the coming contest, and as we hope, the coming victory. The Maryland Democracy approach the same high standard, and from Maine comes back the clear and firm voiced reiritation of the Ohio platform. More and more plainly will it become apparent to the Democracy of the whole Union that thorough-going Democratic principle, openly maintained, boldly advocated and faithfully applied—to wit: Specie payment. No monopolies, Taxation for taxes only—will not only restore to the Union the beneficient rule under which all its historic glories were won, but will also speedily restore to the industries of the whole people in all the States a general prosperity, Free Trade and Farmers Rights.

Our Humiliation Abroad.

The report of the Special Commission appointed to investigate the Vienna Exposion irregularities, which was telegraphed over the country on the 12th inst., has the following:

"In conclusion the Speclai Commission find that the Commisson to Vienna has been managed corruptly and for personal purposes, to the great detriment of the American Department, and in violation of American honor and has exposed us to National humiliation at Vienna and throughout the world."

This is the first time in the history of the country that the American honor has been impeached beneath the eyes of all the nations; the first instance in which we have been humilated before the whole world, and exposed as a nation of tricksters to universal scorn and contempt. It did not happen under a Democratic, Aministration. Nothing like it ever did happen under a Democratic Administration. The man who violated the American honor and "exposed us to National humiliation a Vienna and throughout the world" were appointed by a Republican Administration and are Republicans themselves. But if the inventive faculty of the entire country has sought to devise something which would be to-day most distinctive and pronounced Americanism that the hundreds of thousands of peo from the four corners of the world who might point to it as our foremost characteristic, they could not have wrought so representative contrivance. America in Vienna differs from America in Washington only in degree of publicity. The world was represented at Vienna, while the eyes of the world do not see the wickedness in Washington. Americans, indeed, have not begun to see it. It is well to fasten this public iniqnity and National disgrace where it belongs—with the Republican party.

The man Tuark, who had the desperate fight with Constable Lutz, at Lagrange, a short time ago, has been committed in default of $500 bail for trial on a charge of assault with intent to kill. Lutz swore at the preliminary examination that the man asked him if he had a right to arrest him and that he answered in the affirmative. Doubtless Lutz thought he had that right; but probably make sure of it next time by arming himself with a warrant.

A few days ago two men, while wrestling, twelve miles west of brookston, White county, fell simuntaneously. One broke his collar bone and the other dislocated his shoulder blade. They lay there, perfectly helpless for some time, but in the meantime shouted lustily for help. Their cries were at last heard by a passing foot man, who ran to the stable for a horse and started for assistance. Before he had proceeded far the animal took fright and threw him, breaking his leg.

A young lawyer of Blackford county recently moved the dismissal of a suit because in the complaint the word "both" was incorrectly spelled. He maintained that it should have been spelled "boath."

The meanest man in the State has been found at last. He was arrested at Waterloo, a few days ago, for robbiug a boot-black, the local paper does not give his name.

The Auburn Courier

OFFICIAL PAPER of the COUNTY

Local and Miscellaneous.

Locusts are singing.

Corn and oats are scarce.

Spring chickens are scarce.

Montgomery Queen to-day.

Watermellons are too high priced.

New wheat is not being marketed very lively.

The brick work on Shaffer's building is finished to the first story.

Everybody look at Meek's Farm Gate—its worth your time.

Charley Rivers can't find his bills.—Strike a match, Charley.

Go to Bill's barber shop when you want your whiskers colored.

Don't forget Beard's grocery store if you want nice, fresh goods.

The basket meeting at Cosper's last Sabbath was well attended.

The Stave Factory is running day and night.

See advertisement of A. W. Meek's patent farm gate.

The artesian well at Fort Wayne is down over 200 feet.

No fakirs or gambling institutions are allowed to travel with Warner.

Too many lemonade stands on last Monday for the crowd.

Auburn can congratulate itself on having the best graded streets it ever had.

We are doing very handsome visiting cards for the ladies. Send in your orders.

The new drug store of Martin & Son was largely patronized in the way of soda water and cigars.

Mr. Warner stated in the ring last Monday that Mr. Queen's show was a good one, and worthy of patronage.

The bower dance was largely patronized last Monday to judge from the crowd in attendance.

F. D. Ryan, Esq., was suddenly called to Illinos last week on the dangerous illness of a sister.

Although it has been dry and very hot for the last week or two, our physicians do not report much sickness.

A good, heavy shower of rain just at present, would receive a more cordial welcome than Queen's big show.

Hands commenced laying brick on the school house at Feagler's corners, last Monday.

A woman 70 years old loaded a wagon with wheat in sacks of two bushels each in Lagrange county recently.

We are under obligations to Hon. I. D. G. Nelson, member of the Board of the Industrial Exposition, at Indianopolis, for a complimentary.

We have received a new lot of Job Type, Border, etc. Those wanting a good job can be accommodated by calling at this office.

A little child of Mr. Swihart's, about 2 years old, strayed from home on last Monday. Quite a search was had through the crowded streets before it was found.

The crowd in town last Monday was not as large as usual on show days. The show to-day will doubtless bring in a large number.

Lewis Iddings, formerly treasurer of Noble county, took about $11,000 worth of double credit on account of road tax receipts.

Two women had a fight, at Corunna the other week. No kicking was done, but plenty of hair pulling and chin-music and a tin pail crippled badly, etc.

There was a great many drunken people in town last Monday, for a town that has "no saloon." If we ain't mistaken, a little saloon was "almost everywhere present."

A lady living near the Rainier Hotel attempted suicide by taking poison, one day last week. With good medical aid she recoved. Trouble "in the family" led her to attempt the bad deed.

Conrad, at Corunna, did nt haul the five ton of brick across the bridge, because he was stopped by a citizen, who threatened to prosecute him. Four horses was little enough for the load.

Prof. Morse, of the Indiana Conservatory of Music paid us a visit last Monday. He reports the Conservatory in a flourishing condition. There are several ladies in the place, contemplating a course at this institution.

Mr. Hollopeter is pushing the work on the new elevator and will have it done before the first of October. It is the largest building of the kind on the road. The foundation for the the new passenger house has been constructed, and that we be completed in due time.

We have received a copy of the Marshal County premium list of the fair to be held at Plymouth, on Sept. 24th, to 27th. We are favored with a pass from the polite Secretary, D. McDonald, Esq.

We were favored yesterday with a call from Prof. Huffman, who comes among us with many flattering recommendations. He takes charge of our school which commences Sept. 1st.

A note from I. D. G. Nelson, of Fort Wayne, informs us that he will be present at the fair at Waterloo, one or two days. Mr. Nelson takes a large interest in these affairs, and we are glad to know that he will be on hand.

Our popular young friend, Mr. Jas. Burrier, called to see us on his way to Orland, Steuben county, where he will be located the coming year. He has charge of the "North-eastern Indiana Institute." He would be pleased to have his good friends of DeKalb County call and see him.

The editor of the Rochester Spy has sued Reub Williams, of the Indianian, for libel, and asks as a renumeration for his wounded honor, the modest sum of $50,000, which convinces us that said editor is a d—d fool. We are willing to pay 25 cents for the above privilege.

The nerves are on the rack while kidney, bladder and glandular disease, mental and physical debility, gravel, diabetes retention of incontinence of urine, and all chronic maladies of the urino-genital organs, (in either sex) remain in the system. All these ailments promptly subside by an occosional dose of Smolander's Buchu.

Some "smart" young men were running horses last Monday night, about twelve o'clock, down Main-street, and when passing by Seventh street they ran together, up-setting one of the vehicles which contained two ladies, but fortunately they escaped injury. A little more care in this direction is very much needed.

Good News—And new goods at the popular Boot & Shoe store of S. W. Sprott & Son. A new fall stock consisting of the best make of boots, shoes, gaiters, and children's wear, just received. Don't fail to call when you come to town, and examine the new styles and learn the low prices. No shoddy, but warranted as represented.

Remember the dance comes next Thursday evening. Every two weeks again, we are informed. How would it do to have a meeting, of all the members, and elect new officers; releave those who have been so dilligent and attentive in this particular. A report from the treasurer perhaps would'nt be "out of order," and various other things.

They are having a lively time in Waterloo about fire limits. Mr. P. Morell is putting up a frame building, and it being in the fire limits an effort is being made to stop him. It is claimed that one or two of the city dads and others who were instrumental in passing this ordiance, afterwards, totally ignored it by putting up wooden structures within the prescribed limits. If so, we hope Mr. M. will come out ahead.

We took a look at A. W. Meek's patent gate, the other day, and we think it is the best and most simple gate ever brought before the public. Farmers should not fail to examine it if they are in need of anything of this kind. He will remain but one week longer, and every farmer should take advantage of this rare opportunity.

Chas. Mauerhan has fitted up his barber shop in splendid style. He has had a fine cup and show case made, of black walnut, which is realy a handsome piece of work, from Rush & Buchanan's establishment. Other additions have been made and his customers feel like going into a city shop, so nicely arranged is everything. Charley is meeting with deserved success.

The New Firm.—Messrs. Miller & Casebeer, the popular dry goods firm, who succeeded Wood & Williams at Case's old stand, start out with many flattering promises. They are fair, square dealing, keep no shoddy goods, and are clever obliging gentlemen. Their stock of goods, will be largely increased. We would say to our readers to give them the encouragement they deserve, and call and see them when next you come to town.

Two country boys, on last Monday, accompanied by the partners of their arm-came to town, no doubt, to see the elephant. They got feeling happy from the effects of soda and ginger-bread, and decided to go in the show with the words, "who cares for expenses." The pea-nut swindler came first and they bought four small glass for forty cents; then a similar fellow with fancy candy, which the boys selected about 15 cts worth and was charged 75 cent each. They paid it so willingly that we made up our mind, the old had sold his wheat.

Mays, of the Auburn Courier, we understand, enjoyed the late excursion hugely. He has an eye for beauty, a palate for good things and as capacious a room for storage as Reub. Williams or any one else who carried to the water edge. Tom knows his business, and will play four jacks every time.—Angola Times.

That's all correct enough but the last, which we regard as a vile calumniation.—We don't know one jack from another when the spots are covered. Retract or we go for damages.

Capt. White, of the Fruit House, at Ft. Wayne, is driving ahead with his usual energy. The immense stock which he keeps constanly on hand, and the great variety of everything, make it a desirable place to visit.

Hub and Spoke Factory.—A large force of workmen are employed on the work of erecting these buildings, and last Thursday the frame of the main building was put into position, and will be ready for occupancy by the first of September. The fine location which has been selected just west of the lower mill, will make it of easy access to all, and those who intend furnishing timber can now bring it along. The machinery will be here in a few days, so will work commence in good season. About twenty-five hands will be employed.

A number of our farmers seem to be pestered considerably with what they term the "army worm." J. D. Porter, of Smithfield, says they have destroyed five acres of oats for him, a small patch for R. G. Daniels, and nearly ruined 20 acres for Freeman Kelly. Mr. Porter traced them from his oats into his corn, where they tasted of the stocks and leaves slightly, then gave it up, from which point he could trace them no further. They were traveling in a north-westerly direction, and no doubt we will hear from some of the neighbors before long.—Press.

There are no complaints so far as we have heard in this part of the county, on this score.

The Circus.—J. E. Warner's circus and managerie exhibited here last Monday to a fair audience in the afternoon, and a large one at night. He gives a splendid performance and not one that visited this establishment but what was well satisfied The brilliant trapeze act of Leona Dare, has never been equalled; the walking on the ceiling was a genuine feat, and even the scene with the lions was far superior to what we have seen before The fine band furnished charming music. The people of the establishment acted on the pcincipal that to be decent was to be respectable. Mr. Warner has demonstrated that a man can be a gentleman and a circus manager at the same time.

The Next Fair.

Now is the time to get ready for the next fair to be held at Waterloo, October 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th. The success that was realized last fall, induces a still greater effort this year. Let every farmer bring something in the way of stock, grain, fruit, etc., so that the exhibition may be its greatest feature. We certainly need a higher order of stock of every kind in this county, and we think by properly encouraging and patronizing the fair this object can be more successfully achieved. Come together for a season of amusements and compare notes as to the progress made during the last year. A little effort here and there over the county will in the aggregate do wonders in getting up a first-class fair.

Auburn Graded School.

All departments of the Auburn graded schools will open on Monday Sept 1st '73.

Instruction given in all the common branches, higher mathematics, Latin and German. A normal class will be organized in which special instruction will be given in the "Theory and Practice" of teaching thus affording those contemplating teaching an excellent opportunity of thorough preparation. The building has been lately refitted and no means have been spared that would be conducive to the general appearance of the building or the convenience of students. The rates of tutition are as follows:

High School per term,	$5 to 6,
Grammar " "	3 to 4,
Intermediate " "	2 to 3,

For information apply to the Clerk of Board.

Dedication.

We were incorrectly informed last week as to the time of the dedication of the German Lutheran Church, just erected in this place. Instead of it being last Sabbath it is to be the coming Sabbath, Aug. 24th. The congregation of this church is small yet, but they have been enabled by a persistent effort and through the liberal donations of our citizens generally, to erect the snug little church west of the school house in which the dedicatory services will take place as above mentioned We are requested to return the grateful thanks of the membership to all who gave them such valuable assistance. They feel that they are under obligations, and trust that they may be found worthy, and that they may be able to repay the generosity of our citizens. Let our citizens turn out and give them a large attendance at the dedication.

They are developing mineral springs at Albion. The New Era says:

> On the land of John B. Pepple, a little over a mile west of Albion, and a few roads south of the railroad, are two fine springs, both strongly impregnated with minerals. The one nearest the railroad contains a large portion of sulphur and magnesia—the smell of sulphur being strong, and the deposits of magnesia being visible all around upon the soil in the vicinity of the spring. The water is cold and clear as crystal, and looks like the purest of springs—but it gives off a strong odor of gunpowder, which it resembles also in taste. A little to the south-west of this is the other spring, in which is a preponderance of iron. The latter is a large fountain of cold, sparkling water, which is used by Mr. McKinney's corps of laborers, engaged on the cut and fill on the railroad there. So strongly is the water impregnated with iron, that the drinking vessels used by the hands have in a short time become completely electrotyped with a rich, gold en-red substance. The smell and taste of the chalybeats are quite strong in this water.

There is a class of boys in our midst whose fathers and mothers ought to take care of, and find amusement for them at home, rather than allow them to scour the streets in search of fun at unreasonable hours. We all know that "my boy" is always "a good boy," even though everybody else's boy is a bad egg. But we know, also, that the public street is not a good place for anybody's good boy after night. There is not a single excuse for allowing them to run in streets, night after night, and commit riots. These boys will learn all the wickedness necessary in the day time. Their running about the streets, in the small hours of the night, cannot be excused. If a parent has not sufficient moral force to keep his boy at home, he should send the boy to the reform school and make application for himself at the Insane Asylum. The nuisance which these night-hawks create is becoming intolerable. They should be kept at home; they cannot possibly be in worse business there than they are in the public streets. Home influence in the evening may save many a record at the peritentiary.

Richland Township, August 18, 1873.

Mr. Editor.—I feel it my duty to ask o you a small space in your excellent paper In reading the Courier I notice very frequently communications relative to the closing of some good school. Our school house is situated two miles west of Auburn, on T. C. Elson's farm, at the cross roads, easy of access and a beautiful location. Could I speak as well of the house, then we would be contented. Sorry to say that it is not worthy of the name of school house. Lest I weary your patrons I will proceed to speak of our summer school which closed on last Saturdey. It was conducted by Miss Mattie Miller, of Auburn, who taught us a fine school. I had the pleasure of visiting her school and observing closely the manner in which she governed and taught the little folks, which could not help but result in great good. There never has been a school taught in this district that the children learned so fast as they did this summer, and in justice to Miss Miller we will cheerfully recommend her to any district that may need her services. The school closed with a splendid little picnic, attended by the parents of the children. The exercises were highly entertaining. Declarations, poems, music, songs by the school, etc.; all was joy until the teacher gave her little friends the parting hand, when every eye was filled with tears, an assurance that the school was ruled by love, and not by brute force

Industrial Exposition.

The Industrial Exposition at Indianapolis, is to be a grand affair. The buildings afford over 300,000 square feet of of floor, under roof, not reckoning wall and counter space, which in round numbers will make the grand aggregate over four hundred thousand square feet of exhibiting space. This amount, coupled with thirty-six acres of ground nearly covered with stock pens, the amphftheater, sheds for heavy machinery, refreshing stands, &c., furnishes an extent of display surface exceeding that of any Exposition in America. From present appearances, every available foot of this vast amount will be occupied, and additional room be in demand. All necessary improvemets are being made, taste and utility both being considered, without regard to cost.—An ample roadway will be cut off the western limits. The carriage entrances will be on the east and west sides. In the western division spacious sheds will be erected for the accommodation of the horses and carriages of visitors, while the latter are promenading through the various departments of the Exposition. Every thing that experience suggest will be done to provide against all inconveniences that too often arise from the assembling of large crowds of people. The booths for the sale of tickets will be so numerous that no visitor will experience any difficulty in securing admission. The arrangements for the entertainment and comfort of the people will be as perfect as possible, and the Board are determined that nothing shall, be left undone to insure satisfaction, both on the part of exhibitors and visitors.

The Exposition will commence on Sept. 10th, and last thirty days.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

SIX German beer-sellers have been fined $100 and sentenced to six months' imprisonment at Worcester, Mass., for violation of the liquor law.

NEARLY 19,000 cabin passengers left New York for Europe by steamer during May, June and July....Cubans in New York are preparing another large expedition to land arms and ammunition on Cuban soil by the steamer Virginius.

PORTLAND, Me., was visited by a disastrous conflagration on the 9th inst. Three steamers, a large warehouse, an elevator, and several freight sheds were burned. The loss is estimated at $600,000. Five persons were driven from one of the steamers by the flames and drowned.

GOV. AUSTIN, of Minnesota, visited President Grant at Long Branch, last week, to intercede in behalf of the Manitoban prisoners. The Governor is satisfied with the President's determination to have the matter speedily settled....At Bethlehem, N. H., the other day, a six-horse stage team ran away and upset the vehicle, instantly killing two of the passengers and injuring some dozen more....Vice-President Wilson was in Boston last week, much improved in health.

THE success of the proposed Centennial Anniversary in Philadelphia is endangered from the rivalry of contending interests in Pennsylvania. It is stated that the leading Commissionerships are filled by Pennsylvanians who are suspected of working for their own interest, and who have already excited the jealousy of some of their fellow-workers. It is also feared that the scheme has been perfected upon a too comprehensive plan, and that the sum of $15,000,000 will with difficulty be raised....Much excitement has been caused among New York petroleum dealers by the heavy fall in the prices of crude and refined oil. The decline was produced by the discovery of eight new wells in Pennsylvania, which are yielding an average of 500 barrels per day....Three men were drowned at Pittsburgh, a few days ago, by the sinking of a skiff....George N. Saunders, so conspicuous on the Confederate side during the rebellion, died very suddenly in New York, last week, of heart disease. ....Died, at Wilkesbarre, Pa., on the 12th inst., Mrs. S. E. Yost, aged 105. She was a native of Germany, and had smoked and drank beer for the past century....President Grant was the guest of Speaker Blaine during his visit to Augusta, Me....Anna Dickinson denies the story that she is going on the stage as an actress, or as ever having thought of such a thing.

PORTIONS of New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey were visited by a destructive rain-storm on the 12th inst. Many miles of railroad track were washed away, or so covered with land-slides or floods as to be almost impassable. Pittsburgh reports that so violent a rainfall has never before occurred there, and throughout the country bridges, culverts, dams and roadways have been destroyed, and a great deal of private property devastated.

The West.

THE population of Iowa, according to the census just taken, is 1,249,418. In the assessment of cities Dubuque ranks first in amount, Des Moines second, Burlington third and Davenport fourth.

THREE men—Thomas Connerton and Thomas and Pat Feeney, brothers—were suffocated by foul air in a well, at Burlington, Wis., last week. Connerton descended first, and, falling to the bottom dead, Thomas Feeney went to his assistance, followed by his brother, when both suffered the same fate.... A band of 150 Pawnee Indians were recently attacked by 1,000 Sioux warriors. The former were overpowered and 100 of them slaughtered. The fight occurred near the Republican river....Dubuque, Iowa, was visited, the other day, by a terrific rain-storm. The fall measured four inches in two hours, and the water waist deep in some of the streets. The damage in the city will amount to $15,000 or $20,000....The Chicago Tribune says: "The reports from all sections of the Northwest regarding the crops indicate a most bountiful harvest. In Minnesota and Wisconsin the yield is literally immense. The Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce are already alarmed about their capacity to store the 40,000,000 bushels of surplus grain they calculate upon seeking a market."....A suit to recover illegal freight charges paid the Milwaukee and St. Paul road has been begun by a firm of grain-shippers in Minnesota. They claim that the company has charged them eight and one-half cents a bushel more than is allowed by the law, and has thereby extorted from them $50,000, which they mean to get back....The new Chicago directory contains 133,043 names.

IT was announced, a few days ago, that John W. Young, the Western money-order forger, had been arrested at Boston and taken to Chicago. The statement was partly true. The culprit was arrested in Boston by a Special Agent of the Postoffice Department, but while en route for the West jumped from the train, near Edgarton, Ohio, and made good his escape....The recent convention of American dentists at Put-in-Bay, Ohio, was the largest gathering of tooth-pullers ever held.

A TELEGRAM from Fort Garry, Manitoba, says: "In the decoration of the court-house for a bazar, in a spirit of courtesy to the American citizens the Stars and Stripes were suspended side by side with the British flag. Upon the entrance of Attorney-General Clarke, beholding the terrible disgrace of the emblem of his adoration, in virtuous indignation he ordered the ladies in charge to 'haul down that flag.' No one obeyed his command, and he retired with his feathers drooping."....Minneapolis, Minn., has been visited by a destructive conflagration. The total loss is about $100,000, with light insurance....Col. J. L. D. Morrison, of Illinois, has entered suit in the United States Court at St. Louis for the recovery of some 4,000 acres of land in St. Louis county....The notorious "Lord" Gordon, for whose attempted abduction several American citizens now languish in a Manitoban jail, suddenly left Fort Garry between two days, leaving his attorney and other creditors to mourn his departure. It is said he has gone to the Rocky Mountains.

HENRY PAGE, recently an inmate of the St. Joseph (Mo.) Poor-House, has fallen heir to $50,000 worth of real estate in the suburbs of Indianapolis.

IT is reported that cholera has broken out in a terrible form in Williamson county, Ill., on the Illinois Central railroad....A man believed to be old man Bender, the Kansas butcher, passed through Dubuque the other day.

The South.

THE Cairo and Fulton railroad is completed to within a few miles of Red river....The cholera has reappeared at Chattanooga, Tenn.

DR. R. T. DUNN, a Deputy United States Marshal, was assassinated by some person unknown, at Corinth, Miss., a few days ago. He was shot through the head, while asleep.... The press and people of Western Kentucky are said to be almost unanimously opposed to the new State movement....From Warren county, Ky., is reported a marriage between a boy aged 13 and a girl aged 11.

THE political troubles between the rival factions of the Cherokee Nation threaten to culminate in bloodshed. The full-blood Indians threaten the lives of Ross, Jones, Boudinot, and other leaders of the Progressive party. There is no question but anarchy and crime is largely on the increase, and many of the best men in the locality begin to believe that the only safety lies in a strong territorial form of government under the protection of the United States....A band of Indians recently appeared near old Camp Colorado, Western Texas, and shot and stabbed a Mrs. Williams, and also shot a little girl of Mrs. Williams' and mashed her head against a door-post and threw her body into the fire. They then entered the house and shot a girl eight years old, and carried her away with them. Mrs. Williams, notwithstanding her two wounds, crawled into the house, pulled her little child out of the fire, rolled her in a wet blanket, and laid her on a bed. Mrs. Williams' husband soon after returned, to whom she related the circumstances, and then died, but the infant, whose head was mashed almost to a jelly, was still alive when last heard from, and would probably recover. Other bands of savages are roaming through the country, and the settlers are arming for defense....Farmers' Granges are being rapidly organized in Virginia.

A TERRIBLE tragedy was enacted last week in Lauderdale county, Tenn. A man named Austin went home drunk and began to abuse his wife. His son Charlie, aged 18, coming in, he turned upon the boy and commenced abusing him, and, in answer to a rough demand, the boy returned a sharp answer, which so enraged Austin that he drew a revolver and snapped three caps at his son, who, seeing his danger, snatched a shot-gun from the rack and fired upon his father, killing him almost instantly.

A MOST extraordinary jewelry robbery is reported from St. Louis. About two months ago John Schuler and Clarence Swayne left the employ of Eugene Jaccard & Co., the oldest jewelry firm in the city, and opened a wholesale jewelry store immediately opposite their late employers. Jaccard & Co. shortly after missed large quantities of goods, and a detective was employed to look into the matter, who soon found some $4,000 worth of jewelry in a pawnbroker's shop, which was identified by Jaccard & Co. as some of the stolen property. The members of the new firm were arrested and confessed their guilt.

Washington.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: It is manifest that the officially-published denials regarding the health of Vice-President Wilson are of a diplomatic character. There is the best authority for the statement that his physicians contemplate the application of a seton in the base of the brain, as the only possible cure for his disease; and it is also certain that his most intimate friends have the gravest apprehensions of the result....It is reported that the German Confederation has again informally requested the State Department that in the selections of Consuls and diplomatic officers to represent the United States in Germany, naturalized citizens from that country should not be taken.

MEMORIALS for articles of impeachment against three United States Judges are lodged in the House of Representatives. These Judges are Delahay, of Kansas; Sherman, of Ohio; and Durell, of Louisiana....There are intimations (says a Washington telegram) that the Commission appointed to audit the claims in favor of Great Britain, as a counterpart to the Geneva award, will report a sum scarcely less in amount than the Geneva award itself. The labors of the Commission must be determined by Oct. 1 next....In view of the disorganized condition of affairs in Spain, our European naval squadron is being increased, and a number of vessels have been ordered to Spanish ports.....The following Executive order has been issued: "WASHINGTON, Aug. 5.—The Civil Service Board, at its session at Washington, which terminated June 4, 1873, recommended certain further rules to be prescribed by the President for the government of the civil service of the United States. These rules as published are approved, and their provisions will be enforced as rapidly as proper arrangements can be made. U. S. GRANT."

THE Agricultural Department reports that the probable wheat yield for 1873 will be 220,000,000 bushels. The largest absolute falling off in corn is in Illinois, where there is a reduction of 15 per cent. The Department reports that the flax culture is greatly on the increase in Iowa....Another question has arisen concerning the Virginius, which may damage her status materially. It is said that she is really the property of a South American Republic, which bought her two years ago. Should this prove to be true, she not only has forfeited all right to our protection, but will be seized by our cruisers wherever found, and condemned for having fraudulently claimed safe conduct out of Aspinwall harbor on the ground that she was an American vessel.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says: The Treasury Department has private advices that United States bonds are held in special favor in the London market; that the 5-20s are now as scarce there as they are here, and that our general securities are rapidly displacing the speculative securities of the unstable Governments of Europe and South America....The report of the commission appointed to investigate the charges against Gen. Van Buren and his associate commissioners of the American department at the Vienna Exposition, has been received at Washington. In substance, it finds the accused guilty on all the counts of the indictment against them. It convicts Gen. Van Buren of exacting money himself, of permitting corrupt practices on the part of his subordinates, and of general mismanagement to the serious detriment of the department. The man Mayer is exposed as as shameless confidence operator, and altogether there is a sickening recital of venality and corruption. ...A Washington telegram of the 13th inst. says: The State Department continues to maintain the position that it is impotent in any way to interfere in the Manitoba affair, except in the way of suggestions, just as the Canadian Government authorities are impotent to dictate to the judiciary of Manitoba. However, our Government will endeavor to use, and is using, its strongest influence to secure the liberation of the prisoners. In this endeavor the State Department, it is stated, is assisted by Sir Edward Thornton, the British Minister, who is very desirous to avoid any international complications. Gov. Austin represents the feeling of the people of Minnesota to be greatly excited, and says that it will require but little encouragement from the press and the people to induce the residents of the border to commit an overt act of war.

THE recent redemptions of United States gold coin at the mints has shown that the loss by abrasion is very great. By a law of Congress this loss falls upon the last holder, whether the loss results from his usage of the coin or is the consequence of dishonesty. The complaints have been so great that Dr. Linderman, the Director of the Mint, will, it is said, recommend to the next Congress that the Government shall bear whatever loss there may be from the use of coin, and that defaced pieces, where there is no evidence of fraud, shall be redeemed by the Government at the face value.

VICTOR HUGO is reported to be dying.... Two interviews are reported to have taken place at Vienna between the Count de Chambord and the Count de Paris; and it is stated that the latter has virtually recognized the former's superior claims to the throne of France....An official letter to the State Department at Washington, dated Belluno, Italy, says: "On the evening of June 29, a terrible earthquake occurred here, carrying death to many and consternation to all. The dead are counted by tens and the material injury done by millions. Every fourth or fifth building is made uninhabitable. The principal monuments are overthrown or seriously injured. Everywhere the cry of anguish is raised, and seeks for prompt and effectual relief."....The Conservatives have achieved another victory in the East Staffordshire (England) District, Mr. Alsop having been returned to the House of Commons by 900 majority.... Several important changes have taken place in the British Cabinet. The Marquis of Ripon, and Messrs. Childers and Baxter have resigned. Gladstone, in addition to the Premiership, assumes the Chancellorship of the Exchequer in lieu of Lowe, who assumes the Home Office. Bruce is to be made a peer, and will succeed Lord Ripon as President of the Council. Bonham Carter succeeds Baxter as Joint Secretary of the Treasury. Arthur Peel becomes the Liberal whip. John Bright joins the Cabinet as Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster....Further particulars of the farmers' rebellion in Japan are furnished by mail. Ten thousand of them attacked the Government castle at Fukuoka, killed six officials and burned the buildings. Four other officials committed suicide when they saw the rebels overpowering them. The telegraph wires were cut, and all the roads barricaded. The houses of all the farmers who would not join the insurrection were burned, and the dwellings of rich men and the banks robbed. The insurgents are said to number at least 150,000. The cause of the revolt is that the Government has required the taxes of the farmers to be paid in money instead of produce, together with the probable failure of the rice crop.....A London dispatch says: The report that Mr. Motley's illness was the result of an apoplectic stroke is incorrect. He was suffering from a very severe attack of neuralgia, but is now much better and expects soon to be completely restored....It is denied that Prince Arthur is betrothed to Princess Thyria, of Denmark.

THE passage of the bill by the Spanish Cortes for the emancipation of slavery in Porto Rico is said to have been effected through the instrumentality of Minister Sickles. It is even understood that it was plainly intimated in the Cortes that, unless Spain now, in this hour of her extremity, should keep her faith with the United States, it might be considered that the day of free Cuba has arrived. So says a well-informed Washington correspondent....Many strangers are leaving Vienna, and the number of visitors to the Exposition decreases daily.

THE monarchical movement in France which hedges about the Count de Chamord is persistently kept up by the Legitimists. They have prepared a sort of governmental contract, and, if he will agree to be bound by it, they will agree to make him King of France. If he does not accept their terms, their influence will be given in favor of the Republic.... A Madrid special to the New York Herald says: Further complications have arisen from the interference of the Prussian frigate in Spanish affairs. Eight hundred Spanish sailors, who were sent by the Government from Alicante to Escambrata to take possession of the iron-clads Vittana and Alamanca, were refused possession by Capt. Werner on the ground that there was no authority from Berlin to deliver them up. The sailors were obliged to remain in a position where they were menaced and at the mercy of the insurgents. Thereupon Werner declared the sailors under his protection, as well as the steamer that brought them. The insurgents declared that the steamer must leave Escambrata, or they would open fire upon her without regard to the Prussians. Thus, by small degrees, Werner's first blunder leads him further in the quarrel....The Republicans of Spain have almost entire possession of the Province of Navarre....The report is current at Paris that Metz will be restored to France through the influence of Russia.

BEN BUTLER has written an elaborate and aggressive defense of the salary bill. THE Canadian Parliament assembled at Ottawa on the 14th inst., but was immediately prorogued by Lord Dufferin. In doing so, he announced that a Royal Commission would be appointed to investigate the Pacific railway scandal, and that Parliament would be called upon at an early day to consider its report. The scene in the House of Commons when that body was called to the Senate Chamber for prorogation was one of the most violent disorder. The messenger of the Government was greeted with derisive groans and jeers, and 100 of the 130 members present refused to respect the summons....Hereafter no more spirituous liquors will be allowed to be introduced into the Indian countries without an order from the War Department at Washington....Correspondence of the Churchman intimates that persons who are anticipating the creation of an American Cardinal are to be disappointed. ANOTHER FRIGHTFUL DISASTER.

Burning of a Steamer on the Potomac —Over Forty Passengers Jump Overboard and are Drowned.

The steamer Wawasset, of Washington, with 150 passengers on board, was burned off Acquia Creek, Va., on the 8th inst. Doc Kenny, the bar-keeper of the boat, who arrived in Washington the same evening, furnished the reporter of the Associated Press with the following particulars of the disaster: Just before reaching Chatterton's Landing, on the Virginia side of the Potomac, about five miles below Acquia Creek, and after the whistle of the boat had been blown as a signal of her approach to that landing, the steamer at that time being about a third of a mile from the shore, fire was discovered in the hold, and the hose was attached immediately, but before the men could reach it the conflagration became general, as the fire had been burning for some time. The fire had been smouldering, it is supposed, for some hours, and, upon opening the hatches, it burst forth with great fury, driving away the men from the hold and completely baffling all attempts to subdue it. In an instant great confusion prevailed on the vessel, the passengers becoming panic-stricken and frantic with fear, very few having presence of mind sufficient to take care of themselves. The steamer was, without a moment's delay, headed for the shore on the Virginia side, and in a few minutes run aground about 200 yards from the Virginia side. At this time the flames had spread with fearful rapidity, and in the excitement many jumped overboard. Several of them jumped into the water before the steamer struck bottom. She was provided with but two small boats, and in the frenzy of the moment one of these boats was thrown overboard by the passengers, who, uncontrolled, were trying to launch her.

Capt. Wood, of the ill-fated steamer, and his assistants, are said to have used every effort to control the passengers, but without avail, and, but for the disobedience of his orders, many who were lost might have been saved. The vessel was well provided with life-preservers, but in the panic it seems that none of the passengers secured them, and this fact also added to the lamentable loss of life.

Over forty passengers were drowned. Capt. Wood was the last man to leave the vessel, and the pilot, Mr. Boswell, was surrounded by flames before he left the pilot-box, which was not until after he had run the steamer aground. The flames spread with such rapidity that the tiller-ropes were on fire before the vessel struck ground.

All those lost were, it is supposed, drowned, having jumped overboard to escape the flames.

The fire was first discovered about twenty minutes before 11 o'clock, and Kenny states that in less than ten minutes the vessel was enveloped in flames, and now lies where it was run aground, burned to the water's edge.

About one-half the passengers on the Wawasset were women and children, many of whom were en route to country places along the Potomac to spend a short time with their friends.

The Wawasset was a side-wheel steamer, about 350 tons, and was engaged in running between Washington and the landings along the Potomac. She was insured for $28,000.

Miss McPherson, a passenger, describes the scene of the burning boat as most terrible to witness. The flames burst out all around and swept aft, driving women and children over into the water. She saw four little children hanging on by their hands to the burning steamer, and one after the other drop into the water, the flames driving them off. The colored people were perfectly wild, and no remonstrances on the part of the officers were heeded. They jumped into the boat, piling it full, and declared that it was the colored people's boat, refusing all whites admission. When it went down all were dumped into the water together, and many others followed, being pushed overboard.

The flames burst into the main-deck, setting fire to the clothing of women and children who were hoping for some relief, but no one could pass the gangway for the flames.

One of the worst features among the shore scenes was the disposition among both white and colored stragglers to plunder and rob the dead.

There is no longer any doubt that the steamer was burned because the company overloaded the vessel and provided no means of escape for the passengers, and that the owners must assume the direct and terrible responsibility of the fearful slaughter which attended their neglect.

A Gallant Act by the President—A Lady Rescued from Death.

A New York dispatch of the 8th says: At Long Branch, on yesterday, a lady was rescued from danger of death by the coolness, intrepidity and gallantry of President Grant. Miss Martin, accompanied by two gentlemen, her brother and a friend, in a phaeton, were riding on Cedar avenue, in the vicinity of the grounds of Mr. John Hoey. The horses in some way became frightened and unmanageable, and dashed off at a furious speed. The noise attracted the attention of the President, who had just made a call on Mr. Hoey. Mr. Hoey started across lots, and the President pushed his horses at full speed by the road. He reached the scene of the disaster in time to seize the horses and arrest them, with the assistance of Mr. Hoey, and to rescue the lady from the peril she was in, surrounded by the debris of the demolished vehicle, and excited and unmanageable horses. The President took the lady in his arms and placed her in his carriage, and conveyed her to the residence of Mr. Hoey, where she was kindly cared for by the lady of the house. The gentlemen were thrown from the conveyance and received more or less bruises. The lady having recovered from her fright, was conveyed to her residence. This instance is only one of many where the President has furnished evidence of his gallantry and intrepidity.

Two Men Precipitated 253 Feet to the Bottom of a Coal Shaft.

Two young men, named Nelson Whitmarch and Patrick Congan, employed in a coal shaft at LaSalle, were precipitated from the top to the bottom of the shaft last Friday. They had stepped upon the cage to descend, after having the signal all right, when the drum around which the cable runs, and which at the time was somehow disconnected from the other machinery, began to rapidly revolve, and they knew instantly that they were riding to a perhaps most horrible death. They struck the bottom, a distance of 253 feet, and breaking through the three-inch planking, were plunged into the sump, which contained at the time about ten feet of water. Wonderful to relate, neither of them were killed, but coming to the surface they clambered up on the boards. The car, which was ascending at the same time they were going down, came toward the surface with awful momentum, and tore through the forks and wrecked nearly everything in the immediate vicinity. Assistance was immediately sent below, and the injured men brought to the surface, where a vast crowd of people had already assembled. Strange as it may appear, it was found that though both the men were terribly bruised, no bones were broken, and at last accounts they were doing well and in a fair way to recover.—Peoria (Ill.) Transcript.

THE treatment of the five hundred condemned Communists transported in the Orne from Brest to New Caledonia, revives the memories of the middle passage in slave-trading days. While the Orne lay in the port of Melbourne, two letters, one in French and the other in broken English, which had been written by the prisoners, reached the office of the Melbourne Argus. From them it appears that the Orne had on board no less than three hundred cases of scurvy. The prisoners had nothing else to exist on save a ship's allowence of buiscuit, a very little salt beef and occasionally a few peas. The design of the French commander seems to have been to destroy the miserable men in his charge by slow murder, and probably if all had perished he would not be reprimanded by the Versailles authorities.

The Kansas Fraud Exploded.

When S. C. Pomeroy, the illustrious champion of temperance and ardent advocate of a middle-aged men's Christian Association, had his expectations of reelection to the Senate suddenly dashed by the production in open day, and before the assembled Legislature, of the very money with which he had attempted to bribe a member of that body, he endeavored to break the force of that crushing exposure by the usual trickery of a convicted knave. At first he completely broke down, gave way to grief, and lost his mind. But a few days of seclusion and care restored him sufficiently to patch up a fabricated defense, and then he started back to Washington to resume his seat in the Senate and to demand the aid of confederates in that chamber with whom he had long been associated in various schemes of plunder.

The plan of Pomeroy and his friends was to assail the straightforward testimony of A. M. Yorke, so as to create confusion in the public mind by pretended new revelations, and thus allow him to escape the penalty of his corrupt conduct. When the Senate appointed a committee of investigation, suborned witnesses were brought to Washington to carry out this conspiracy and to uphold it by barefaced perjury. It will be remembered that Yorke delivered to the Speaker of the Legislature of Kansas $7,000, which he had received directly from the hands of Pomeroy as a consideration for his vote and influence. That stubborn fact stood in the way of all explanation, but the conspirators sought to overcome it, even at the hazard of still further infamy.

Pomeroy swore deliberately that the $7,000 was given to Yorke to be delivered to a certain John Q. Page, one of his well-known strikers, for the purpose of starting a bank at Independence, although Page at that very time was at Topeka aiding his re-election, and in hourly communication with him! And Page not only sustained this audacious statement, but he was made to commence a suit in Washington against Yorke for the recovery of this money, in which he was aided by all the influence of the Administration, for no other purpose than to harass him with vexatious litigation and costs among strangers. Everybody knew at the time that the whole proceeding was a base and desperate fraud, in which the forms of law were abused to persecute and injure an innocent man for exposing a venal scamp.

Page has now abandoned the suit against Yorke and paid all the costs attending it, thus virtually confessing that it never had the least foundation, and was only fabricated for a special purpose. That was transparent from the moment the lame and impotent attempt to excuse the bribery was made by Pomeroy, when with unblushing effrontery he rose in the Senate and denied every charge against him. Still it served as a pretext for the Administration majority of the committee to save him from expulsion. They brought in the report on the 3d of March, when the term of Pomeroy was rapidly drawing to a close, and the urgent pressure of public business precluded any fair consideration of the subject. That committee was headed by Mr. Frelinghuysen, an orthodox churchman, and flanked by Mr. Buckingham, who claims to be a Puritan of Puritans, and Mr. Alcorn, of Mississippi, who practices the philosophy of all things to all men. The Democrats were Mr. Thurman and Mr. Vickers; but they were powerless, although Mr. Thurman expressed himself very decidedly on the subject. The Republican members reported as follows:

"The committee, bearing in mind while examining the evidence that the whole transaction, whatever view may be taken of it, is the result of a concerted plot to defeat Mr. Pomeroy, and remembering that the burden of proof is on the party making the accusation, have come to the conclusion that Mr. Yorke has not sustained his charge by sufficient proof, contradicted as it is by the evidence of Mr. Page and Mr. Pomeroy."

This was the verdict of men who aspire to high moral positions, who are zealous externally in the church, and who are held up as examples worthy of imitation. It was rendered in defiance of an almost unanimous public opinion, and against the most conclusive proofs of Pomeroy's guilt. Mr. Frelinghuysen and Mr. Buckingham could discover "a concerted plot to defeat Mr. Pomeroy," but they could find nothing to censure in his attempted bribery of Yorke and others, nor any plot to buy his way again into the Senate by money notoriously acquired through the prostitution of that place.

When Morton, Cameron, and others of that class who do not affect religion, combined with all their power to prevent Caldwell from being expelled on a similar charge, and did frustrate action by permitting him to resign, their course was understood and almost expected. They knew how it was themselves. So will it be when they resist any investigation of Patterson, of South Carolina, or arrange to whitewash him. But the case is very different with Frelinghuysen, Buckingham, and the like, when they lend themselves to protect iniquity and to screen the most glaring venality. The effect is to destroy all confidence in the body where party is concerned, and to reduce the whole Republican column to the same low level when crime is to be condoned.—New York Sun.

A Great Moral Lesson Happily Taught.

The rookery in Water street once famous as John Allen's dance house, is now used as a mission. The former bar-room is a chapel, in which services are held every Sunday. Where the bar once stood there is a preacher's desk. The floor that was once pressed by dancing feet is now occupied by seats. The walls have been neatly papered, and upon them are hung a number of illustrated religious notices, calculated to teach morality and decency to the people who are collected at the services. Prominently displayed is this group:

GRANTISM in Mississippi seems to have sunk very low. Coates, a colored Alderman of Vicksburg, has been detected in receiving and selling stolen goods. The President of the Board of Supervisors of Washington county has been convicted of felony, and is now in the penitentiary. Vanhook, Clerk of the Chancery Court of Lowndes county, is in prison on a charge of feloniously mutilating the records of his court, and has been convicted by two juries of gross neglect of official duty. Frank McKanna, recently appointed Superintendent of Education for Lafayette county, is charged with not being a bona fide citizen of the county, and with having been accessory to the forging of his own credentials as delegate to a Grant Convention. And with every official newspaper in the State filled with sheriffs' advertisements, the Republicans propose to put on the taxpayers the payment of the Union and Planters' bank bonds, aggregating, with the interest, thirty millions of dollars. It is not strange that Mississippians are willing to have their State divided.

IT is not surprising that the Kellogg Government of Louisiana should develop frauds as rapidly as they can be chronicled. A few days ago, Kellogg authorized a speculation in State funds for the purpose of buying up Treasury warrants as cheaply as competition and the poverty of the people would admit. A few days prior to that, there was information of a huge gas monopoly, which Kellogg was controlling by virtue of the authority which enables him to keep a bill in his pocket as long as it suits his convenience, and sign it when it suits his interest. Now there is information of a huge steal under Kellogg's sanction, by which 2,500 acres of land have been sold at 25 cents an acre as swamp lands, which really include some of the most valuable suburban property in the neighborhood of New Orleans. This property is said to be worth several millions of dollars, and was sold by legislative enactment for $700 or $800. A Government like Kellogg's, which rests upon the support of United States troops, and has no conception of responsibility beyond that of keeping itself in power in the same way which it attained power, cannot help but be corrupt. The temptation would be a great one for men inclined to be honest; the opportunity is simple for those who are troubled with no good intentions. In the meantime, there seems to be nothing for the people of Louisiana to do but to submit to systematic and voracious plundering.—Chicago Tribune.

THE court organ at New York, in its description of the sylvan festivities attending the visit of Gen. Grant to the Catskill Mountains the other day, says that at one point, "The children, having culled wild flowers and beautiful shrubs, insisted upon decorating the President, who, seated on a rocky projection, gravely submitted." And as he lay there, his ruby countenance shining in the sun, his head bound about with wreaths, his round and shapely limbs decorated with forest flowers, and the woodland nymphs shouting around him, how like his own god Bacchus he must have looked!

WHEN President Grant left Overlook Mountain, last week, he made a speech which, although not quite up to his oratorical average, contains many fine points. It was as follows: "Ladies and gentlemen of Kingston: I have been in your county two days, and I have found them most enjoyable here and at Overlook Mountain. I am very much fatigued, and want to retire, as I shall leave to take the early boat for New York in the morning."

Stammering.

One who was a stammerer for years writes:

"No stammering person ever found any difficulty in singing. The reason of this is that by observing the measure of the music, by keeping time, the organs of speech are kept in such position that enunciation is easy. Apply the same rule to reading or speech, and the same result will follow. Let the stammerer take a sentence—say this one, Leander swam the Hellespont. Pronounce it by syllables. Scan it, keeping time with the finger if necessary, letting each syllable occupy the same time, thus—Le-an-der-swam-the-Hel-les-pont, and he will not stammer. Let him pronounce slowly at first, then faster, but still keeping time, keeping time with words instead of syllables, and he will be surprised to find that, by a very little practice, he will read without stammering, and nearly as rapidly as persons ordinarily talk or read. Then practice this in reading and conversation untill the habit is broken up. Perseverance is all that is necessary to perform a perfect cure."

Growth of Catholicism

The London Echo remarks that it is a singular fact that in the United States, where the Roman Catholic Church has simply had a fair field, and no favor, that stupendous religious organization has developed itself with unusual rapidity and success. Eighty-four years ago there were 25,000 Roman Catholics in the United States; there are now 9,600,000. There was one bishopric; there are now 54, besides 6 vicarates apostolic and 4 abbots; there were 21 priests, there are now 4,890; there were 3 or 4 chapels, there are now 47 cathedrals, 4,250 churches, and 1,754 chapels and stations. There are now also 138 monasteries of men and 383 convents of women, 1,557 academies and schools, 283 charitable institutions, and 112 seminaries and colleges, in which, among other students, 848 young men are studying for the priesthood. Within the last 95 years the population of the country has increased 14.33 per cent., but the Roman Catholic population has, during the same period, increased nearly 39,000 per cent., and the proportion of Catholics to the rest of the population (9,600,000 to 39,000,000) is almost as one to four.

THE American students at the German University are noted as the most skillful and formidable duelists of any nationality. Some of them prefer pistols, and make funerals which are not in favor at any of those seats of learning.

Useful Suggestions.

NOSE-BLEEDING.—The best remedy for bleeding at the nose, as given by Dr. Gleason in one of his lectures, is a vigorous motion of the jaws, as if in the act of mastication. In the case of a child a wad of paper should be placed in its mouth and the child instructed to chew it hard. Here is another remedy, which we find in one of our exchanges: To stop bleeding at the nose, plug the nostrils with the scrapings from a fur hat, or with lint dipped in a strong solution of alum, or tannin, or Mousel's persalt of iron, one part to ten parts of water.

TO MAKE WALL PAPER STICK.—Make a paste of flour same as you do of starch—do not let it boil. When cold apply to the paper with a brush, not having it so thick but that it will spread evenly over the surface, or so thin as to wet the paper through. Cheap paper I find not not so cheap at last as a little better paper. The above suggestions I have from an old experienced paper-hanger, and I found them very good this spring, as in all my papering, (which I have put on myself), not an inch has come off nor is a crack to be seen.

MISS J. S. WALKER.

A USEFUL PASTE.—The following is a Turkish recipe for a cement to fasten diamonds and other precious stones to metallic surfaces, and said to unite surfaces of polished steel: Dissolve five or six bits (tears) of gum mastic in just enough spirits of wine to render the gum liquid. In a second vessel dissolve sufficient isinglass (previously softened in water) to make a two-ounce vial of strong glue, and add two bits of gum ammoniac, which must be rubbed until dissolved. Mix the whole with heat, and, when wanted for use, place the vial in boiling water.

BLACK INK.—A good and durable black ink may be made by the following directions: To two pints of water add three ounces of dark-colored, rough-skinned Aleppo galls, in gross powder, and of rasped logwood, green vitrol, and gum arabic each one ounce. Put in a convenient vessel, and shake four or five times a day for ten or twelve days.

A REMEDY FOR TOOTHACHE.—Alcohol of 32 degrees, one ounce; camphor, four grains; opium in powder, twenty grains; oil of cloves, eighty drops. The effectiveness of this lotion will be seen at a glance, and no other authority for its use will be wanted than that of the learned and excellent physician who gave its name.

DYSPEPSIA CURE.—Dr. Dio Lewis gives the following cure for dyspepsia: "Have a right good talk, with an anecdote or two, and a half dozen hearty laughs with each meal. This eating alone at a restaurant, and shoveling in the provender in solemn silence will give dyspepsia to an ostrich, and create a feeling of despondency in the stomach of a quartz mill."

CONCERNING SLEEP.—Sleeping after dinner is a bad practice, and ten minutes before dinner is worth more than an hour after. It rests and refreshes, and prepares the system for vigorous digestion. If sleep be taken after dinner, it should be in the sitting posture, as the horizontal position is unfavorable to healthy digestion. Let those who need rest and sleep during the day take it before dinner instead of after, and they will soon find that they will feel better, and that the digestion will be improved thereby.

TO CEMENT LEATHER TO METAL.—Digest one part by weight of coarsely ground nut-galls in eight parts of distilled water for six hours, and strain through linen cloth. At the same time dissolve one part of glue in eight parts of water, and allow it to stand twenty-four hours. It is applied as follows: Brush over the leather with the warm nut gall solution, and apply the glue to the warmed metal and press the metal hard upon it until it is dry. The leather generally adheres so firmly that it will tear before it can be removed.

A CUP OF TEA.—Very few people who sit down to their comfortable cup of tea think that one hundred years ago in some part of the world, as in Ireland, to drink a cup of tea was a crime punishable by imprisonment, or that in New England tea was once cooked and set upon the table as "greens." Tea is a very important political as well as social article, and no American can ever forget that it was the great final cause which led to the revolution. It is two hundred years since the first introduction of tea in England, and one hundred and fifty years since it came into use in England.

Remarkable Superstition.

A certain class of people seem to live only that they may be duped by others. Some years ago there was a traveling doctor who claimed that the merit of all the wonderful works which he did lay in his hands, or, to speak more exactly, on them. He hadn't washed his hands for twenty-two years, and the thumb of his right hand had not been washed for twenty-seven years! They were covered with a coating as thick as heavy beaver cloth; while that neglected right thumb could not be bent. Herein lay the secret. The quack stirred all his medicines with those hands, and the nostrums for the cure of the most difficult cases were mixed with that right hand thumb. If he washed, all virtue would go out of his hands, he affirmed. The marvel of the matter is not so much that a man could so delude himself as to believe that such a thing could be true, but that he should do a large and prosperous business, and number among his patrons many intelligent people!

Saratoga Life.

I willingly own, says a Saratoga correspondent, that I never saw such a place as this. Everyone is out of doors from morning until night—the ladies without bonnets, and the greater part of the men with bare heads. Broadway, from the Clarendon to the Union, seems like a vast drawing-room, where fair women, in gossamer apparel of all hues, are flitting backwards and forwards like rose leaves scattered in the wind. Saratoga is the most royal spot for loafing that can be possibly conceived. Concerts morning and evening on the balconies of the different hotels by Gilmore's, Beinstein's, and Lander's bands delight the ear and keep one in a dreamy trance as the hours fly away to the measure of divine strains. One can do little but be enchanted with this life. If any one can find time to wind his watch, he can do more than your humble servant. The life of Saratoga centers about the hotels and springs. There are few but fine residences; all anyone cares for here is to see and be seen.

A Cast-Iron Government and an Indifferent People.

[Cologne Cor. Chicago Tribune.]

The German Empire is an anomaly. It consists of a civilized people and a cast-iron Government. The latter has a giant's strength, and is tyrannous enough to use it like a giant. If a German pantheist should wish to adduce a familiar example of an all-prevading power, he need only name the German State.

It shows itself first and foremost in the army and navy. In time of peace, out of a population of 41,000,000, 405,000 men, nearly all of them between 20 and 23 years of age, are withdrawn from productive labor, and rigorously drilled in the science of slaughter. Every citizen, unless he belongs to one of two unfortunate classes, must sacrifice to the State the first three years of his manhood entire, and then be liable to service, in case of war, to nine years more. The two fortunate classes are the sick, who are wholly exempt, and the volunteers. These latter serve only one year and they have special privileges; and, unless punished during the year for neglect of duty, they become officers in the event of a war during the next nine years. It seems, at first sight, as if everybody would volunteer; but there are difficulties. A man must offer himself before he is 20; must be then prepared to pass an examination so rigorous that many boys (so the head of a great German school says) ruin their health in "cramming" for it; and must, if accepted, himself pay for his board and lodging, his clothing and accoutrements. This entails a cost of from 300 to 500 thalers (a thaler is 85 cents in currency). Consequently, only young men who are both rich and well-educated can volunteer, and the ranks of the three years' conscripts are kept full. The only distinction of uniform between the two classes is a slender green and white cord on volunteer shoulders. The discipline of the army is severe. The officers are under more rigid control, in some ways, than the privates. Thus, an officer cannot carry the slightest bundle, not even a lady's shawl or fan. He cannot move in any society except the highest. He cannot marry unless his intended wife and his own, between them, have at least 14,000 thalers' worth of property. He is, moreover, sent to church, like a school-boy, at stated intervals. The cost of this army of 450,000 men is something enormous. What Germany would pay for her war-force of 1,313,000, I have no means of knowing; but the Almanach de Gotha for 1873 gives the figures in time of peace: For the year 1872, the total expenses of the Empire were 118,840,489 thalers. Of this sum, the military and naval expenses (including a trifle over 12,300,000 for pensions) absorbed 112,300,992 thalers. And this in time of peace! This enormous money-cost is, however, but one item in the sum total. It is impossible to estimate the loss of national wealth caused by the withdrawal of so many thousands of young men from productive industry, and still more impossible to weigh the harm to Germany and the world which may result from training a whole people, in its impressible youth, to war. Such a subject must be felt by subject to monarch.

The Emperor's study, which I saw just as he had left it a few hours before, seemed like an index of the national spirit. The only pictures were those of battles; almost every book was on the art of war; the ink-stands, paper-weights, etc., were made of tiny balls and bombs; and on a high desk was a sadly worn map of Europe, on which Schleswig-Holstein and Alsace-Loraine were covered with letters and lines of red ink. There was scarcely an object in the room which suggested anything except war.

Lima Institutions.

"A curious feature of Lima," says a correspondent of the Boston Globe, "and, in fact, of all Peruvian cities, is the beggars' day. This is Saturday, and then all the poor who are supported by charity are allowed to wander through the streets seeking alms; and such an array of blind, crippled and infirm people it would be hard to gather in any other land. The grotesque forms and distressed garments would form a fitting theme for the genius of a Teniers to depict. They are all nationalities and races, these mendicants, though by far the greater part are negroes, Cholos, or native Indians, and Chinamen, and the money that they thus collect they dispose of as they see fit. Another of the institutions of Lima is the police. These are generally natives, here called Cholos, and they are armed with a musket and bayonet, and drssed in a military uniform. They are invested with the title of celadore, and a most appropriate appellation it is, for a lazier set of fellows cannot be found. When on duty they generally ensconce themselves in some doorway or corner, and there, within their knees, and their caps over their eyes, they beguile in sleep the hours of duty. An earthquake may shake a dozen buildings down near him, a salvo of artillery be fired, but these minor things cannot awaken a celadore; and he has no ear for the musical cries of murder, help and thieves. Hunger is the only thing that can awaken him. The old salts, who sometimes frequent the streets of Callao, often disarm the sleeping guardians of the peace, and parade the streets clothed in their cloaks and caps, and armed with their weapons of protection. How would such men suit in our stirring cities?"

"IS YOUR house a warm one, landlord?" asked a lady in search of a dwelling. "It ought to be; the painter has just given it two coats," was the reply.

France Thirsting for Revenge—A War to Come, the Like of Which Europe Has Never Seen.

Archibald Forbes, writing to the New York Herald on the recent review of the French tooops at Longchamps, says:

On the whole, it seems to me that the omen may be drawn, from the aspect of the troops on Thursday's parade, that there is forked lightning in the thundercloud of France's hatred to Germany and her thirst for revenge. Aspirations for the ravanche are not a mere brutum fulmen; that I think Gen. Manteufel must have owned to himself as he sat there incognito in plain clothes in a back row of the diplomatic tribune. The French mean to have another wrestle for the fall—that every one who knows the nation knows. But every one did not know, what I think this review goes to show, that her military authorities are working assiduously for the end, that when the combatants shall grapple, as grapple they must, the issue will not be, by a long way, so nearly a foregone conclusion as most people have been content to assume it. If France can contain herself, and meanwhile work as she has worked in the past two years, the struggle will be a Titanic one. She has still an immensity to do; indeed, she has scarcely yet begun the work she has set herself. But in ten years' time, in accordance with the disposition of her new military law, she will be able to set in line over 800,000 men without calling out the reserves. With them her military strength will number 1,300,000 trained soldiers. The second act, just passed, providing for organization as the first does for recruiting, enacts that wholesome decentralization the lack of which contributed as much as anything to France's downfall in the late war. With eighteen well organized and equipped army corps, each with its own staff and its own province to recruit from, with a powerful artillery and arms of precision second to none in the world, and with a strength in fighting men of a million and a quarter, who shall say that France shall not have made good her title to re-enter the ranks of the great military powers? And all this that I write of she has deliberately set herself to accomplish in ten years.

Futile Time-Serving.

The New York Observer ridicules the idea that where the ages of the patriarches of the Bible are mentioned in years, when the Hebrew chronologer stated the life of Methuselah to be 969 years, and of Jared 962, he meant that many months. The Observer goes on to figure on the subject as follows: "Adam lived 130 months, and begat a son. Seth lived 105 months, and begat Enos. Enos lived 90 months, and begat Cainan. Cainan lived 70 months, and begat Michael. And Enoch lived 65 months, and begat Methuselah. And all the days of Methuselah were 969 months, and he died; and so on. Truly a wonderful race of beings! At the age of 130 months, which is little more than 10 years, Adam begat his first-born, Seth; and at the age of 105 months, a little less than 9 years, Seth begat Enos; and at 90 months, or less than 8 years, Enos begat Cainan; and Cainan begat his first-born at 70 months, which is less than 6 years! And this is a satisfactory solution! It is historical and scientific mending with a vengeance."

Clubs and Granges.

An Eastern paper, speaking of the Iowa Granges, says: One-third of all the elevators and grain warehouses in the State are now owned or controlled by Granges, and no less than 5,000,000 bushels of grain were shipped to Chicago on Grange account prior to Dec. 1 last.

The number of cattle and hogs shipped in the same manner is enormous, and the reports received from all these shipments show an increased profit to the farmer of from 10 to 40 per cent. as compared with the amount received at the hands of the average "middlemen" in times previous.

In the matter of purchasing agricultural implements direct from the manufacturers, the Grange purchasers of the State have saved the farmers, by actual computation and comparison at the implement store, $365,000. For instance, one class of reapers ranging as No. 1, retailing at $240, was sold to the Grange, in fours or more, at $140—a clean "save" of $100 on each machine.—Pacific Rural Press.

Woman's Lot in Germany.

Women are farm-laborers, hod-carriers, street-sweepers, hewers of wood and drawers of water. I have seen the women tugging along a canal-boat, while a man sat in the stern, smoked, and steered; and a woman harnessed with an ox to draw a plow which a man guided. These may be exceptional instances, but the commonest of sights in a German city is a woman harnessed with a dog before a little cart. The natural consequences follow: Woman is despised; immorality is frightful. An American family which spent last winter in Dresden advertised for a servant for weeks before an unmarried woman who had no children could be procured.—Cologne Letter.

A HORSE attached to the cart of a tin peddler, while on Balmforth avenue, Friday, became startled by something, and ran away at a speed that was marvelous in a tin peddler's horse. The wagon was old and ricketty, and the condition of repairs, but both of them got through that avenue with awful velocity, the former hooping its spine, and shaking its head, and throwing its heels uproariously, while the latter reeled from one side of the road to the other, and bounded from rut to rut, and threw an invoice of old junk and new tin-ware at every heave. One old lady was caught around the neck by a pair of satinet pants and nearly choked to death, and a hoop-skirt, badly damaged, descended over the head of a man who was telling a neighbor what his mother rubbed on sprains, and so frightened him that he fell over a barrel and put both of his ankles out joint, and was bit on the shoulder by the dog of the man he was trying to benefit. The horse having filled the air with boilers, and old vests, and flatirons, and worthless overalls, and brass kettles, and broken-down gaiters, suddenly fetched up by jumping off the bridge into the river, dragging the wagon and a moth-eaten undershirt in after it.—Danbury News.

Educational Statistics.

The third annual report of Gen. Eaton, Commissioner of Education, just issued, consists of about 1,000 pages of interesting and instructive educational matter, and contains several maps copied from the census of 1870, intended to show the advantages of education. Several other tables are taken from the census, one of which shows that of the total male adults in 1870, 9,443,001, there were 1,619,147 male adult illiterates, and that of the adult female population, 9,092,999, 2,096,049 were of the illiterate class. This gives the percentage of male illiterate adults to the total number of adults 17.15 per cent., and of illiterate females 23.05 per cent. A table of the public school expenditures in the States per capita shows that Massachusetts expends the largest amount, $20.05, and that Nevada comes next, with $19.89.3. The amounts paid in the other States range from 65.4 in North Carolina, to $12.13.3 in California. The advance and progress in education was most marked in the New England, Middle and Western States. There were 811 academies in the United States, with an aggregate attendance of 98,929, and 298 institutions reporting to the bureau that class themselves as colleges, of which 30 reported only preparatory students. The 217 colleges reported 19,260 students in the collegiate course, of whom 1,419 were females. The number of institutions for the superior education of females was 751, with 1,617 instructors, of whom 449 were male and 1,168 female, and a total of 12,288 students. The Commissioner calls attention to the lack of proper veterinary instruction in the United States, and says the epidemic which lately visited the horses, which represents $700,000,000 or $800,000,000 of our property, awakened the public mind to the necessity of a class of well-educated veterinary surgeons.

A Sleeping Burglar.

A strange case of somnambulism is reported in a Detroit paper. A man by the name of Birch received $300 too late to deposit it in a bank, and accordingly put it in a tin box, which he placed in a bureau drawer. The key to the drawer he placed in his bed-room. A daughter of his had a morbid fear of burglars. She retired, however, at the usual hour, first placing a bandage about her neck to cure a soreness in her throat. In the morning the box was missing, though the windows and doors were all secure, and the key to the drawer in its place. It was found, too, that the bandage about the girl's neck had disappeared. The father going through a grape arbor shortly afterward, spied the bandage on the ground, and stooping to pick it up, his foot sunk into the soft ground that had lately been placed in a hole, and came on the box of money. In attempting to solve the mystery it was found that the girl's fingers were soiled with dirt, and that there were dirt marks on the pillow where she had placed her hands. She, however, remembered nothing of the strange occurrences of the night, though it is certain that she rose, procured the key of the drawer, opened it, took out the box, unlocked the door leading to the garden, passed out, dug the hole with her hands, hid the money, returned, put everything in proper place, and then retired without waking any one, even herself.

High Farming.

A noted farmer of New England, after visiting England and examining with the critical eye of a practical and experienced agriculturist the system pursued there, says:

I am thoroughly confirmed in my old faith that the only good farmer of our future is to be the "high farmer." There is a widely prevailing antipathy among the common farmers of our State against not only the practice of high farming, but against the use of the phrase by agricultural writers. This is all wrong and should at once be corrected. Through some misconception of the meaning of the phrase, and also of its application, they have come to believe it synonymous with theoretical "book farming," "new-fangled notions," boasted strides of progress, followed by disappointments and final failure. This is all an error. High farming simply means thorough cultivation, liberal manuring, bountiful crops, good stock, good feed, and paying profits therefrom. It is not strange that misconceptions have arisen in the minds of doubting farmers who have been eye-witness to some of the spread-eagle experiments of enthusiastic farmers, better supplied with money obtained in a business they know how to manage than with practical experience on the farm. Bountiful crops and paying profits of course are what all farmers who are dependent upon the farm for an income are striving to obtain; and every year as it passes is reconfirming the opinion that the profits are small, and will grow "beautifully less" where high farming is practiced.

Summer Blankets for Horses.

Blanketing horses in summer has now become an acknowledged necessity, and light blankets are now an important portion of the harness maker's stock. The material used for these are brown and bleached linen, scrims, flannel and light brown duck. Muslin sheets are also used, but these, as well as those made of duck, are not popular. Linen and flannel are the favorite goods; they cost more, but are durable and look well; twilled braid is used for binding and joining, and some of the finer qualities have monograms or the name of the horse worked on in very narrow braid of the same shade as the binding.

Scrims is used more as a protection against flies than for any other purpose, and being very light and loosely woven, requires to be well bound and secured at the seams; a strip of light leather should be stitched on under the braid, either on the back of the scrims or between it and the braid; the end of the scrims must be turned in so that the outer row of stitches will pass through two thicknesses; if this is not done it will ravel and the binding come off.—Carriage and Harness Journal.

HELLENIC ANTIQUITIES.

Old Troy Unearthed—The Grand Reward of Three Years' Work—Priam's Palace Brought to Light—Great Treasures of Gold and Silver Discovered.

[From the New York Journal of Commerce, Aug. 4.]

The following is an extract from a private letter, written by Mrs. Francis, wife of the American Minister to Greece, to her daughter residing in this city. It conveys the first intelligence which has reached us of the complete and brilliant success attending Mr. Schliemann's long-continued explorations on the site of ancient Troy. The discoveries here announced are among the most interesting and remarkable contributions of this century to archæological lore, and will be hailed with enthusiasm by scholars all over the world:

"ATHENS, Greece, June 25, 1873.

"Mr. Schliemann returned from Troy yesterday. He has completed his excavations, after three years of labor, by a grand master-stroke. He has discovered the Palace of Priam and large treasure in gold and silver. He has carried away with him forty large cases containing various articles, also fifteen baskets of real treasures. We called upon him to-day, at his residence, for the purpose of examining his collection. I saw in his house gold goblets and vases which shine just like the gold of our age. I also saw some beautiful hand-ornaments made of gold, massive and well made, resembling those now worn by the modern Greeks. There is a golden goblet weighing nearly three pounds, also a quantity of small, round ear-rings, such as are used and worn by children of our days."

[From the New York Journal of Commerce, Aug. 5.]

Our mention yesterday of the extraordinary success of Prof. Schliemann's excavations and searches on what he believed (and now appears to have proved) to be the site of Homer's Troy, are corroborated by Greek papers just at hand. The Clio, a paper published Athens in modern Greek, speaks in the highest terms of Mr. Schliemann, and recognizes the great importance of his discoveries. The study of Hellenic antiquities has latterly been taken up with great zeal in Greece. The French School of Arts at Athens has done much to stimulate these pursuits, and the Greek Government and people, though with little money to give, are well-disposed to lend a helping-hand to the archæologists. On the island of Delos many of the glories of the chief shrine of Apollo have been unearthed, and the inspired hands of Phidias and Praxiteles are supposed to be traced in many fragments of statuary that have been found in the sacred isle and elsewhere within the past few years. The Clio dwells particularly upon recent discoveries in Decelia, a frontier village of Attica, famous in the history of the internecine wars of Greece, and fortified by the Athenians at the instance of their greatest statesman as the key of Attica. The King of Greece has his summer residence exactly, he believes, in the ancient demos of Decelia. Since the successes recently noted have become known, it is popularly believed that a sort of Capt. Kidd treasure underlies the soil of each historic spot in Hellenic territory, and that the earth will yield up the treasures of the conqueror and the conquered as the stubborn spade shall persevere.

The Clio says that, above all, the attention of archæologists is directed to the many antiquities which Mr. Schliemann has brought from Troy. He identifies the spot where he has wrought by many close correspondences with the topographical descriptions of the Iliad, and is confident that he has at last found the somber and high-towered portals of the Elders of Troy in the day of the famous duel between Paris and Menelaus.

Encouraged by his successes in the Troad, Mr. Schliemann now asks permission of the Grecian Government to excavate at Argos and Mycenæ, the capital of Agamemnon. He proposes to do this at his own expense. He asks that the Grecian Government allow him the privilege, with the understanding that all the treasures of antiquity discovered by him in the past and in the future shall belong to him during his life, and that at his death they shall revert to the Greek Government. He proposes further to establish a museum for exhibition of Homeric antiquities, at an expense of 200,000 francs, to be paid by himself. The sentiment of the people is represented to be in favor of the proposition, notwithstanding that other archæologists have deceived them upon similar understandings. The journals of Athens express the utmost public confidence in Mr. Schliemann.

Quality of Air in Different Localities.

An interesting paper, valuable in a physiological point of view, on the quality of air taken from various localities, was lately read by Dr. Sigerson, at Dublin, before the Royal Irish Society. In air from an iron factory, he found, on examination, carbon, ash, and iron; the latter substance was in the form of little hollow balls, each about two thousandths of an inch in diameter, the iron being so thin that the light passed through it. In shirt factory air were found filaments of linen and cotton. Antimony—from the type metal, probably—was discovered in the air of printing rooms. Stable air was ascertained to contain floating hair and scales; and in the air through which tobacco smoke was passing, nicotine, the poison of tobacco, appeared in little globules.

BE NOT IDLE.—One great power rules the world as it always has done—the power of labor. For labor conquers all things. Everything we do has to have a certain amount of labor expended on it, to bring it to a state of perfection. However difficult it may appear, however impossible it may seem to be, remember if you attack it with energy, and labor with all your might, your efforts will be crowned with success. Inventive man, by the aid and application of labor, wins for himself a name that will always be honored, respected and remembered by his fellow-citizens. It has been truly said, that no excellence is obtained without labor. Few persons conversant with the world have failed to discover that in the race of life, men of moderate means and attainments frequently outstrip competitors endowed equally by the smiles of fortune and gifts of genius. Difference of talent has little to do with it; the power of steady, unabated labor excels all gifts of genius; and he who would succeed in life must labor constantly.

Walking as an Exercise.

There is no exercise so fine as walking, if one knows how to take it. When a disease in one part of the body becomes incurable, the physician will sometimes attack it by "revulsion"—that is, by attacking some other part, and thus diverting the sickness from its stronghold. So a man who uses his head until the brain is weary needs to tire his legs.

You complain that you cannot walk. Because you do not observe the rules. Walk easily. Take time. Do not hurry yourself into exhaustion. Begin by walking as you can bear it. Every now and then I backslide, get nervous. Think the sun hurts me and take to riding in street cars. Three months ago a mile wearied me. The circulation tended to the brain. Sleep was difficult. I determined to seek relief, as before, in walking. By walking at first two miles, and afterwards increasing the distance, I was soon able to trudge off ten miles in an afternoon without regard to heat. Sunstroke? It is not people who live right and exercise freely that suffer from the sun. Did you ever sit in a Turkish bath? The first three minutes you are ready to faint, to burst, to die, to blow up with the intolerable dry heat. But when once the perspiration has started, and all the little safety-valves were open, you were able to take with pleasure thirty or forty degrees more of heat than you had when an explosion seemed imminent. So when you are nervous about walking, and the heat seems dangerous, you have only to start off in a steady, easy gait. At the end of a mile walking is delightful. You wouldn't ride if you could.—Edward Eggleston, in Hearth and Home.

Red Salt.

A young parson of the Universalist faith, many years since, when the simon pure Universalism was preached, started westward to attend a convention of his bretheren in the faith. He took the precaution to carry a vial of cayenne pepper in his pocket, to sprinkle his food with as a preventive against fever and ague. The convention met; and at dinner a tall Hoosier observed the parson as he seasoned his meat, and addressed him thus:

"Stranger, I'll thank you for a leetle of that 'ere red salt, for I'm kind of curious to try it."

"Certainly," returned the parson, "but you will find it very powerful; be careful how you use it."

The Hoosier took the proffered vial, and feeling himself proof against any quantity of raw whisky, thought he could stand the "red salt" with impunity; accordingly he sprinkled a chunk of beef rather bountifully with it, and forthwith introduced it into his capacious mouth. It soon began to take hold. He shut his eyes, and his features began to writhe, denoting a very inharmonious condition physically. Finally he could stand it no longer. He opened his mouth and screamed "Fire!"

"Take a drink of cold water from the jug," said the parson.

"Will that put it out?" asked the martyr, suiting the action to the word. In a short time the unfortunate man began to recover, and turning to the parson, his eyes yet swimming in water, exclaimed:

"Stranger, you call yourself a 'Varsalist, I believe?"

"I do," mildly answered the parson.

"Wall, I want to know if you think it consistent with your belief to go about with hell-fire in your breeches pockets?"

Gid and Jack.

Speaking of the proposed love-feast of Union and Confederate West Pointers next year, the Newark Advertiser—whose editor was in the Union service—remarks:

"This comrade-feeling reminds us of the surrender of the Confederate Gen. Gideon Pillow to his old friend Gen. A. J. Smith. It was a touching scene. Pillow came into Montgomery one morning, afoot and alone. He sat down on a curbstone and shook the gravel out of his rough army shoes, and then walked into Smith's office, a back parlor, to surrender. The ceremony was simple. He said: 'How are you, Jack?' The reply was: 'Good God, Gid, is that you? Have you had your breakfast?' To which Pillow feelingly responded, 'No, and I haven't a dollar to pay for one.' Pillow got his breakfast, gave his parole, remarked that if he could not whip Yankees he could go back to Tennessee and raise cotton, and went on his way rejoicing, with enough money in his pocket to resume his place as one of the best citizens of West Tennessee."

THE FOG LIFTED.—London air has at last been cleared of some portion of its smoke. Two centuries ago King Charles II. suggested to the Royal Society of England that they should discover some plan whereby the smoke of London might be consumed. The savants of the society failed to make any discovery, but within the past quarter of a century practical engineers have succeeded in consuming the smoke from their furnaces and factories, and now even the bakers are compelled by law to do the same. Such a vast change has occurred in the condition of the London atmosphere in consequence, that the public gardens, as those of the Temple for instance, which heretofore were miserable failures in a horticultural sense, are now blooming successfully, and the banks of the river Thames begin to be "in verdure clad."

ALSACE-LORRAINE is not yet transformed into Elsass-Lothringen. It still requires great garrisons, and still shows hate of its cenquerors. We are cautioned not to speak German in Strasbourg shops, in order to avoid incivility and higher prices. The amount of scowling done by the populace as troops march through the streets is something ludicrously appalling to see. The photograph stores are full of pictures of "France Bidding Farewell to Alsace and Lorraine," "The Ravishment of Alsace," "Alsace's Dream," etc. The "dream" is the expulsion of the Germans by the French. These are only straws, but evidently the current has not yet turned toward Germany.—German Letter.

Cincinnati Industrial Exposition Buildings, 1873.

We present our readers above with a view of the buildings of the CINCINNATI INDUSTRIAL EXPOSITION, in which the Fourth Annual Exposition is to be held from September 3 to October 4, 1873.

This great Exhibition, which is the foremost among similar enterprises in this country, is already well known to many of our readers, but we give some details which are of general interest.

The buildings are situated in the heart of the city, and are five in number, including the Art Hall, which is connected with the rest by a bridge across Elm street, shown at the left of the picture. They furnish to exhibitors nearly eight acres of space, the Power Hall alone comprising over an acre of every variety of machinery in motion. The Exposition is divided into sixteen departments, and each of the great halls is filled with the myriad products of American industrial enterprise, displayed in the most attractive forms and with endless profusion. It may be justly termed a popular school of art and industry, teaching by object lessons of the most vivid and attractive description.

Its immense popularity is partly due to the central location of Cincinnati, but mainly to the liberal character of its management, which is in the hands of the three commercial associations of the city. There being no stockholding interest, all its revenues are directly expended in increasing its popular attractions, while the high character and impartiality of its awards has made them eagerly sought after by exhibitors from every part of the Union. The national character of the Exposition is indicated by the half-fare arrangements which last year extended over 15,000 miles of railway, or nearly one-third the entire mileage of the United States; and by the attendance of over 600,000 visitors. A large increase is expected this year, under the newly adopted system of school excursions at reduced rates of admission.

The Cincinnati Enquirer speaking of the late Democatic Convention in that State says:

The war having legislated some leading questions out of existence, it was natural that many men should shift their party allegiance. The logic of the status was, and, we insist, is, that the party that had disgraced on every question but one should, that question being buried separate. The Republican party was a temporary party, and the thing which gave it cohesion is no more. The thing which alone gives it cohesion is the spoils. It rests upon no principle, preaches no beneficient doctrine. An attempt was made a year ago to overthrow the party which had learned corruption so soon. The details of that attempt are respectable and historic alone by reason of the unparalleled liberality of the Democracy which marked them. That attempt lacked consistency and failed. If pursued until the dissimilar elements had been welded into a closer union, this policy would have won. This year the inconsistancy and the ambition, and, we might add, the treachery and ingratitude of a few men, have opened to us a shorter road. The Demoracy of Ohio ask no longer for partners who demand two hundred per cent. per annum on their investment, and who wish to withdraw so soon as their hopes of profit grow dim. They will go before the people of Ohio asking for friends on their merit alone. The liberalized Democracy will no longer go to a puny faction that can give neither aid nor honesty; they will compel honest people to come to them Mahomet must come to the mountain. The Democratic party is to-day the most liberal and progressive in the land. It is bound together by the closest ties, and by inherent traditions that run back to the earliest and purest days of the Republic. It preaches the doctrine of the present and the future, and enjoys of the political orthodoxy of the hour. The people will not long be insensible to its claims. We believe that the party in this State to-day will evince its fitness to govern. We have confidence that the Convention will remember the two facts essential to its success; That an excellent platform without an excellent ticket is amistake, and, equally so, an excellent ticket without an excellent platform.

Matilda Fletcher, Iowa's favorite Platform orator, has been selected to deliver the annual address at the Nebraska State Fair, at Lincoln on the first week in September. She has accepted the invitation, and has chosen for her subject, "Farmers' Wives and Daughters." This is a happy selection for the success of our Western Neighbor's fair. It will bring thousands of visitors to their exhibition, and thousands of dollars to the treasury. The women of our country are as much interested in the success of our fairs as the other sex, and it is right they should be put in prominent positions to carry forward such enterprises, especially when the directors act as wisely in selecting as our neighbors in Nebraska have done.—Des Moines Register.

General Ewing's Comment to the Democracy.

The only really good thing which was said in the gathering at Columbus last Wednesday was the eulogium pronounced by General Tom Ewing upon the Democratic party. It is the more noticeable as coming from a man who belongs to a family who has been the the hereditary foe of our organization for half a century. He himself has been but briefly connected with it, and now, when he is about to leave he pays it this splendid tribute, which we cannot refrain from publishing:

"But, gentlemen, most of the Democracy not reached the conclusion as yet. They are resolved to preserve the organization, and fight on for victory, no matter how long deferred. They were reared in the Democratic paty. Its name and organization are symbol and the weapon of a faith they cherish with almost religios fervor. The, the association of a life-time the memories of splendid triumphs and firmly endured disasters, of struggle and sacrifices for what they believe, and in the main I believe to be true principles of government—have bound them to the party, and they will abandon it at no man's dictu. Look at its unparalelled life and history! See how through two generations of men it has largely ruled the States and Nation, and has bravely and honestly met every great question of principle and policy without once changing its name or striking its colors! Do you wonder that life-long Democrats cling to the party, and that fifteen successive years of disaster have not destoyed their faith in its destiny? I profoundly respect, while I cannot largely share, their love for this great name an organization. Had I been reared in the party might be as warmly atttached to it as they."

It is remarkable that, seeing, as he so plainly does, the impractibility, if not the folly of disbanding that great party which holds together in adversity as well as in prosperity, he should have lent his name to this feeble and unwise movement for its destruction

◆

A school boy being requested to write a composition upon the subject of "Pins," produced the following: "Pins are very useful. They have saved the life of a great many men, women, and children—in fact whole families." "How so?" asked the duzzled teacher. And the boy replied "Why by not swallowing them." This matches the story of the other boy who defined salt as "the stuff that makes potatoes taste bad when you don't put on any."

◆

"THAT'S HOW."—After a great storm, a little fellow began to shovel a path through a large snow bank before his grandfather's door. He had nothing but a small shovel to work with.

'Hou do you expect to get through that drift?' Asked a man who was passing along.

'By keeping at it,' said the boy cheerfully. 'That's how.'

That is the secret of almost every difficulty under the sun. If a hard task is before you, stick to it. Do not keep thinking how large or how hard it is; but go at it, and little by little it will grow smaller until it is done.

If a hard lesson is to be learned do not spend a moment in fretting; do not lose breath in saying 'I can't,' or 'I don't see how;' go at it and keep at it —study. That is the only way to conquer it.

If a fault is cured or a bad habit braken up it cannot be done by merely being sorry, or only crying a little. You must keep fighting until it is got rid of.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.

☞ ☞ ☞

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

The friends of the so called "Peace Policy" are urging the President to pardon the Modocs, it will be remembered, ruthlessly murdered Canby and carved divers and sundry other over credulous United States officials. They urge it on the grounds that the trial was illegal and that Canby was, at the time of his death, acting as peace officer and therefore not identified with the War Department. Well now, the bare fact that the trial was illegal ought not to discourage the prresent administration from inflicting the prescribed punishment, During the war these summary trials were of daily occurrence, and no peace commissioners stepped forth to denounce them. People were banished, hung, and imprisoned without even the hollow terms of a drumhead investigation, and no tears were shed by peace commissions. But now that a few superfluous Modocs are likely to swing, a loud lament cometh from these fellows, and they advise a pardon.

THE SPRIG OF GREEN.

At Fredericksburg on that dread day,
Ere yet the strife begun,
Along the [illegible]
The General's order ran.
Win we or lose; our country's curse
Upon the wretch who shirks,
But honor to the man that dies
The nearest to the works.

Before them rose the giant range
Of hills in martial round,
From whose grim tops all bodefully,
The bristling cannon frowned.
No break within that iron line,
But death from left to right;
And Meagher with his Irish lay
Before Saint Marye's height.

No gloom was there, but every face
As careless and as bright
As if it was a wedding morn,
And not a day of fight.
And in their caps—though all around
Nor tree nor shrub was seen—
They wore—heaven knows from whence procured—
Each man a sprig of green.

Not long they waited for the sound
That told the strife begun;
Hark! from the river's further side,
It is the signal gun.
A thousand cannon from the hills
Bellowed in fierce acclaim,
And all the mighty line of blue
Swept upward through the flame.

Of what avail are words to paint
The strife that none can tell,
The hurrah from the Union host:
The wild Confederate yell.
The saber's clank; the horseman's tramp;
The scream of shot and shell:
And groans of dying men, that went
To make the mimic hell.

All day against those awful heights
Our lines were hurled in vain;
All day the shattered ranks closed up
But to be torn again,
Until the sun withdrew her light
As if for very shame;
And night came down upon the field
To end the bloody game.

The morning broke all fair and bright
Upon the dead array,
And lovingly on hill and plain
The blessed sunbeams lay.
The fight was done, the field was won,
The blue had lost the day;
And from their works all curiously
Swarmed down the men in gray.

Thick lay the slain, like sheaves of grain,
Ripened by battle suns;
But one had died beyond the rest,
A stone's cast from the guns.
They raised him softly, for the brave
Respect the brave I ween,
And in his cap, unwithered still,
They found a sprig of green.

Of all the thousands lying round,
Close locked in death's embrace,
That one—though all were brave and true—
From death had got such grace.
No bearded soldier old in wars,
Had won the happy place;
He who died nearest to the works
Had only a boy's face.

They buried him just where he fell,
These foemen with rude art,
They said that he had earned the place
By his undaunted heart.
And one—a poet in his soul,
Though rough in garb and mien—
Planted upon the simple mound
The dead boy's sprig of green.

The brave man dies, but the brave deed
With death will not be found;
And travelers say, that to this day,
The children playing round,
Can point the stranger to the spot,
The fairest in the scene,
The grave where sleeps the Irish boy
Who wore the sprig of green.

HUNG IN ARMOR.

Were you ever at Gairskittery? No? Well, never go; for measles, famine, quacks, unpaid bills, tight stays, bad wine, and the ringleader of all our demagogues came from thence; so I will not describe it. The reader always likes to have some share in the book or article he is reading. It flatters him when the writer concludes that he knows enough to fill up details.

I will merely mention that my tale begins at 12 o'clock m.; that the month is August; that the trembling aspen trees were on one side of the road, and the broad sea on the other. Don't you perceive that you know all the rest? that the trees are green, the ocean restless and dazzling, the sun hot, and the road intolerably dusty?

And now imagine on this road, back in the medieval ages, not Mr. G. P. R. James' solitary horseman, but two men, father and son, both shrewd country fellows, trotting along on two donkeys.

"Shall we get there in time?" quoth the son.

"Yes, it comes off at 2 o'clock, and now it is only a quarter past 12."

"I want to see it very much. No doubt he will be hung with stolen armor on him."

"Yes, and that will be a grander sight than a black coat and a white tie."

"How did he get the idea of stealing a coat of mail?"

"Not a hard idea to get."

"No, it was the armor that was hard to get," said the son, who wanted to be witty. "Was it very handsome?"

"Magnificent! All inlaid with gold."

"And was he caught as he carried it off?"

"Yes, for a suit of armor is not moved about as silently as a feather-bed; so he very soon came to a place called 'Stop!'"

"Did the servants in the castle catch him?"

"Not they—they were frightened—"

"Of course," interrupted the son, "else there would be no fun in being a robber."

"Nor any excitement in being robbed. But they did not think that there was any robber in the case."

"What then?"

"They thought it was a ghost. The rascal, who was as strong as a horse, carried the suit of armor in front of him, so that it looked as if a giant or the Commendatore in 'Don Giovanni' was tramping down the stairs. It made a most horrible noise. Unluckily for the thief, the lord of the castle, who was as bold as Baron Munchausen, and feared neither ghosts nor men, had not yet gone to bed. He had been absorbed in reading a heroic book called 'Squeeky,' which was written in a country where they have abolished the have-his-carcass act, and all the Brigadier Generals are Presidents of colleges. He was quietly ascending the stairs as the thief was coming down, and he just arrested him; and as they lived in a country where honest men can recover their own, the Baron sent him off to prison."

"And he was tried?"

"Yes, and sentenced to be hung in the stolen armor."

"But why, in the name of old Nixon?"

"Aha! The lord of the castle knew very well what he was about. He had a keen eye to the main chance; a suit of armor in which a man has been hung is a talisman. He had conceived a scheme greater than any ever concocted in the windy brain of a first-class political economist. He would wear this armor in the impending war; and the story spreading far and wide, the enemy's knees would double up with fear, and no one would dare to touch the man cased in that awful suit."

"How very clever! Come, let us hurry; for after hearing all this I would give all I have, and a little more, too, to see the hanging."

So the father and son jogged on, and half an hour after they reached Gairskittery.

There was an immense crowd in the square. In the center was a very fine gallows, of magnificent rosewood, not very tall, for the criminal was a low fellow; but still there was ample room for him to dance between heaven and earth, and the rope was already twisting about in the wind like an eel hung up by his tail.

The criminal would have an uninterrupted view of the ocean, if that was any consolation; and besides, those who know say that hanging is not unpleasant.

Our two donkey-men pushed into the crowd and waited with the rest, but with less fatigue than the rest, as they were mounted.

They did not have to wait long. At precisely 2 o'clock the prison gates swung open, and the procession appeared.

The robber was dressed in the splendid armor. He was mounted on an ass, with his head turned toward its tail. His hands were tied behind him. Judging by his attitude his reflections were not agreeable.

They rode him in front of the gallows. It was an unwelcome sight. He was wishing that he knew nothing about what was happening to him; he envied a little dog that somebody kicked. A butterfly flew past. He thought it insulting to him, which was rather a hasty induction; but he had very little time to correct errors in reasoning, for the hangman put up his ladder, and the priest read the sentence.

The thief never stirred; and the spectators watched the motionless figure, and hoped that he would not be guilty of the audacious swindle of dying before he was hung.

They ordered him to get down, but he remained silent and motionless as the Sphinx.

Then the irritated hangman seized him by the arms and pulled him down, and stood him on the ground. In one minute he had gone through the alphabet from an upright I to a zig-zag Z.

"Is there anything you want?" growled the hangman.

"Yes."

"What is it?—and be quick."

"My pardon."

The judge and the lord of the castle shrugged their shoulders, and motioned to the hangman to proceed.

He tried to make the thief go up the ladder, but it was no easy matter. It is really absurd, but you have no idea of the difficulty of persuading some people to die.

With superhuman effort the hangman hoisted him up, and nearly exploded himself in doing it, while the thief kept praying that Heaven a gift would give him, which would enable him to evaporate then and there into ammoniacal or demoniacal gas; and condense comfortably back again somewhere outside of Gairskittery.

But making personal use of gases was not so common in those days as now; so the noose was slipped around his neck, and with a vigorous kick the hangman launched him into space.

The crowd applauded and shuddered, and little children, with long curls floating behind them like golden clouds, were held up by their mothers, the better to see the show.

The body twisted and turned, and then hung down stiff. The Z became I again.

The men on the donkeys had watched breathless till it was over. "Well," said the son, "the poor wretch has paid dear for not stealing the armor."

"But he meant to steal it, and the will has been made to suffer for the deed. Javelins! it was not very pleasant to see."

Twenty minutes after, our travelers trotted away. They stopped in the little town, where they had money to receive, and toward nightfall they departed for home, quite riotous with good luck and good spirits; for they had collected their money and were also filled with wine.

The next day, just before daylight, two soldiers came from the castle to take down the body, and to return the now invaluable armor to their lord. But they met with an unexpected surprise. The gallows was there, and the rope twisting in the wind, but the man in armor was not.

The soldiers rubbed their eyes and clanged their sabers and brandished their poleaxes; then they stabbed, poked, pricked, scratched, and ripped up all the bushes far and near, but no man in armor turned up, any more than the one who was to be cut down; and what was strangest of all, the rope was neither broken nor severed, but just as it had been before the execution took place.

Fast they hurried home to tell the unwelcome news to the lord of the castle, who would not believe them, but set out to look for himself. He was such a high and mighty lord that he thought the criminal thought he might be there to oblige him, and so it was a pity that he saw just what the others had described.

What had become of the dead man? for dead he was, as all the people knew. Had some other thief taken advantage of the night to carry off the armor? That was plausible; but what did he want of the body? Had his friends and relations been there? That was not unlikely, only he had no friends or relations, and if he had, they would have taken the body and then left the armor.

The lord of the castle was in despair. He was "sold," as they say in these degenerate days. He advertised a great reward; no one came for it. He caused all the houses to be searched. It was bootless. Then he consulted a wise man of ancient Gotham, the same who had planted a hedge around the cuckoo to keep spring all the year, and to him he propounded this question:

"How can a man who has been hung escape from a rope by which he is suspended?"

The wise man from Gotham took three weeks to study up this grave subject, and gave this answer, "It cannot."

Then the lord of the castle put this question:

"A thief who could not steal when he is alive, being condemned to death for stealing—can he steal after he is dead?"

The wise man sat with his chin upon his hand, and looked as wise and old as anything except the difference between right and wrong, and replied, "Yes."

The lord of the castle asked him, "How?"

He said he could not tell; and he was the wisest man of his time.

They sent him home, and began to think that the thief was a sorcerer, and ordered masses to allay his vindictive spirit, for they believed that he would take speedy vengeance on the lord of the castle and all who helped to hang him.

And the lord of the castle wandered about asking for his armor from man, from woman, and from the devil, who he now believed had personated the thief.

Nothing came of it.

At last, he was just about to give it up, when one morning as he awoke a great noise and shouting reached his ears, coming from the direction of the public square.

His servants rapped hurriedly upon his door, and, as he opened it, they screamed out together: "My lord, my lord, do you know what has happened?"

"No; but if you will hold your tongues long enough, I am going to ask. What is it?"

"A miracle!"

"Really?"

"Yes! the criminal—he is there on the gallows, with your armor, and dead!"

"Dead?"

"Quite dead! Only—"

"Well."

"Did he have spurs on when he was hung? Steel spurs, my lord?"

"No."

"But he has them now," cried the men, their eyes rolling wildly with fright; and then they gasped out in awful whispers, "And his helmet, my lord! His helmet is not on his head. He has taken it off. He has placed it carefully on the ground, and he hangs bare-headed!"

The lord of the castle turned pale. There was nothing like it in "Sqeeky"—not even a pumpkin ghost or a pasteboard bogy to be scared at. It was contrary to nature for a dead man to come back and hang himself again—contrary to nature in every sense; and in those medieval ages there were no foxes to say and geese to believe that spirits came back. It must be the Monarch of Evil himself! But the Baron himself had never been afraid of man, or the potentate just mentioned, and he was not going to begin now; so with a deep returning flush on his face, the expression of which grew firmer every moment, he dressed himself quickly and ran down to the square.

It was even so. The thief hung bareheaded, the spurs on his feet, the helmet on the ground beneath him; and everybody shouting, "A miracle! a miracle!"

"He has repented," cried some, "and come back and rehung himself!"

"He has always been here," cried the others, "only his sorcery concealed him!"

"But why those spurs? He must have been gone away on some unfinished business. What a fool to come back at all!"

As for the Baron, surer than ever of the inestimable, life-preserving talisman which he who wore the armor would possess, he carried off his property triumphantly. He took the spurs, too, which was practical justice, perhaps, but not exactly a point of honor.

The "Saturday Review" of those medieval days gave three versions of this strange story.

The wise man of ancient Gotham declared, through the pages of the "Review," that if at the last moment the sufferer had will enough, he might absorb his body into his will, and, as the will is invisible, the body would be invisible likewise; but the body reappeared at the end of a month because his will suddenly "caved in," so to say. This was a capital theory, and might be essayed by all the poor dear murderers, if they could see that it led to anything at all satisfactory in the end, which it don't.

The next version was offered by Dr. Phthisgig, who was then delivering lectures in the Center of Creation, otherwise called "The Hub." The "Review" had just reported a remarkable one, in which the learned Doctor proved inductively, deductively, productively and seductively, that spiders carried their ears on their legs. This profound philosopher maintained that the animal on the gallows escaped, but being pursued by an awful phantom called Remorse, he could not endure his life longer than a month, and had come back to be pious and good, and to do justice on himself. Dear old Phthisig I honor him for believing that there is something divine in the worst natures. True, when his wife puts her boots on of a morning, she finds little snakes squirming up, which the good man has tucked up in the boots to keep safe and warm over night. But never mind, his heart is all right, and he is the simplest, pleasantest, kindliest old Dominie Sampson of a philosopher in the Hub—which is saying octavo volumes, where so many good, and pious, and learned philosophers do congregate.

But thirdly, and finally, a medieval reporter, who had "interviewed" everybody upon whom he could lay hands, declared that those country fellows going home at night passed the gallows on their way.

A long and pitiful groan sounded in their startled ears.

"Jevelins!" exclaimed the father, "what's that?"

The son tumbled upside down off the donkey, and yelled with all his might.

"O——h!" groaned the man on the gallows; "have mercy! help me down!"

With quaking knees the father mounted the ladder, and found that the rope had caught round the helmet instead of the neck of the thief, who was as alive as alive could be.

Accordingly he took him down, and, penetrated with pity, the two men carried him to their home.

'Alas! why is it that a man who has once stolen will steal again? Is it force of habit, methodic science, special, innate depravity, or predestination? Sheltered, fed, and kindly treated, this scamp made up his mind to steal the countryman's donkeys, his daughter, and the spurs, which were an heirloom of value. In fact, there was nothing else of value to steal.

And so one night when the church clock chimes struck the last quarter to eleven, there was a sudden cry in the countryman's house, "Help! help! murder!" for the gag with which the thief had sought to stifle her cries had fallen from the young girl's mouth. In an instant, with a horrible oath, her father was on him. He threw him down; he stamped his foot upon his prostrate body; he lifted the fellow and hurled him across the room; he hustled him into another, and there, with his son's help, he bound him fast, and the next night the two men carried the wretch back to the gallows, dressed in the stolen armor, and taking off the helmet to make sure this time that the rope fitted his neck, once more he was swung into the air, and this time he hung by the neck till he was dead.

The spurs, which were buckled on the heels of the mailed boots, they forgot to remove. The young girl was safe, and one does not think of trifles at such times.

Of these three versions you can choose which you please.

As for the lord of the castle, he put on his armor, which was to be such a sure talisman against squibs, and crackers, and boiling pitch, and guns, and sallabalas, and lightning, and striding off to the wars, he was killed the very first man.—Galaxy.

Dueling in England.

The conviction of Capts. Smith and Markham for fighting a duel with Mr. O'Grady, in which Mr. O'Grady was killed, is the last and only case in which a jury has ever in Great Britain found a man guilty of a criminal offense for fighting a duel. The indictment was for manslaughter, and the penalty, under the conviction, was one year's imprisonment. The case is thus stated in Appletons' Journal.

The trial and imprisonment of Capts. Smith and Markham, of the British army, in 1830, for killing Mr. O'Grady, a barrister, in a duel, did much to check the barbarous system among military men. Mr. O'Grady, on horseback, met in a crowded street Capts. Smith and Markham, driving in a cabriolet. In attempting to pass, the former crowded upon the foot-path, and his horse losing his footing, leaned forward to right himself in the saddle, and in doing so touched the top of the cabriolet with his riding-stick. The horse recovering his footing, and he his seat, he went on at a gentle walk. The gentlemen in the cabriolet drew up suddenly; Capt. Smith jumped out, whip in hand, overtook Mr. O'Grady, and without salutation, call, or expostulation, struck him several times. When he turned he saw Capt. Smith running back to his cabriolet, and upon inquiring who he was received for a reply:

"You know me, — you! I am Capt. Smith, of the Thirty-second."

Mr. O'Grady rode to his father's house and sought for the assistance of Lieut. Macnamara, who in the course of the day had an interview with Capt. Smith and Capt. Markham, who acted as his friend. The meeting immediately followed. It was six in the evening. No strangers were present. Capt. Markham acquainted Mr. O'Grady that the signal to be given was, "Ready! fire!" When he gave it, however, he said: "Are you ready, gentlemen?" O'Grady conceived the word to be "Ready! fire!" and that "Are you ready, gentlemen?" was merely preliminary. Capt. Smith, it appeared, did not so understand it, and upon hearing the words raised his pistol, leveled it, covered Mr. O'Grady, and fired. The latter fell without having discharged his pistol and died the next day.

There was suspicion of foul play, though the Judge would not permit the proof to go to the jury. It undoubtedly had its effect, nevertheless. A verdict of guilty was rendered, and both prisoners, Smith and Markham, were sentenced to imprisonment in Kilmainham Jail for one year. The announcement was received with cheers. To the young officers both verdict and sentence came with awful surprise. Capt. Smith clasped his hands to his forehead and exclaimed, "O, God! My God! Take my life! Is it come to this?" Then, throwing himself into Capt. Markham's arms, he cried, "O Markham! my dear Frederick! have I brought you to this! Oh! I wish to God they would take my life!"

The sentence was carried out, nevertheless, greatly to the benefit of the British service in all parts of the world.

Permanent Lemonade.

Some competent sanitary and bibulous authority asserts that when people feel the need of an acid, if they would let vinegar alone, and use lemons or apples, they would feel just as well satisfied and receive no injury. A suggestion may not come amiss as to a good plan when lemons are cheap in the market. A person should then purchase several dozen at once and prepare them for use in the warm, weak days of spring and summer, when acids, especially citric and molic, or the acid of lemons, are so grateful and useful. Press your hand on the table to make it squeeze more easily; then press the juice into a bowl or tumbler—never into tin; strain out all the pulp from the peels—to extract the acid. A few minutes' boiling is enough; then strain the water with the juice of the lemons; put a pound of white sugar to a pint of the juice; boil ten minutes, bottle it, and your lemonade is ready. Put a tablespoonful or two of this lemon syrup in a glass of water, and you have a cool, healthful drink.

THERE are in the United States 86 establishments for the manufacture of silk, employing 6,649 hands. A BRAVE ACT.

A Kentucky Student at Heidelberg Saves [illegible] Rich.

At the gala regatta of the South German Boating Association at Mannheim, in Baden, on the 13th of June, there took place an event which shed considerable luster on American gallantry and which ended in a most romantic manner. On the above-mentioned day the banks of the Rhine were lined with spectators, among which the South German aristocracy was fully represented. Just as the crews of four boating societies were speeding past the last pillar of the new bridge a thrilling spectacle attracted all eyes. A handsome young lady, most elegantly dressed, who had been leaning over the low railing of the bridge, suddenly lost her balance and fell into the water, which was at least seventy-five feet underneath. Two or three heart-rending shrieks burst from the lips of those standing near, and then the thousands of spectators, losing all interest in the race, looked with breathless suspense for the result of this terrible accident. The poor young lady struck the water heavily, and disappeared at once. The Rhine at that place is deep and rapid; and when the aged father of the unfortunate lady, in a voice of agonizing grief, offered a princely reward to whosoever would save his daughter, there was no response.

All at once a tall young man, in the costume of a German student, and wearing the gold embroidered cap of the Vandal Society, of Heidelberg, rushed to the left bank of the river and plunged boldly into the water—a leap of thirty feet. There was a loud shout of applause, and then again a pause of breathless silence. All eyes were riveted on the gallant swimmer as he struggled against the rapid current at the very spot where the lady disappeared. He dived down. What a minute of suspense! But all at once a heavy burden fell from all those oppressed hearts. The swimmer emerged from the depth, and on his arm held the senseless body of the young lady. Another shout of applause rang the welkin. Now two boats rowed rapidly toward the pair, and they did not come any too soon, for the young swimmer was visibly growing faint, and when he, with his fair burden, was drawn into the boats, he sank down with utter exhaustion. When the boat reached the left bank, the young hero was at once the object of a fervent ovation, while the young woman's father took the latter in his arms and carried her, still in an unconscious state, into a carriage.

The young hero was a Kentuckian named Clarence Goodwin, a law student at the University of Heidelberg. The oldest and most experienced fisherman on the Rhine pronounced his exploit a truly heroic deed, and already on the following morning the Grand Duke of Baden conferred on young Goodwin, who is only nineteen years old, the large golden medal for deeds of courage and devotion. But still a greater reward awaited him. The young lady whose life he had saved, and who, notwithstanding the terrible shock she had suffered, had soon revived, was the only daughter of the Count of Reigers, one of the wealthiest South German noblemen. Her father went himself to the savior of his daughter, and after thanking him in the most touching manner, brought him to the young Countess. The latter thanked young Goodwin with tears in her eyes, and said that her lifelong gratitude belonged to him. During the next few days the two were seen frequently together on the public promenade, and everybody in Mannheim believes that they are engaged to be married.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

A Leipsic Tragedy.

A terrible tragedy is narrated by the German papers. Herr Schweinhoff, a merchant of Leipsic, aged 65 years, after losing his first wife, married a young girl of 18, who, of course, was only enamored of the old man's wealth. Schweinhoff had by his first wife a son, who seems to have been rather wild. On returning home after two years' absence, the son, aged 25 years, commenced a liaison with his step-mother. Schweinhoff suspected the intimacy, and determined to be avenged. Having acquired proof of the treachery of the couple, he awaited his opportunity. On July 5, he took a horse and rode to a country house then occupied by his wife. Entering the grounds, he saw her and his son seated at the edge of a small lake, engaged in conversation. He at once put spurs to his steed and trampled the woman under the horse's feet. She, flying, fell into the lake. The son sprang upon the father, and, during a struggle which ensued after Schweinhoff had been pulled from his horse, he stabbed him fourteen times in the face and breast with a poniard which the father had carried in his own belt. Then he ran to the rescue of his mistress, and leaped into the water, but his strength failed him before he reached her. The lifeless remains of the guilty pair were recovered an hour later.

A Rattlesnake's Bite.

An Indiana man has recovered from the bite of a rattlesnake. The South Bend Tribune tells the story thus:

"Last Wednesday afternoon, Asa Jones, of Clay township, was engaged in loading hay on a wagon on the marsh at Bonebrake's farm, when he was attacked by a rattlesnake. The reptile first struck at the boot on his right foot, but missed it, and he gave the snake a kick, sending it off a short distance. It renewed the attack again, and this time struck him on one side of the calf of his leg, just above the boot-top, the fangs making a wound nearly an inch long. Mr. Jones managed to dispatch the snake, and immediately burned some tobacco on the wound. Within five minutes from the time he was bitten he was perfectly blind, and it was with great difficulty he was got to his house, which was over a mile distant. He was instantly filled with whisky, and tobacco was kept on the wound till the day following, when he was apparently as well as ever. He is now suffering no bad effects from the bite. The snake was a good-sized one, with seven rattles."

A SERENADE.

From the folds of your snow-white pillow,
My love, my beautiful [illegible],
And come to the [illegible] window
Where the wind through the cedars sighs.
Star and planet are beaming
Out through the cloudless blue;
Planet and star are weeping
And wondering where are you.

The moon, like a royal maiden,
Sits on her cloud-built throne,
And the breath of the dainty tulips
From the garden paths is blown;
Under the drooped narcissus
The bulbul sits and sings
And the leaves of the roses are brushing
The dew from the wind's light wings.

Under thy leafy casement,
Sweet, I am waiting still,
Watching the lamp-lit lattice
Till thy hand on the window-sill
Rustles the dainty rose-leaves
That lovingly cluster there,
Sighing till somebody culls them
To twine in thy dark-brown hair.

My own, my beautiful Nina,
Come, till my love I pour—
Come, till I tell the passion
My heart can hide no more—
Till I sit in the rich sweet luster
Of thy dark-blue eyes divine,
And bless in a blissful rapture
The hour that shall make thee mine.

Shine out, O shimmering planet!
O panting shadow, lie still!
Methinks 'tis the rim of her raiment
I see by the window-sill;
Hush, bulbul under the roses!
Oh, rapture! the hour draws near!
Silence, thou restless zephyr!
'Tis her step, 'tis her voice I hear!

"Do you think we have all gone mad, sir?
In truth, I wish you'd leave off;
I'm dying to-night with a toothache,
And your howling won't cure my cough.
'Tis really strange, 'tis monstrous,
How little of sense remains,
Or even of common politeness,
When folks get love on their brains."

FRESH DANBERRIES.

[From the Danbury News.]

IF there is room for one more in that balloon of the Graphic's, there is a young man in Danbury who can fill it. He lives opposite us and plays an accordion. He might object to running the risk, but he could be stunned by a blow on the head, and got into the balloon before he recovered.

WE saw a man who was crossing White street, yesterday, pick up a lump of coal and put it in his pocket. "There," we said to ourself, "is a truly economical man. He is not afraid to save. He realizes that a penny saved is a penny earned, and he will profit by it." Then he stepped into a saloon to get a drink, and we moved on.

A NORTH MAIN street gentleman saw his boy in front of the house throwing a ball in the air, last evening. He hadn't played ball himself for thirty years, and knew nothing of the kind of ball base-ball clubs have introduced in the last few years, but he felt the old spirit rising in him at the memory of former triumphs, and he held up his hands and told his son to "let her slide." She slid. He caught it full and fair, and then dropped it, and started into the house, with his eyes full of tears, and his hands pressed under his arms. The youth subsequently informed another boy that he could plainly hear the "old man's" bones snap.

A DANBURY man of statistical turn can tell how many stalks of oats there are in the average acre. He has counted the hairs on his children's heads, and has the number pasted in their hats. He keeps company waiting while he demonstrates the number of tendons there were in the animal from which came the steak, and will step people in the street when they are in a hurry and hold them until he explains how many threads form the garment which they may have on. People at first were struck with admiration for the brain that man carries with him, but now they wish he would die.

THE pastor of the Slawson church sends us the following item: The church, as will be remembered, is holding a series of revival meetings, which are largely attended. Prominent among the speakers is Rev. Mr. Chaffee, of Illinois. Last Friday evening the building was crowded, and Mr. Chaffee was considerably animated. He was sitting in a chair at the front, his wonderfully long legs crossed, and his voice sending forth a volume of song. The upper leg was swinging majestically, the motion increasing as the singing advanced. They had just reached that part of the hymn where it says, "Then I can safely reach my home, my God, my heaven, my all," and Mr. Chaffee was doing his level best, and had just got out "Then I can safely reach my home," when the oscillating limb came suddenly in contact with a miserable dog that had in some way got into the house, and sent it flying and howling under one of the benches. Of course Mr. Chaffee was surprised, but when a little woman popped up in the galleay and shook an ominous looking umbrella at him, and cried in a voice of passion, "You kick that dog again, you Illinoy giraffe, and you won't safely reach your home," he was more than astonished—he was fairly macadamized. He subsequently told our informant that "he never before was so completely flabergasted, so thoroughly circumbobolated," whatever that means.

A DUTCHMAN, getting excited over an account of an elopement of a married woman, gave his opinion thus: "If my wife runs avay mit anoder man's wife, I shake him out of his breeches if she be mine fadder!"

Death of a Remarkable Man.

Dr. [illegible] Berger, an eminent physician of this city, was buried July 19, in the Lutheran Cemetery, New York. He first saw the light in the small town of Rottwell, in the Kingdom of Wurtemberg, but came to this country while still a young man, making New York his home during nearly forty years.

He had attained a proficiency in diagnosis and treatment which astonished the whole medical profession, not merely of this country, but of Europe, many of the great lights of the profession consulting him in difficult cases, and invariably with remarkable success.

We are enabled to give an interesting account of Dr. Berger's mode of treatment, together with a few examples of the strange proficiency he had attained in discovering the cause of disease. His patients were always treated on the principle of "first come, first served." He would never allow this rule to be infringed, treating the veriest pauper with the same consideration as the high-bred dame riding in her aristocratic equipage. His fee, too, was the same for all, no matter the wealth of the sufferer, namely, $1 the visit; and when an acquaintance ventured to reason with him on the strangeness of such action, his reply invariably was, "Oh, they are only sick peoples." His practice must have been enormous; for, in addition to $100,000 in hard cash, he has left a number of houses and lots in the best portions of the city.

His modus operandi was peculiar, for, notwithstanding what might be the rank, age, or complaint of the patient, he invariably based his diagnosis upon the result of the action of the kidneys, submitted in a phial to his inspection, judging the whole case from it by his eyes; and, without even seeing his visitor, he would tell his or her age, habits of life, complaint, previous treatment, etc.

The disease of this remarkable man was simply due to over brain-work, for he had been exceptionably temperate during his whole life. When he recovered from the attack which preceded the paralysis, he said: "I hab lived here forty years, and I never spend von dollar in liquor store or lager-beer saloon. It is like de debbil—all poison." He was not, however, a total abstainer, but confined himself to the red wines of his native Germany, giving high prices for the best vintages.—New York Mercury.

A Sand Storm in Colorado.

Last Monday two Mexican boys, Jesus Maria and Juan de la Cruz Limbustero, were taking a herd of 700 sheep across the sand-hills of "Lomas del Arreno," about twenty-four miles northerly from Fort Garland. These sand-hills extend out into the San Luis Valley, about fifteen miles opposite the Mosco pass. The herders undertook to make a short-cut across the hills instead of going around, as directed by their father. At first everything went on gaily; the boys and sheep and dogs only sank a few inches in the light, white sand, and they thought how foolish it was of old fogies to go around twenty miles when it was only four across; but before they got half across one of those sudden storms arose; up came a gentle breeze, th breeze became a wind, and the wind an awful hurricane; the sand moved about in blinding clouds, hills changed to holes, and every hole was a seething cauldron. The poor boys struggled hard to avert their doom, and Jesus Maria managed, by drawing his serap over his head and keeping his feet, and climbing as the sand piled up around him, to survive the tornado. But his younger brother, Juan de la Cruz, succumbed to the suffocaitng blast, and as the ship goes down at sea, so sank the brave boy, surrounded by his bleating sheep and whining dogs; and when the storm ceased, as suddenly as it had commenced, little Jesus Maria found himself all alone, with quiet mounds of glistening sand all around him, and not a trace of the cruel storm nor a wreck of the sad disaster could be seen. He hurried home, where he arrived the next day, and told his tale of terror. The whole plaza turned out to search for the lost body and to dig out the missing sheep. Up to the succeeding afternoon they had not recovered over 400 sheep, most of them being found about six feet below the surface; and the natives from neighboring plazas had flocked to the scene, and were busily engaged digging out sheep, saving the wool and feasting on mutton.

Another Revolution in England.

Another revolution is impending in England. It is nothing less than a proposition to add 900,000 peasants to the voting lists of the country. It was the intention of the Tories to take up this cry of "country franchise," as it is called—that is the extension of household suffrage to the counties such as now obtain in the cities. But Mr. Gladstone has forestalled his opponents, and distinctly announces his adhesion to the principle involved; though, for obvious reasons he does not propose as yet to give it practical effect. It will doubtless be made a Government measure at a more convenient season. We do not, in this country, as yet fully realize the force of the revolt which is now in progress among the English agricultural laborers. They are determined that something shall be done to better their miserable condition. The emigration fever has seized them; and Mr. Joseph Arch, their leader, is making preparations to come to this country, and select a location where a large body of them can comfortably settle. England certainly manages her revolutions better than they do in France or Spain. The leaders fling a great many hard words at each other; and in contests of importance a great deal of hard feeling is excited; but in the end the so-called "upper classes" give way to popular demands before there is any necessity of coming to blows. With household suffrage in town and hamlet, the England of the next quarter of a century will be a very different England from what it has been in the past.—Graphic.

PRACTICAL jokes are often objectionable, and picking one's teeth with a penknife never commendable; and Frederick Hilton, a young man residing in Detroit, Mich., is a new convert to the truth of these two assertions. He was standing on a corner of Second street, in that city, quietly engaged in picking his teeth with a blade of his knife, when a waggish acquaintance came along and gave his elbow a push. By this push the blade of his knife was so firmly wedged between two of his teeth, and the pain was so great, that Frederick was compelled to go to a dentist and have one of the teeth loosened.

A Wooden Railroad—Fifteen Miles an Hour with Ease.

The Clarendon (S. C.) Press contains a lengthy account of the wooden railroad of tramway which has been lately built, and which brings Manning Court-House in communication with the outside world:

The South Carolina Central railroad had been allowed to drop through the hands of the original projectors, and a considerable amount of cutting-out and grading had been accomplished, when Messrs. Lane and Pritchett, large turpentine distillers, doing a very large business, purchased the right of way and set about to construct a road that would take their products to market.

The road from Manning to Lane's Turnout, on the Northwestern railroad, was cleaned out and graded and laid with scantling. This road is fifteen and a half miles long. The bed is constructed precisely as all other railroads are. The whole structure above the bed is precisely similar to other railroads, except in place of iron, this road has wooden stringers, four by five inches, fastened down to the cross-ties by long iron spikes passing through both stringer and cross-tie, making the stringer both steady and firm. These stringers are five inches upon their face, and the tracks or wheels of the running stock are five inches upon their face. The friction in running being distributed over wide surfaces, the injury to the rails will be much less.

The flanges of the wheels are two and a half inches deep, thereby preventing any probability of running off. A portion of the road has been in operation five months, over which trains have been running daily, and most of the stringers are smooth. The rolling stock on the road is common, but quite effectual. The engine is worth only $1,800, but is sufficient to carry seven or eight cars, loaded, at the rate of fifteen miles per hour. The proprietors are now gone to the North for another engine of greater capacity. The road is regarded as a success, and answers all the purposes of a first-class iron road. The road has cost about $1,200 per mile. By this road 50,000 pounds can be sent twice a day.

THE Rochester Union says: "While in Congress Hall, Commodore Vanderbilt stepped to the cigar stand and directed the young man in attendance to hand him a fifty-cent cigar, after which he directed that cigars costing twenty cents each be given to others in his party, adding that such were good enough for them. Those who witnessed the transaction say that there was nothing in his manner that indicated that the Commodore was anything else but in earnest."

VINEGAR BITTERS THE GREATEST YET.—A few doses stir the life-current; sluggishness departs, pain vanishes, and after continued use of the remedy the whole body glows with a new energy and a new being. Purge the blood and every organ will perform its function perfectly. The stomach will be no longer tortured with Dyspepsia; the lungs will be free from Consumption, the liver active, the heart healthy, the brain clear, the nerves braced, and the mind elastic. Use "VINEGAR BITTERS," and purge your blood. Whether the disease be Fever, Consumption Dyspepsia, Affection of the Liver, or Kidneys, Dropsy, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Gout, or pains and aches of any kind, attack it in its stronghold, the blood—the fountain of life—and it will soon surrender and abandon the outposts. To do this you must have the "VINEGAR BITTERS;" there is no complaint to which the human system is liable, that will not yield to its influence, and there are thousands which no other remedial agent will remove.—[Com.

IN his book on Chronic Diseases, Dr. Pierce says of his Golden Medical Discovery: "God, I believe, has instilled into the roots and plants from which this wonderful medicine is extracted, the healing properties, by the use of which Consumption, the scourge of the human family, may in its early stages be promptly arrested and permanently cured. I do not wish to delude, flatter, and than disappoint the afflicted by asserting that this can be accomplished when the lungs are half consumed, as many do who, being devoid of all conscience, aim to humbug the afflicted, that they may sell their often worse than worthless compounds. But if my Golden Medical Discovery is employed in the first or early stages of the disease, I know from ample observation and actual test in hundreds of cases, that it will arrest the disease and restore health and strength. 653

A Disease with a Thousand Symptoms.

Dyspepsia is the most perplexing of all human ailments. Its symptoms are almost infinite in their variety, and the forlorn and despondent victims of the disease often fancy themselves the prey, in turn, of every known malady. This is due, in part, to the close sympathy which exists between the stomach and the brain, and in part, also, to the fact that any disturbance of the digestive function necessarily disorders the liver, the bowels and the nervous system, and affects, to some extent, the quality of the blood. A medicine that, like Hostetter's Bitters, not only tones the stomach but at the same time controls the liver, produces a regular habit of body, braces the nerves, purifies the fluids and "ministers to a mind diseased," is therefore the true and only specific for chronic indigestion. Such is the operation of this famous vegetable restorative. It not only cures dyspepsia, but also all concomitants and consequences. Moreover, it is invaluable as a preventive of indigestion. No one who chooses to take half a wineglassful of this agreeable appetizer and stomachic habitually three times a day will ever be troubled with oppression after eating, nausea, sour eructations, or any other indications of a want of vigor in the digestive and assimilating organs. The debility and languor superinduced by hot weather are immediately and permanently relieved by the Bitters, and persons who are constitutionally inclined to look upon life "as through a glass, darkly," will be apt to take a brighter and more hopeful view of the situation under the genial influence of this unwholesome medicinal stimulant.

CONSUMPTION And Its Cure.

WILLSON'S

Carbolated Cod Liver Oil

Is a scientific combination of two well-known medicines. Its theory is first to arrest the decay, then build up the system. Physicians find the doctrine correct. The really startling cures performed by Willson's Oil are proof.

Carbolic Acid positively arrests Decay. It is the most powerful antiseptic in the known world. Entering into the circulation, it at once grapples with corruption, and decay ceases. It purifies the sources of disease.

Cod Liver Oil is Nature's best assistant in resisting Consumption.

Put up in large wedge-shaped bottles, bearing the inventor's signature, and is sold by the best Druggists. Prepared by

VINEGAR BITTERS

PURELY VEGETABLE FREE FROM ALCOHOL

DR. WALKER'S CALIFORNIA VINEGAR BITTERS

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked. "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS, please say you saw the advertisement in this paper.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, Aug. 28, 1873

Spain is surely a troubled nation. Three armed parties are now waging a triangular civil war in her borders. Anarchy, in its wildest excesses holds high carnival.

The New York Central Railroad company are now engaged in constructing the most wonderful line of rails in the world, being no lees than four tracks from New York City to Buffalo. Two of these tracks will be used exclusively for freight.

Grant, we know, was elected and reelected President, has demoralized the public service, brought his high office into disrepute by making it family property, accepted presents from men to be paid for with offices, foisted a salary steal law upon a country groaning under taxation, all in the name of the bloody battle fields.

The lawyers are evidently ahead in Minnesota politics, as nearly everywhere else. The Republican ticket has a lawyer for Governor, a lawyer for Secretary of State, a lawyer of course, for Attorney General, and a banker for Treasurer; other professional men, 0; farmers, 0; mechanics, 0; laboring men, 0.

Thomas D Evans was until recently Deputy United States Marshal for the Middle District of Tennessee, and added up $10,000 in twelve months. He was found out, and on examining his bond it was discovered to be a forgery. Evans attended Grant meetings last November, and this coming November he will be tried for practising his principles.

The Detroit Free Press thinks it was most exceedingly fortunate that the desperadoes who robbed the railway train selected Iowa instead of Tennessee, Alabama or some Southern State, or the cry of "Ku-Klux" would have again been heard in the land and the administration would have found a new excuse for interfering with the State governments.

Hon. W. E. Niblack, in an open letter to a newspaper in his district defends his conduct in taking his portion of the back pay. Up to this time Mr. Niblack's record on this question has been all that his friends could desire, and consistent with the honest man that we know him to be, but his taking the money has done the business for him, and destroyed his usefulness. He voted each time against the increase, to finally surrender when the money was offered him.

Under a Republican President and Congress, Grant's salary has been increased to $50,000 a year. This is $137 a day for each day in the year, and if mechanics save their earnings a dollar a day, it requires the net earnings of 137 men to pay the salary. Of the farmer's grain it takes, each day, 114 bushels of wheat at $1.20 per bushel, or 342 bushels of corn at 40c a bushel. You are a pretty farmer if your whole year's crop will pay the President one day. These burdens may be heavy, but don't murmer. Stick to your party! You will get used to it after while!

Vice President Wilson has been elected President of the Cuban League in New York, an organization formed to aid the insurgents in Cuba in overthrowing Spanish rule on that Island. And thus is the equilibrium restored. While the spaniards have an able and persistent Cabinet advocate in the person of Secretary Fish, it is no more than just that the Cubans, who are the weaker party, should secure an embassador still nearer the throne. And a Senator who could shelter his credit Mobelier operations behind the remains of his dead wife. is scarcely the man to detect any impropriety in a Vice President of the United States acting as President of a foreign revolutionary league.

A Determined effort is being made by the leaders of the Republican party in the South Bend District to bring Schuyler Colfax from his disgraced retirement, and place him on the track for congress. The Smiler, however, fearful of the terrible castigation which inevitably awaits him in the event of his again coming before the public, is loth to accept. Besides the popular disgust is such, even among Republicans, at his shuffling and contemptable course in the Credit Mobilier business that a humiliating defeat would be almost sure to follow his nomination. Between Colfax, the partner of Oakes Ames and Nesbitt, Jasper Packard, the salary grabber, the Radicals of the district are in a bad way, and the indications of the return of an honest Democrat to Congress are very flattering.

The Enquirer remarks that "there is at least one point of difference between the Democratic party and the Republican party in the matter of the salary steal. The Democratic party has denounced the offenders among its ranks without stint and without exception. The Republican party speakes of its chief offender in these words. "We reaffirm our confidence in President Grant, and in the wisdom, integrity and success of the administratoin of his high office." Grant receives ten times as much from the salary advance as any other sinner against economy and public virtue, and, owing to his position, has a responsibility attaching to him in this matter in about the same proportion above any member of Congress. Grant alone might have prevented this depletion of the Treasury; instead of doing that he urged and caused it And the Republican party in Ohio formally praises his "wisdom, integrity and success!"

Mr McLellan was a clerk in the General Post office at Washington, and he was possesed of highly educated fingers. He was celebrated for his ability to pick out the letters which contained money. He was likewise intensely loyal, and he swore by all the gods on high Olympus that the Adminstration should be sustained if it took every dollar that passed though the Washington Post office. By diligent application for three years he succeeded in accumulating the snug sum of $40,000. And then, being of "good family," he was kindly allowed to resign, and the authorities could not find it in their hearts to wound his tender sensibilities by arresting him. We await information as to whether his operations were carried on in the names of the bloody battle fields, the tattered flags, the empty sleeves, the nameless graves, or the gaping wounds of the late unholy rebellion.

Does Delano steal the public money in the name of the bloody battle-fields?

Did subsidy Pomeroy and Caldwel' bribe their way to the Senate in the name of bleeding Kansas?

Did Oakes Ames corrupt the Christian Statesmen in the name of "the men who died that the country might live?"

Shall Republicans steal ad libitum, ad infinitum, because claiming to be surrounded by the halo ot a war record?

Did Carolina Patterson buy his way to the Senate in the name of the bloody battle-fields, the wooden legs and the armless sleeves?

Did Patterson, of New Hampshire, take his slice of the Credit-Mobilier steal, and lie about it in the name of the bloody battle fields?

Did the Credit Mobilier statesmen rob the country of $50,000,000 in the name of the bloody battle fields, of armless sleeves and wooden legs?

Did Schuyler Colfax accept thousands of dollars from a Government contractor, and accept thousands of dollars from Oakes Ames, and then lie about it, for the sake of the men who fought in the wicked war and who now lie in soldiers' graves?

THE TREASURY DEFICIT.

The Tribune in an able article shows that there is in the Treasury a deficit of about thirteen millions of dollars. This is higher than our information has stated it, but not so high as it has been given by the Herald. The Tribune also avers that during the month of June there was a nominal addition of twelve millions to the gold in the Treasury, but not a dollar of gold was really taken there. This agrees with the explanation which we yesterday published from our Washington correspondent to the effect that the syndicate, being unable to make their payments for bonds, had some eleven millions put to their credit which they had not really paid in. In other words, the Treasury Department loaned them eleven millions in gold to make up the amount of money which they were bound to furnish but could not.

Our correspondent alleges, however, that even apart from this clandestine and improper transaction, there is still a deficit of ten millions in the cash account of the Treasury. In other words, the books show that there ought to be ten millions more than actually is there. What has become of this great sum? Has it been lost? Has it been carried off? Or is it merely an inaccuracy in book keeping? And how can such an inaccuracy occur in a public office like the Treasury of the United States?

The colored voters of Ohio, are just finding out that the Republican party is using them as a cats paw in elections, and are disposed to object by the following resolutions passed in their convention last week:

"Resolved, That we, the colored voters of the State of Ohio, in Convention assembled, do protest against the unjust discrimination permitted toward us by the representatives of the party whom we aid in securing official positions.

"Resolved, That the colored voters of this State do not consider themselves under eternal obligations to a party which favors us as a class only in proportion as it is driven by its own necessities.

"Resolved, That the colored men of the State are hereby urged to refrain from unconditionally pledging themselves to the nominees of their local conventions, and that they use their best discrimination in determining for themselves, in each locality, whom to vote for, or even whether to vote at all.

If the authorities of the Fort Wayne, Muncie & Indianapolis road would connect their trains with one of the trains each way on the Grand Rapids road, it would be a great advantage to many people in Northern Indiana, and to themselves. The State Fair at Indianapoils would probably receive a liberal visitation from this section if there was any direct connection of these roads at Fort Wayne.—Lagrange Standard

Let the Grand Rapids and Indiana rail road, connect one of her trains with this road. The Muncey now connects regularly with the Saginaw at the same depot in Fort Wayne.

On Friday and Saturday of last week Col. Robertson and Mr. Rudisill, of Fort Wayne, and R. Louisville Industrial Exposition.

The second National Industrial Exposition at Louisville opens on the second of September next. In an invitation extended to the editor of this paper we learn that the Directors of the Exposition have perfected every arrangement necessary to making the display the grandest and most varied ever seen in this country. Those who attended the Louisville Exposition last year can recall the pleasure and surprise which they felt on entering the vas building, filled with its treasures of Art Industry, Mechanism, Handiwork and Scientific collections. We are promised this year even a greater and more attractive display. Anticipating this, no one can afford to forego the enjoyment of spending a day or more in the Louisville Exposition. Reduced rates by Railroad and River have been secured, which will enable parties to visit the Exposition at comparatively small expense. The increased Hotel accommodations and traveling facilities in Louisville, together with the natural attraction of the city will make a visit to that place in September or October both pleasant and profitable.

The brick work on Shaffer's new furnistore will be completed next week.

The "bower dance," in the Hall last Thursday was well patronized.

A Chale Cogswell, at Corunna, eloped taking everything with him but his debts.

Look and see if your name is in the Roll of Honor this week.

Meeks is going to invent another patent the first Thursday in next month.

There don't seem to be much doing on the center of the new brick block.

Look out for ague weather, say those who pretend to know.

The roof is going on the mammoth building for the Hub and Spoke Factory

There is scarcely any sickness in this vicinity. Quite a disappoint to the Docs.

Now is the time to buy your winter's wool and save the profits of the speculator.

We will soon want a 100 cords of wood, on subscription. Commence hauling any time.

Its impossible to get enough beer to supply the demand here on Saturday night.

The plasters have finished their work in the new Odd Fellows building. Mr. Stafford has done a splendid job.

There seems to be plenty of rain this week, and the damp weather brings over coats into line.

A man was killed at Columbia City Tues last, trying to jump on an Eel River train while in motion.

Joseph Robbins, Sr., has sold his block of lots to James Dragoo, who is about to erect a large brick residence thereon.

The German dedication last Sunday was largely attended, there being a large number from aborad.

A team of horses made an attempt to runaway, in front of the COURIER office, last Monday, but they were stopped before any damage was done.

Mr. Miller, of the firm of Miller & Casebeer, went east yesterday for a new stock of dry goods, notions, &c. Look for the largest stock ever brought to Auburn.—No shoddy.

One man was found drunk on the streets last Tuesday, and carefully lodged in our exquisite jail for a few hours by the Marshall. A few hours generally suffices.

Mr. Enos Kuhlman is building a handsome gothic house, on Jackson street, north of the school house. A handsome brick residence is also going up below.—This street is destined to be one of the finest in the place.

The new elevator of the Eel River road has reached its height, and will be enclosed in a few days. If some body don't ook a "lettle ou-it" they will loose a box of cigars, for that building is to be done before the cars run to Butler.

The new school law requires the organization of a board of education on the first day of September, whose duty shall be the determination of the text books to be used in the public schools for the ensuing three years.

Large crowds of people are at the depo just before train time, and almost all of them are strangers.

We are requested to state that the coming term of school to commence next Monday, will be free to all, and no tuition will be charged as some imagine.

A man by the name of Frank Stuck, while engaged in deepening a well at Albion a few days ago was suffocated by the "damps."

We learn that a severe hail storm done considerable damage to the corn near Butler last Thursday. The corn was knocked down, the heavy hail pounding it to fragments.

Maj. Sprott was taken suddenly ill with cholera morbus last Monday night and for some time his life was dispaired of, but we are glad to state that he is now gradually recovering.

Queen's circus showed here last Thursday to a good audience. With the exception of the Arabs, whose performance are wonderful, the circus did not amount to much.

The fair at Logansport will commence Sept. 19th lasting four days. Those intending to go to the Indianapolis Exposition will find it advantageous to stop a day at this point.

An alligator has been discovered in the "big sink" near Albion. The New Era says it was about two feet long, and amuses itself by pawing away the dirt as fast as it is deposited.

We are in receipt of complimentary to the Williams county fair to be held at Bryan, Ohio, Sept. 16th to 18th. Many new features have been added, and the fair promises to be a success.

Barnum keeps constantly on hand, a his country residence in Bridgeport, duplicate Giraffes, Sea Lions, Rhinoceros, Impfoos, and other rare and costly animals to supply any sudden loss by accident or death.

We notice that surrounding counties are holding Old Settlers meetings and we don't see why DeKalb County should not get up an organization of this kind. Let a call be made.

We know of a certain young gent, who unless he stops keeping a man's daughter up so late, will have a head put "off him.' The old man is getting cross, you had better stop a lettle, Jim.

Messrs. Abright & Shepherd are disposing of a large number of organs this season which are giving great satisfaction.—They have also received some handsome goods in the watch and jewelry line which everybody should see.

W. W. Humes has re-opened the Boot & Shoe store in rear of Shaffer's new building and is ready now to supply the trade with goods in this line. He will soon move into the Odd Fellows' building where the stock will be largely increased.

There is not a greater luxury in the world than a nice fitting shirt. Have you one? If not go to Moderwell & Fowler, near the Aveline House, and get one of their splendid fits and you will be happy while it lasts, at least.

Remember the trotting, pacing and running races to-morrow and Saturday.—Brown Billy, from Fort Wayne, will be there, and we understand Toledo, Jackson, Hillsdale and other points will be well represented. Look out for a loud time at Waterloo

There was in attendance, at the dedication of the new German Church, last Sabbath, Revs. Stinbach, of Fairfield Center and Boase, of Kendallville, each preached during the day in German, and the Rev. Steub, of Fort Wayne, in English in the evening.

If you want to see a picture of profound contempt, ask a lazy loafer who comes to you to beg a dime or borrow a quarter, to go to work in your garden earn it. The look of lofty indignation and injured dignity that you will receive is worth the pencil of a Raphael.

The popular Carpet store of Ellsworth, Andrew & Co., of Fort Wayne, has been removed to No. 26 east Berry street, one of the finest buildings in the city. They have largely increased their stock and defy competion in prices. When you go to the city, give them a call. They are responsible and keep no shoddy goods.

Mr. Baker, east of town, now asks only $24,000 for his farm, because the railroads have increased the value of land, yet he did not give a cent to the railroads. He would have taken $8,000 before the two new roads were put under work. Pretty good investment considering the capital employed. Imagine the entire town made up of such citizens and where would the railroads be?

For Sale.

The undivided one-half, with privilege of whole, of a new Steam Flouring Mill situated in the town of Auburn. The mill commands a good custom and merchant trade, and is finely located. For particulars enquire of, 4t R. ELSON, Dentist.

The Kane Bros., of Fort Wayne, have erected a most beautiful and costly block of buildings on Main street, just north of the old Fruit House, opposite the Exchange Hotel. When they get their large and varied stock of toys, notions, &c., displayed therein it will be a treat to go in and gaze on the scene.

Roadmaster Beckley of the Saginaw Road has tendered his resignation of that office and will leave the road in a few days. Mr. Beckley has proved a prompt and reliable officer, and his industry and capability will recommend wherever he may go. We regret that this road is to lose so valuable an officer.

Four railroads are being pushed forward to early completion through the so-called Black Swamp, which must, when opened, rapidly develope that fertile region. The Continental, the Baltimore & Ohio, the Coldwater and the Woodville road—all graded and iron being laid.—The timber will dissappear and be speedily succeeded with prosperous farms.—Northwestern Ohio is rapidly becoming not only the garden of Ohio, but of the Northwestern territory.

The Court House at Auburn, DeKalb County, Indiana, is in latitude, 41 degrees 14 minutes north, and longitude, west from Greenwich in arc, 85 degrees; longitude west from Greenwich in time, 5 hrs. 40 minutes.

Longitude west from Washington in arc 7 degrees, 57 minutes; longitude west from Washington in time, 31 minutes, 46 seconds.

True magnetic variation of the needle, 2 degrees, 30 minutes east.

The above figures are obtained from actual observations made by C. S. Woodard.

How often have we seen the blooming maiden, upon whose face smiles danced like moonbeams upon the bosom of a sleeping sea, and whose life gave promise of happiness unalloyed and hope requitted, sitting in the sanctuary with a huge wag of gum in her mouth, and her beautiful chin rising and falling like waves upon the ocean, while the meek pastor endeavored to point her to the new Jerusalem.—Col City Post.

Our Railroad man, Mr. Shinn, was in town again last Monday. He shinned it all the way from Royal Oak, Ohio, and has been over the supposed line of this road from that point to Lake Michigan several times. He calls it the Newark, Auburn & Western Railroad, and looks upon it as an accomplished fact. Though Mr. Shinn does not impress one by the clothes he wears, we must not always judge by personal appearances. He wears a homespun blouse and a dirty shirt that corresponds exactly. He has neither boots nor shoes, and his blue drilling pants shows off an admirable foot (in length) to perfection. He is a quiet, inoffensive person, has neither chick nor child.

We do not know who has charge of the east end of Haviland & Murray's contract on the Baltimore & Ohio railroad, but we do say it is the best job of grading we have seen for a long time. The foreman that has charge of that work understands his little business, because it is workmanlike and handsome as a grade can be.

Davenport & Co have a new fly paper. Instead of poisoning these insects, it holds them fast the moment they touch it, being of a sticky nature.

Some Poetry.

A brilliant and accomplished lunatic poet, of Fort Wayne, contributes a poem this week. He is a military genius of the non-commissioned species, and opens up with a "Satire on Flirting." He is recognized the world over as Sergeant Ed Kennedy. We have engaged him at an enormous salary, 75 cents a year. As he was only two minutes writing up this sad affair, a careful estimate will disclose the fact that it is dirt cheap. The first stanza implies a terrible mystery, delicately exposed:

What makes the ladies of our town
So handsome and fair?
Is stuffing their bosoms
And wearing false hair.

For the benefit of our lady friends we will state that this is dated at Ft Wayne and means the ladies of that city, of course. Again

They flirt and coquet
With Tom, Dick and Harry
And deceive the poor fellows
When asked if they'll marry

The Sergeant knows how it is himself. But they finally receive their punishment as he records in the third verse:

But once in a while
Some flirt will get married
And then on a tour of enjoyment
To Europe she's carried.

As the subject is a sad one, the author refroins from further comment, while he goes and takes a rip, at the little shop around the corner. We solicit contributions of a similar character, which we agree to insert at the low price of fifty cents a line.

Remember the races at Waterloo to-morrow.

Again we are pleased to announce the names of a few more who have come squarly up to the work, and discharged an honest debt by paying their subscription to the COURIER. There are a few yet whose names we would like to see in the same list. We have not got our Roll of Infamy quite ready yet.

The following gentlemen constitute the Grand Jury for the September term of Circuit Court.

GRAND JURY.

Daniel Walters, Homer Abels, Steuart Wartenbee, Samuel Lauferty, Emanuel Neidic, Joseph Showalter, Israel Shearer Peter Losier, Anthony Swineford, Elicis H. Palmer, Abraham M. Coy, and Eber M. Cole.

PETIT JURY

SUSPICIOUS.—The contractors of the Baltimore & Ohio line, near Avilla are causing some little trouble among their hands by their non payment of wages due the force for May and June. The money for July and August has been deposited, according to the estimates made by the company, but it is not to be paid over until the contractors furnish the pay rolls for the preceding months all properly receipted. This they have failed to do and last Tuesday, the day appointed for this purpose, the men came to town for their money, but the contractors were not visible. Is this an effort at swindling or are the men to get their money promptly? Messrs. Higgins Brothers and Squires are the contractors, and we have always heard of them as honorable men. We believe there is a mistake somewhere and that the men will get their money without delay.

If any of our readers do not believe that a debt of seven dollars can be paid with dollar, we will cite them to the following incident, where one cent paid a debt of seven cents:

By some means or other it happened that the office boy of a bank owed one of the clerks three cents, the clerk owed the cashier two cents, and the cashier owed the office boy two cents. The office boy, having a cent in his pocket, concluded to diminish his debt, and therefore handed the bronze over to the clerk, who, in tuan paid half of his debt by giving the coin to the cashier. The latter handed the penny to the office boy, remarking, 'Now I only owe you one cent.' The office boy again passed the penny to the clerk, who passed it back to the office boy, and the latter squarred all accounts by paying it to the clerk, thereby discharging the entire debt.

The Bellefountaine Examiner thus speaks of J. N.

The intellectual conqueror of the world —"J. N." of the laureled brow and exuberant hair—paid our town a flying visit on Thursday. The face of the mighty orator was radiant with the triumph which has crowned his immortal theory of reconciliation, and he spoke confidently of the time when northern and southern heroes should be glorified in equal measure by a country "redeemed, regenerated, disenthralled." And as he spoke, his face glowed with the glory that was with in him—glowed even

"Like Moussa's cheeks as down the mount he trod

The Immortal writes us that owing to a misunderstanding he could not possibly be here on the day appointed, but assures us that there will be no postponment this time, and requests us to announce Thursday evening the 4th of September, as time of his appearance. Don't fail to be on hand.

THURSDAY, AUG. 28, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THERE is no truth in the report that a large number of New York Custom-House officials had been arrested for fraudulent practices.

DISPATCHES from New York represent that a bitter conflict between gold speculators is believed to be imminent; that the gold clique is manipulating the market for a currency lock-up, and that a strong combination exists to repeat the experiences of the memorable Black Friday. The bears have urgently petitioned the President to interfere....A singular conflict between Federal and State authority [illegible] in Massachusetts. It seems that as soon as the part which the Federal Government performs with reference to the beer that is manufactured in that State—which is to tax it—is completed, the State Government performs its part—which is to destroy it. The manufacturers feel that there is something in this which is not strictly equitable, and will therefore appeal to the authorities at Washington either to be protected against the State constabulary, or to be reimbursed as to taxes paid on beer destroyed under the State law.

THE seventh annual reunion of the Army of the Cumberland will be held in Pittsburgh on the 17th and 18th of September.

A FARMERS' GRANGE has been established in Boston....The New York Sub-Treasury contains more than $30,600,000 in gold coin, besides $10,000,000 in gold bars, $400,000 in silver, and $28,000,000 in currency.

THE city of New York is taking steps to punish the Italian slave-owners in that city. ....George Kellier, reporter of the Brooklyn Union, and George P. Rowe, reporter of the New York Times, were both drowned while bathing on Long Island, a few mornings since.

Black. Gov. Palmer took the ground that the Dartmouth College decision is the law of the land, and cannot be upset short of upsetting or amending the Constitution; that railroad charters are contracts between corporations and the State, and cannot be amended in any material respect without the consent of the corporators; that railroad companies are common carriers, and are subject to the obligations imposed by the common law; that the common law is ample in its powers to correct all abuses of railroads and other carriers, if enforced; and, finally, that we have more laws on the statute-books, additional to the common law, than we can enforce.

KELLAR, the man who murdered his wife, his wife's sister and her two children, in Linn county, Kansas, a few days ago, was taken from the possession of the Sheriff on the 20th of August, by a mob of about 200 citizens, and hanged to the limb of a tree. The Sheriff, having received intimations of the gathering of the mob, had secreted the prisoner in the woods, but was forced by threats of violence to reveal his whereabouts. Judge C. W. Blair and others addressed the mob in behalf of law and order, and entreated them to desist from their unlawful course. The lynchers, who were composed of the best citizens of the section, listened patiently, but they were inexorable. In response the leader of the lynchers said he believed he had done his duty in bringing the prisoner to that place, and he was sure the punishment about to be meted out to him was just. The murderer was in the hands of the people, who could decide what the punishment should be. A vote was taken to decide whether to leave the matter with a committee of twelve to decide the fate of the prisoner or to the Court, and the choice fell in favor of the committee which had charge of Kellar. The committee of twelve were required to cast ballots as to his disposal. Eleven votes were cast, seven for hanging and four for trial. The fate of the prisoner was decided. Nothing could arrest it, and preparations were at once made for the execution. Twelve volunteers were called for, and they stepped promptly forward, among them Boyd, the husband of one of the women murdered, and the father of both children. Kellar was given an opportunity to make remarks. He declined, but denied all knowledge of the murder. He was apparently unaffected by the hasty preparations going on. He was offered a chance of confession to a minister, but declined. The two executioners then pinioned him and stood him on the top of a wagon. A rope dangled from a limb of the tree already selected. He still had hope of the South, because whatever men might be, he never yet had seen reconstructed women, and, while men of this day are mightier than the principles for which they had struggled, he yet hoped the children who succeed them would grow up to maintain and perpetuate them, and redeem all that we had lost....A New York Herald correspondent has mysteriously disappeared in the interior of Kentucky, and it is feared he has been murdered.

AWFUL TRAGEDY.

Collision on the Chicago and Alton Railroad—Forty-three Persons Killed and Wounded.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Aug. 18.]

Another of those railroad horrors which periodically thrill the country occurred Saturday night on the Chicago and Alton railroad, between Willow Station and Lemont, about 22 miles from this city. The lightning express which leaves at 9 o'clock every evening for St. Louis started at the usual hour, and, without any premonition of disaster, flew on at the usual rate of speed—twenty-five miles an hour. It was Saturday night, and many persons were going to the country to spend Sunday, and many others who had been in the city on business were returning to their homes along the line. The train consisted of a locomotive, a baggage-car, a smoking-car, two coaches, and two sleeping-cars. The cars were well filled, particularly the smoking-car. The train was due at Willow Station at 9:55, and was on time. It is notusual for this train to stop at that station, but on this occasion it was necessary, in order to take on a sleeping-car which was brought from St. Louis by the train which left that city in the morning.

The train started from Willow Station, according to the best evidence, ten minutes behind, and, as it is customary on this road to make up lost time, undoubtedly the rate of speed was somewhat accelerated. The conductor and engineer knew they were to pass a coal train at Lemont, seven miles distant, but unhappily that train did not wait, as it should have done, but came on toward the passenger train, expecting to make Willow Station. It was a race for life. The conductor and engineer of the coal train knew that the passenger train, laden with precious lives, was in front, and if they did not reach a switch by a certain time, a collision was inevitable. Both trains were rushing toward destruction. On they flew over the iron way through the darkness, the speed increasing at every revolution of the wheels. The passengers in the sleeping-cars were preparing to retire, or had already done so. Those in the coaches were looking forward to reaching their destination, where expectant families awaited their coming. The suspicion of danger never crossed the minds of any, when suddenly, without a moment's warning, not even a whistle, the two trains were locked in an embrace of death, and in one moment wives were made widows, children became fatherless, mourning was sent to the threshold of many happy homes, and sorrow that can never be eradicated pierced many hearts. There were three concussions,—first, when the engine, met and were destroyed; second, when the baggage-car struck and was smashed into fragments; and third, when the smoking-car collided and leaped in the air, alighting on the fractured boiler of the freight engine. The remains of the passenger-train engine were thrown from the track, toward the east, and so were the ruins of the baggage-car. Then came the smoking-car on the top of the boiler. The fore part of the car was burst open by the force with which it struck, the hind wheels remaining on the track, and there it stood at an angle of thirty degrees, the passengers imprisoned in the broken iron and wood, while the deadly steam came up with terrific force from the boiler below, scalding those whom it touched, instantly peeling off the skin, and causing the most excruciating agony. One moment was sufficient to cause death, but many were there several minutes before being extricated. They breathed the burning atmosphere. One breath was fatal, the inner surface of the chest and lungs being fearfully scorched.

As soon as they recovered from the first shock, the passengers in the two coaches and in the sleeping-cars, who were uninjured, did all they could to rescue the sufferers. This humane work was superintended by Mr. B. B. Hawley, of Normal, who was the first to mount the smoking-car and begin.

With him was a Texan named Magee, who worked nobly. They lifted out the sufferers in the rear of the car first, and then placed a plank on which those in the elevated end were slid down. All were handled as gently as possible, and laid tenderly on the grass. While this was being done, others lighted a fire, taking for fuel the broken timber, and the light shone luridly on the sufferers, who were moaning in their agony. The sleeping-cars were emptied of passengers, and one by one the wounded were placed in the berths, and received such attention as could be given them in the absence of medical attendance. Soon an engine came from Lemont, bringing four physicians; but when they came they could do little or nothing. Supposing they would be called upon to give surgical aid, they came equipped with surgical instruments, which were not required, and the liniment and oil which were so badly needed were still three miles away at Lemont.

There was but little murmuring among the passengers. A few broke out in words of indignation against the officers of the road for what they conceived to be the unreasonable delay in the arrival of assistance, but generally those who escaped were too much concerned about the wounded, and too busy in attending to their wants, to think of anything else.

The cause of the accident was the inexcusable foolhardiness of the conductor of the freight train in leaving Lemont when he knew that it was a matter of life and death—that it was a mere chance if he could reach a switch in time—that it was his duty to remain there until the passenger train, which had the right of way, was safely by, and that any way he had no right to run any risk or take any chances. Mr. Huston, station-agent at Lemont, entreated him not to leave the station, and so uneasy was Mr. Huston when he did leave, that he listened until he heard the concussion, and then he went to work to secure the necessary aid.

The night was dark, the sky cloudy, the waning moon shed no light, the stars were visible overhead, but a thick fog covered the surface of the earth, and lights could not be seen for any great distance. That made no difference, however. With the same reckless management of the freight train the accident might have occurred in the full blaze of noonday. There would be nothing to prevent it. A curve in the road hid the trains from each other, and the engineers could do nothing to stop their engines. In this case nothing seems to have been attempted. There was no Rafferty there, by a deed of heroism to lighten this gloomy tale.

The intelligence of the accident reached the city about 10:30 o'clock Saturday evening by a dispatch from Lemont, and was conveyed to Mr. McMullen, Superintendent of the road. He immediately sent messengers in every direction for surgeons and medical supplies, and ordered an ambulance and wrecking train made up immediately. At 1 o'clock the train started, the most of the passengers having only an indistinct idea of their mission, there being only a dread presentiment that something awful was ahead. The relief reached the wreck soon after 2 o'clock; additional comforts were given to the wounded, the track was cleared, and soon after daylight the caravan of death was homeward bound. Six were dead, and the number of the wounded was more than forty; some were groaning, others were gasping for air and crying for water. On the journey home two more died, and eight dead bodies were born to the Morgue. Most of the wounded were taken to the County Hospital, some to the West Side Briggs House, and others to the Gault House, while several whose injuries were of a slighter nature went to their homes or selected such hotels as they thought fit. During Sunday and Monday other deaths were reported, and on Monday evening the total number of deaths had reached thirteen. Five more are reported so badly injured as to be beyond all hopes of recovery, and no doubt the list of killed will reach twenty before the middle of the week.

The Chicago papers of the 19th give further particulars of the disaster. The number of dead has been swelled to seventeen, and will probably be increased to a still higher figure, as several of the wounded, it is thought, cannot possibly recover. The total number of killed and wounded is fifty-one. The following is a complete list of the killed:

Capt. John W. Smith, Warden of the Illinois State Penitentiary.
J. W. Fleury, Purchasing Agent of the Illinois State Penitentiary.
Capt. William Lettie, Springfield, Ill.
Roger J. Brass, Chicago.
Thomas Morton, Chicago.
James O'Neill, Joliet, merchant.
Theodore Steng, Texas.
Jacob Cundet, Oshkosh, Wis.

Conrad Webber, Chicago.
Jacob Lauser, Joliet, Ill.
William Davis, fireman of coal train.
Joseph B. Michie, Jackson, Tenn.
John Metzler, Joliet, brakeman of coal train.
Thomas E. Pollard.

The engineer of the coal train has been arrested and imprisoned. The conductor, Beane, has fled, but efforts are being made to secure his arrest.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Aug. 20.]

Four of the murdered victims of the Sag accident were buried in Springfield yesterday, and two in this city. One more has died, and three others are declared by the doctors to be unable to live longer than a day or two. This will swell the death-list to 21. The Coroner's investigation is still under way. One of the witnesses examined was a farmer, who saw Murderer Beane after the collision, and was told by him that he "forgot" all about the passenger train. The testimony of the engineer of the freight train, who was brought in from prison under guard, gave no new information except some facts concerning Conductor Beane's general inefficiency, whom he said he did not consider a competent man. His efforts to throw the blame on his superior were manifest. He repeated the story of the loss of time by his watch, but did not make it any more plausible than at first.

A Novel Propeller.

A gentleman in Greenpoint, last Saturday afternoon, exhibited to a few invited guests a model-boat propelled by a contrivance entirely new, at least untried hitherto in its application to steamboat propulsion. The model was about two feet long, shaped like a craft intended rather for carrying freight than for speed, resembling in its lines and proportions an ordinary coal barge. The propelling contrivance is simply an elongated rudder, made of two flexible slabs, which for practical use will be made of short and narrow pieces of wood, fitting closely together and swung from a straight piece that forms the top edge of the rudder, leaving the lower part to be acted upon by a spirally-curved rod that revolves inside of the rudder, imparting to its flexible sides the serpentine or eel-like motion that drives the boat though the water, by a principle of resistance similar to that of the ordinary propeller. The inventor feels certain that a very high rate of speed for boats can be attained with this propeller. He disclaims any designs on the canals, simply aiming at a principle for navigating shallow waters. The motion of the little two-foot model through the water was stately and very easy, just like that of a large vessel, and with sufficient velocity to demonstrate effectually the success of the "eel motion"—as the inventor calls it—for driving boats—at least on a small scale—at a fair rate of speed through the water.—New York Times.

Night Air.

An extraordinary fallacy is the dread of night air. What air can we breathe at night, but night air? The choice is between the pure night air from without and foul night air from within. Most people prefer the latter. An unaccountable choice. What will they say, if it is proved to be true that fully one half of all the diseases we suffer from is occasioned by people sleeping with their windows shut? An open window, most nights in the year, can never hurt any one. This is not to say that light is not necessary for recovery. In great cities, night air is often the best and purest air to be had in the twenty-four hours. I could better understand shutting the windows in town during the day than during the night, for the sake of the sick.

The absence of smoke, the quiet, all tend to make night the best time for airing the patient. One of our highest medical authorities on consumption and climate has told me that the air in London is never so good as after ten o'clock at night. Always air your room, from outside air, if possible. Windows are made to open, doors are made to shut—a truth which seems extremely difficult of apprehension. Every room must be aired from without—every passage from within. But the fewer passages there are in a hospital the better.—Florence Nightingale.

Interest on Capital.

We extract the following remarkable facts from a lecture by Rev. W. P. Groom, editor of the New York Mercantile Journal, and think they cannot fail to be of interest as illustrating the rapid increase of capital when well invested.

Many men carelessly conclude that three per cent. is just one-half of six per cent. But this is not the case, as will be seen from the following statement of facts:

If one dollar be invested, and the interest added to the principal annually at the rates first named, we shall have the following result as the accumulation of one hundred years:

1 dollar,	100 years,	at 1	per cent	$2
"	"	3	"	19
"	"	6	"	340
"	"	8	"	2,203
"	"	9	"	5,543
"	"	10	"	18,809
"	"	12	"	84,675
"	"	15	"	1,174,405
"	"	18	"	15,045,007
"	"	25	"	2,551,799,404

There are probably few, however, familiar with the subject of rapid increase of capital put at interest, who would not be startled at the statement that the cost of the outfit of Christopher Columbus, in his first voyage of discovery, put at interest at six per cent., would, by this time, have amounted to more than the entire money value of this continent, together with the accumulations from the industry of all who have lived upon it. If any doubt this, let them reckon the amount, estimating the entire outfit to have cost only the small sum of five thousand dollars, and remember that money doubles at six per cent. in less than twelve years—or accurately, in eleven years, ten months, and twenty-one days. Allowing it to double every twelve years, this five thousand dollars at interest at six per cent. since 1492, it will be found, would have amounted to $17,895,700,000,000, which estimating the population of the entire continent of America (North and South) to be eighty-five millions, or seven million families (averaging five members each), would give more than a million dollars as a possession of every one of hose. The interest upon a million dollars at six per cent. is sixty thousand dollars, which would now be the princely annual income of these seven million families, from the accumulations up to this time upon so small a sum as that named for the discoverer.

In Hildreth's "History of the United States," it is stated that Manhattan Island, afterwards called New Amsterdam, now called New York, was bought by the Dutch from the Indians for sixty guilders, or twenty-four dollars, and this only two hundred and fifty years ago. And yet if the purchaser could have securely placed that twenty-four dollars where it would have added to the principal annually, at the rate of seven per cent., the accumulation would exceed the present market value of all the real estate of the city and county of New York.

Again, if a man at the age of twenty-five should commence business with a capital of one hundred thousand dollars, and could by any possibility add thereto interest at our legal rate of seven per cent. annually, the result would be (in round numbers) as follows:

Age.	Capital
25	$ 100,00
35	200,00
45	400,00
55	800,00
65	1,600,00
75	3,200,00
85	6,400,00

Now the growth of national wealth is only about three and one-eighth per cent. per annum, notwithstanding the assertion of those who have placed it much higher, though comparing the old valuations with the new (which have been greatly increased), instead of taking as the base of their calculations, as they should have done, the actual number of horses, cattle, hogs, sheep, etc., at the different periods. It is plain, therefore, that the great mistake most men make is in attempting to use borrowed capital at an immensely high rent, ordinarily termed interest, which by the use of gold as currency, is often forced still higher. While the growth of the national wealth remains at the present rate, the average man who attempts to pay even seven per cent. for all the capital he can get, should not expect to avoid bankruptcy as the result.

IN company lately, a number of ladies being present, a young man proposed a conundrum, which he said he had read in the papers. It was this: "When is a lady not a lady?" There was a pause. "Give it up!" said all around, when, to the infinite horror of the whole party, the querist exclaimed: "When she's a little buggy." Nobody laughed; some were demure, some indignant, and some no doubt inclined to scratch the querist's face a little. He was disappointed. Fumbling in his pockets, he pulled out a paper, which, consulting for a moment, he ejaculated: "Oh, I beg your pardon, ladies; I made a mistake. The answer is, "When she's a little sulky." I knew it was some sort of a carriage."

A BORE EXTERMINATOR.—Among the many useful inventions of modern days none deserves to rank higher than an ingenious little machine just invented by an American in Portsmouth, N. H. It is called "the business man's bore abater," and its action is simple and effectual. It consists of a button torpedo with patent nitro-glycerine back-action attachment, that can be worn on the coat like an ordinary button, which it resembles in appearance. When the bore seizes the "abater," it instantly explodes, shivering his hand into a million pieces, and blowing him around the corner into the next street. The inventor, it is stated, has already received orders for all he can manufacture for two years to come.

Cæsarism.

The Washington Chronicle in repeated articles has sought to impose on the country the fact that Gen. Grant's election to a third term may be a necessity, while ostensibly ridiculing the New York Herald's articles on "Cæsarism." The Indianapolis Journal, also a Republican organ, on the other hand, has repeatedly ridiculed the assumption that Grant's election to a third term can, under any circumstances, be contemplated. It has embraced each occasion, however, to make an elaborate argument against the third-term principle, apparently deeming it necessary to arouse public sentiment to oppose it. The country, more or less, are discussing this question of Cæsarism, and it may be appropriate to inquire what Cæsarism is, and who would be likely to favor it.

Cæsarism is the establishment of absolute power in a single hand, the proceeding having the semblance of popular choice. When men speak of Cæsarism in the United States, they do not mean that the form of the Government will be overthrown in a day, or that a person holding the office of President will, by a decree, or a coup d'etat, or by military violence, declare the Republic at an end. Julius Cæsar, in B. C. 49, crossed the Rubicon and entered Rome; in 48 was elected Consul, and the same year temporary Dictator; in August, 47, was again made Dictator; in 46 was made Dictator for ten years; in 45 was declared Pater Patriæ, &c., and Imperator for life, and Dictator. Three times he rejected the crown, and in March, 44, was assassinated. The First Napoleon, hastily returning from Egypt in October, 1799, overturned the Directory, and was made one of three Consuls; in December was made First Consul; in May, 1802, was made sole Consul for ten years; in August of the same year was made Consul for life; in May, 1804, had himself declared Emperor, and in December was crowned. Napoleon III. was elected President in December, 1848, for four years; in December, 1851, declaring that the people wanted him for a longer time, he submitted the question to a popular vote, and was elected President for ten years. A year later, he submitted the question again to a popular vote, and the Empire was declared, less than 254,000 out of 8,000,000 of votes being cast in the negative. In each of these cases, the steps were taken in seeming obedience to the will of the majority. In each case the period required to advance from the lowest to the highest power was about five years, and the result in each case was absolute despotism. Those who discuss the possibilities of Cæsarism in the United States trace the steps thus: A third term; an election for ten years; an election for life; abolition of State Governments; the foundation of a permanent dynasty by popular vote, or what passes for such.

For the present, Cæsarism is a laughing-stock, but it is more than probable that in a very short time it would have the direct or indirect support of several large classes of the population, including the following: 1. The whites of the South. 2. The blacks of the South. 3. The Northern monopolists of all kinds, the land-grabbers, subsidy-grabbers, salary-grabbers, tariff-grabbers. 4. The Federal office-holders.

The first of these classes, taken as a whole, are a sadly discontented people. While such a thing as rebellion or armed opposition to the present form of goverment is utterly gone out of their minds, they are intensely anxious for some change that will release them from the domination of their local Governments. They are prepared for anything that will afford them relief from the carpet-baggers and negroes. The substitution of a military government in place of the present wretched institutions would be welcomed in nearly every Southern State, and has been officially asked for in Louisiana. Nor would the blacks be opposed to Cæsarism if the "Government" wanted it. To them, the Government at Washington is a Providence, a fetish, the fountain power and wealth. They are indebted to the Government for all they have. And for all they expect or desire they look to the Government. They are already the children of a paternal government, and they care not what it may be called, or how it may be constituted, if it promises them forty acres of land and a mule. Cæsarism, therefore, would have no serious opposition, but much effective support, from the whole South, unless Virginia may be an exception.

Among the people of the North, Cæsarism would be popular with the monopolists. They have nothing to gain but everything to fear from popular government, and have everything to gain and nothing to fear from an aristocratic government. They would be the Grandees of the Empire. They would provide the active capital, receiving in return grants of lands, governments of provinces, subsidies, privileges, titles and honors, and become the ruling class. Cæsar's first act was to create a new Senate of 900 members. The two Napoleons created Senators of the Empire at their pleasure; the country eventually footed the bill; but, while the thing lasted, the capitalists of the nation had a grand time. Every species of monopoly would hail Cæsarism with joy. Protected by absolute power from encroachments by the people, it would be all-powerful in a government where one man or a few men held exclusive authority. It would concentrate in support of an American despotism, just as the wealth and capital of Europe upholds monarchy in proportion as the latter keeps down the commonalty.

No man who has given careful attention to the practices of the Federal office-holders since the close of the war has failed to notice that personal aggrandizement and fealty to the appointing power has been the ruling spirit of the class. The revelations in the cases Leet & Stocking, Casey and Packard, Tom Murphy, and other large pensioners on the Treasury, created no other feeling in the average office-holder or office-seeker than envy at their good luck. Under a paternal government, free from investigating committees, with an obsequious press, with no popular clamor, the placemen would enjoy an elysium not possible under the present form of government. Cæsarism would therefore be strong with this class, all of whom would shout lustily for a permanent government.

One of the means by which Napoleon III. silenced discontent was the lavish hand he employed in public works. He "gave employment to labor" by levying taxes to construct public works. There are at this time applications before Congress for a national expenditure of nearly one thousand millions to dig canals, build ships, establish national foundries, construct and operate railroads, and various other projects. This sum can easily be doubled if any prospect of success was furnished. The entire brood of Credit Mobiliers and speculators who itch for the handling of this money would favor Cæsarism,—that being the best form of government for them.

But Cæsarism would find sturdy opponents in the great mass of the Northern people who are not monopolists, are not office-holders or office-seekers, and who are not interested in schemes against the Public Treasury. All the traditions of these people, their religious and secular education, their industrial habits, their political and social hopes and ambitions are entirely hostile to it; and these people will be likely to unite against any proposition in that direction, whether it come in the form of a third election to the Presidency or in any other shape.—Chicago Tribune.

A LOUD CALL FOR CARPENTER.

It Would be Healthy for the Adulterous Junior Senator from Wisconsin to Resign.

[From the New York Tribune.]

We are not in the midst of a hot campaign, and as there is no reason for attacking private character or retailing political scandal or seaside gossip, so there is no excuse for suppressing the truth when its publication is needed, and no pretext for attributing it to partisanship or prejudice. Distinguished public men, Representatives and Senators in Congress, have had the effrontery to stand up in Congress and before their constituents and undertake to defend as shameless a breach of public trust as ever was thrust in the face of a decent people; and instead of a hot outburst of indignant denunciation, there has been only a sort of sick-at-the-stomach turning away from the low-flung self-seeking gang—rascalities have been developed in all departments of the Government that should keep our prisons more than full were justice done—legislation has been bought and sold, and corporations have in the most deliberate and unblushing manner bought seats in the Senate for their retained attorneys—the Legislature has become a market-place, and the polls an arena for violence or bribery—and we settle down to our lower standards of morality, our debasing tendencies and constantly deteriorating moral sense, with complacent calmness, as if to the natural and inevitable.

How far shall we let this numbness of perception, this utter deadness to all sense of shame, carry us? Granted that in the fierceness of our money-getting passion we may put conscience out of court entirely, and sacrifice everything to the main chance—shall we stop at that? Or are we to have sitting at our hearths, as household gods, all shames and crimes? The last great scandal, touched lightly by the press, but bruited everywhere now, is not of avarice and greed, but of intemperance and lust. Open, public, brazen, flaunted in the faces of decent wives and mothers, and of pure daughters and sisters—a shame, foul-fronted, sickening, beastly. Between the sensual sot, of brilliant intellect, but vile associations and depraved habits, who so lately set himself and paramour on public exhibition in this city and at Long Branch—between him and the Presidency of the United States are but two lives, and one of them of the frailest tenure. Is the nation drunken that it sees this large disgrace paraded under its very eyes, and takes into its nostrils the stench of the offense and makes no sign of nausea? Has dead and buried decency no resurrection? Who and where is the clear-thinking statesman—no, not statesman, common man—every-day man—hard-fisted, rough and hearty, but honest way down, true to wife and family and his own manhood—who will roll away the stone from the sepulcher of public virtue? The time calls out for him. The country waits his coming. A nation bowed down with the shame brought on it by its trusted servants, with its face in the dust, prays in its anguish for some convulsion that shall rend the heavens and purify the air.

And the United States Senate—What is its duty? Has it any self-respect left?

Farmers' Wives.

The Detroit Tribune says: If there is a busy place in the world it is the farm-house in America during June and July. There are thousands of cases where one woman does all the labor of the house, besides having the care of one or two children, during this hot, busy season; and we blush, to add that in many instances the men are too heedless to render her such assistance as they could easily perform in the mornings, noons and evenings. It would lighteen her toil and lessen her steps if the fruit and vegetables were brought in from the garden in the morning; if the water was drawn from the well for cooking purposes; if the reservoir on the stove was filled; if the wood was brought close to the stove; if the slops were regularly taken to the compost heap; the skimmed milk brought from the milk room. These chores might all he done by the men and boys during the leisure moments before meals and at the "noonings."

IT will be remembered that in the original trial of the Tichborne case the claimant stated that he was picked up and taken into Melbourne by the Osprey, an American three-masted schooner, and the fact that a British ship of that name was in Melbourne harbor at the time, as developed by the evidence, was considered a damaging blow to his case. But the Baltimore Sun satisfactorily shows that an American brig, subsequently altered to a three-masted vessel, sailed from San Francisco for Melbourne at a date which would make her due there just about the time of the claimant's alleged arrival.

AN Oregon paper states that the rage for the "ie" termination has come to a disastrous conclusion in one family in Portland. A farmer named Ake christened his eldest girl Belle. She had some cards printed in the "ie" fashion, and—well, after looking at the result, she concluded Belle was pretty enough for her, and burned them.

DURING a thunder-storm in Salt Lake City a flash of lightning caught a locust tree, and in its course struck another tree, traveled up the house to the second floor, cutting away the flowers around a glass, traversed the ceiling, making its way out by cutting a groove in the side of the house from top to bottom. No other damage was done.

THE Newark (O.) Advertiser sadly mentions the fact that Tom Corwin rests in an unmarked grave, without so much as the simplest headstone to indicate who sleeps below. It calls upon the State, which was so honored by her loved and distinguished son, to rescue his grave from the oblivion which will otherwise soon blot it from the knowledge of men.

THE Shah was highly amused at seeing a copy of Le Figaro, the other morning, containing on the front page a long letter in Persian characters. The writing was perfectly correct, but, unfortunately, it had been reproduced by photography, and all the letters were reversed. RATHER a laughable incident took place on the entrance of the Shah. The Count and Countess of Manyacres had left Paris for the season, it was thought. They returned, however, suddenly on the day of the arrival of the Shah, and found the entire house in the possession of strangers, who had been accommodated with a good sight of the Shah at so much a head by their speculative butler. P., editor of the Nonconformist, the organ of the English dissenters, lately gave him a dinner, at which the Chairman handed him a check for £10,000, the subscription of a few wealthy friends.

An Invaluable Tea-Set.

MAX ADELER is responsible for the following:

"We are glad to learn that the Emperor of China has issued a decree declaring that if the chief officer of his household handles dishes so carelessly as to break them, he shall be killed. We say we are glad of this, because we hope to have the same regulation put into effect in this country. If it is, about 2,000 hired girls will be executed every week, and we may reasonably hope that the destruction of crockery will be checked. We have stopped it temporarily in our house by having a tea-set made of wrought-iron and painted white. When a new hired girl comes she drops the coffee-pot upon the floor. Finding, with amazement, that it does not break, she thumps it with a flat-iron and drops bricks on it, and goes out and borrows a sledge-hammer and whacks it; and then, perceiving that it is as good as ever, she sits down in front of that coffee-pot and bursts into tears. Then she gives warning, loads up with sugar, beef and butter, for her sick aunt, embezzles three or four hem-stitched handkerchiefs, and any odd pillow-cases that are lying around, and starts for the nearest intelligence office. We wouldn't take a million dollars for that tea-set."

CUNNING LITTLE TOADS.—It is certain that Shakespeare's idea of the toad was inaccurate in two respects. The toad is not "ugly and venomous," and does not wear "a precious jewel in its head." The Rev. J. G. Wood, that excellent naturalist and charming writer, assures us that his children had a trough full of tame toads, each of which answers to its own particular name and comes when called. The children, he says, carry them round the garden, and hold them up to any insect they may chance to fancy, to enable them to swallow it, which they do by a lightning flash of their glutinous tongues. Nay, more; their tender care for their unlovely pets is so great that they bathe and kiss them daily, he declares, just as they themselves are treated by their nurse. Upon one occasion one of the children, who had received an orange, was seen with her own especial toad seated on her hand, partaking with his mistress of the orange in alternate sucks or bites.

Facts in Relation to Patrons of Husbandry in Iowa.

The following are a few of the many advantages which the granges are reaping through their co-operative movement:

At first they encountered the hostility not only of all the retail merchants in their several towns, but also that of the wholesale merchant and the manufacturer. But this hostility has to a great extent been overcome, as the grangers make it a point to deal with home merchants and home manufacturers to as great an extent as possible. Some of the manufacturers say that their agencies cost them from $25,000 to $60,000 per annum, and that they would be glad to deal with the consumers direct, either through the State grange or each separate subordinate grange. There is an old adage that "figures won't lie," and the following are some of the figures which the grangers have been offered, and at which they are at present making purchases.

SEWING MACHINES.

One manufacturer offers his machines as follows:

No. 5, regular price $50, is offered Granges for	$30
No. 6, regular price $55, is offered Granges for	33
No. 7, regular price $60, is offered Granges for	36
No. 8, regular price $65, is offered Granges for	39

Another manufacturer offers the following prices:

Price $65, is offered Granges for	$39.00
Price $70, is offered Granges for	42.00
Price $73, is offered Granges for	43.80
Price $83, is offered Granges for	49.80
Price $95, is offered Granges for	57.00

Corresponding reductions are made in higher-priced machines.

ORGANS.

A certain organ manufactory offers to furnish instruments to granges at the following rates:

No. 20, Grange price $135, retail price	$175
No. 9, Grange price $153, retail price	210
No. 40, Grange price $168, retail price	225
No. 25, Grange price $190, retail price	250
Grange church organ, Grange price $300, retail price	400

PLOWS.

An Iowa firm sends the following price-list of plows:

No. 1, stirring, plain, $14; with per cent. off	$11.20
No. 2, stirring, half-steel land-plate, $16; with per cent. off	12.80
No. 3, stirring, full-steel hand-plate, $16; with per cent. off	14.40
No. 4, stubble, full-steel land-plate, $19; with per cent. off	15.20
No. 5, sod, full-steel land-plate, $20; with per cent. off	16.00
No. 6, grub, full-steel land-plate, $24; with per cent. off	19.20

All of the above plows are thoroughly hardened and made of the best refinned steel. The price of No. 6 grub-plow includes cutter and fastening. A discount of 20 per cent. on the above to Grange.

MOWERS.

An "Agricultural Works" at St. Louis offers to furnish a certain style of mower at the following rates:

Four-foot cut, price $110, with per cent. off	$85
Four-and-a-half-foot cut, price $120, with per cent. off	90

CORN-SHELLERS.

An Illinois manufactory sends the following price-list, with inducements for cash:

Wagons	$100
Warehouse sheller, No. 1, with fan and screen	225
Senior Farm Sheller, with eight-foot elevator	200
Junior ditto	185
Six-horse power ditto	150
Eight-horse power	165
Jack	25
Combined walking and riding cultivator, "The Farmer's Friend"	45
Sulky hay-rake	45
Walking cultivator, "The Ottawa"	33
Lightning feed-grinder	50
Little Giant stalk-cutter	40
Scotch harrow	14
Field-roller	48
One-handle revolving hay-rake	12
Champion hay-carrier	14
Horse hay-fork	9
Eagle grain-separator	30
DISCOUNTS FOR CASH.
On shellers and mowers, per cent. off	15
On wagons, per cent. off	20
On cultivators and hay-forks, per cent. off	33⅓
On all other articles in list, per cent. off	25

These are only a few of the many examples that we can give, but these will suffice. The purchases by the State grange have saved the farmers, by computation and comparison of the price at the implement stores, $350,000. Farmers, reflect upon the above at your leisure.—Exchange.

Grange Progress.

The following is from the Buffalo Express: There can be but little doubt that the "grange" system will spread to the East. It is to be hoped that its managers will get rid of the flummery in the way of rituals, grips, pass-words, etc., with which it is now incumbered. Then, if they would make each school district the basis of a grange, they will be much more likely to meet with permanent success than if they try to build up large, magnificent associations, having their centers in cities and villages. The school-house would furnish a convenient place of meeting to begin with; afterward they could replace it by a small, pleasant, nicely furnished building if they desired. A social meeting once a week, with business meetings as often as might be necessary, would tend to give the rural population a better opportunity for improvement and enjoyment than they have ever had before in this or any other country. That the tendencies are all in that direction is plain to every one who surveys the whole field of our national life and observes the thousand and one efforts made by the working classes to improve their condition, not only pecuniarily and politically, but socially and intellectually.

"RENT WILL EAT OUT YOUR LIFE."—This is a startling injunction, but it is one that interests those who are constantly paying rents. Rent is a vampire that sucks and drains the life from energy and hope. It is a treadmill whose ceaseless turn wears out life in poverty, depriving it of half its joys, recreations and pleasures. House-rent is nothing else than compound interest on capital, insurance, taxes, and the wear and tear of other men's investments. "The tenant must foot the whole bill," no trees grow for his benefit, no abatement of taxes in his favor, and no rebate of interest or insurance ever reaches his purse. The result is our poor, but well-doing mechanic, afer working ten years, finds himself no nearer a home of his own than when he started in life, and all because he could not get a chance to live cheaply from the start.

Trees and Rainfall.

The effect of trees on the rainfall of a country is no longer a question. A peach tree gives off eighteen pounds, or about two gallons, of moisture every twelve hours. The evaporation from the earth through trees is immense; the roots often draw from springs themselves, and throw off through their branches great volumes of humid air. Especially is this true in Nebraska, where, at the depth of twenty feet, white sand is struck, and this sand is so full of water that, in many places, subterraneous streams have been formed, which have been frequently found when boring shafts or wells.

The great currents of air which leave the Pacific coast humid and warm empty in snows on the Rocky Mountains, and, leaving the mountains dry, they sweep over the vast plains, finding no moisture to take up until they pass over the Missouri and Mississippi, when, having become again charged, they empty in Illinois and Wisconsin. In Wyoming Territory, the dearth is almost complete; but in Nebraska the heavily-timbered heads of her streams give some humidity, and the clouds empty in frequent showers along the Loups, Niobrara, Plattes, Elkhorn, and Missouri. Those who have watched the effect of forests on rainfalls say that, by commencing at the edge of the dry belt, the forests, and consequent rainfalls, may gradually be extended across the whole of the dry belt. So we might commence, say 200 miles west of Omaha, and, by gradually planting trees westward, increase the humidity of the atmosphere, until the required moisture for rain is reached all over the plains.

In Germany the Elbe lost 18 per cent. of its flow in consequence of cutting away the trees along its banks, exposing the waters to the hot sun and consequent increased evaporation. The island of Santa Cruz, in the West Indies, which twenty years ago was a garden of fertility, is now a desert—the result of cutting away the forests. The theory is this: The dry currents of air are retarded by forests and elevated until a point of condensation is reached. Radiation is also prevented, the air cooled, and the clouds passing over forests are rendered more easily condensed. Electricity is also a great agent, the trees being negatively charged, and drawing with a great power the positively-charged clouds.

I advance these theories with no hesitating doubts, for they are no longer experiments, but facts, demonstrated by positive experience and knowledge of the laws that govern the atmosphere.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Educational Statistics.

Gen. Eaton, the Commissioner of Education, has just issued his third annual report. It consists of about 1,000 pages of interesting educational matter, several maps, copied from the census of 1870, intended to show the advantage of education. One table taken from the census shows that the total number of male adults in 1870 was 9,443,001, of which 169,142 males were illiterate, and that of 9,090,999 females, 2,096,049 were in the same ignorant condition. The percentage is therefore 17.15 males and 23.05 females. A table of expenditure in the States, per capita, shows that Massachusetts expends the large amount $20.05, and that Nevada comes next, with $19.89. The amounts paid in other States range from 65.4 cents in North Carolina to $12.18 in California. The advance in education was most marked in New England and the Middle and Western States. There were 811 academies in the United States, with an aggregate attendance of 98,929; 298 institutions reported to the Bureau as colleges. Of these 3 reported preparatory students, 217 collegiate students. The 217 colleges reported 19,260 students in the collegiate course, of whom 1,419 were females. The institutions for the superior instruction of females were 175, 1,617 instructors, of whom 449 were males and 1,168 females; in all, 12,288 students.

Useful Suggestions.

CHEAP CHLORIDE.—Now that disinfection is so much needed it is well for people to know how chlorine may be obtained by everybody at a cheap rate. Mix in a bottle two tablespoonfuls of common salt, two teaspoonfuls of red lead, and half a wine-glassful of strong oil of vitriol in a quart of water. Keep it cool and tightly corked in a dark place. Sprinkle a little of it in places in need of disinfection, or soak cloths in it and hang them about.

A SIMPLE REMEDY.—Dr. Blower, of Liverpool, states that he has for the past twenty years employed compressed sponge very successfully in the treatment of in-growing nails. His method is to render the sponge compact by wetting, and then tying it tightly until it is thoroughly dry. A bit of the sponge, in size less than a grain of rice, is placed under the nail and secured by strips of adhesive plaster. In this way the point of the nail is kept up from the toe until the surrounding soft parts are restored to their normal condition by appropriate means. Of course there is no pain in this remedy, and its application requires only ordinary skill.

HAY FEVER.—To cure hay fever get a solution of sulphate of quinine in water in the proportion of one part of quinine to 740 of water. Lie down upon your back, dip a small camel's hair brush in the solution, and gently apply it to the inside of your nostrils, moving the head gently so as to make sure that the fluid reaches all parts of the nostrils until it is felt in the throat. Three applications a day will be enough to make a cure. So says the Public Ledger.

TO BLEACH COTTON.—A very good way to bleach cotton cloth is to soak it in buttermilk for a few days. Another way is to make a good suds, put from one to two tablespoonfuls of turpentine in it before putting the clothes in. Wash as usual, wringing the clothes from the boil, and drying without rinsing. By using one tablespoonful of turpentine in the first suds on washing days it will save half the labor of rubbing, and the clothes will never become yellow, but will remain a pure white.

SOMETIMES a taint, almost imperceptible, will be found on the chicken killed yesterday and meant for dinner to-day, or on the last of the steak in the bottom of the jar. If it is a really suspicious taint, real decomposition, throw it away; but, if not, it can easily be removed in boiling. When you put it on to cook, take cold water, into which you have put a few lumps of charcoal, tied up in a thin white cloth. After it has boiled awhile take out the charcoal. The meat will be found all right. In cooking corned beef or pork, or a boiled dinner, if the smell annoys you, and you have to keep out of the kitchen, it will be found effectual to put a bit of red pepper in the boiling pot, say twice the size of your thumb nail.

A TEST OF PURE WATER.—An English technical periodical points out an easy way of testing whether water is good and fit for general use. It says: "Good water should be free from color, unpleasant odor and taste, and should quickly afford a lather with a small portion of soap. If half a pint of the water be placed in a perfectly clean, colorless, glass-stoppered bottle, a few grains of the best white lump sugar added, and the bottle freely exposed to the daylight in the window of a warm room, the liquid should not become turbid, even after an exposure of a week or ten days. If the water becomes turbid it is open to the grave suspicion of sewerage contamination; but if it remain clear it is almost certainly safe. We owe to Heisch this simple, valuable, but hitherto strangely neglected test."

OIL FROM HEN'S EGGS.—The healing properties in the new oil extracted from hen's eggs are said to be very great, and it can be easily made. First, the eggs are boiled hard; the yolks are removed, crushed and placed over a fire, where they are carefully stirred, and when the substance is just on the eve of catching fire the oil separates and may be poured off. One yolk will yield nearly two teaspoonfuls of oil. In the southern part of Russia it is much used for curing cuts and bruises.

TO MAKE WALL PAPER STICK.—Make paste of flour, same as you do for starch; do not let it boil. When cold apply to the paper with a brush, not having it so thick but that it will spread evenly over the surface, or so thin as to wet the paper through. Cheap paper I find not so cheap at last as a little better paper.

The above directions I have from an old and experinced paper-hanger, and I found them very good this spring, as in all my papering (which I have put on myself) not an inch has come off nor is a crack to be seen.—Mrs. J. S. Walker.

The Sioux-Pawnee Fight.

To-day, about fifty Pawnee, with about 250 horses, came into town from the southwest and camped. From their appearance it was evident they had been severely handled. Upon the 6 o'clock freight about 100 more arrived, with a box-car of wounded ones with them. They report a severe engagement with the Sioux, upon the divide southwest of Plum Creek, about forty miles, in which they lost a large number, all their buffalo meat, a large number of squaws and papooses, saddles, and other things. They relate that they (the Sioux) came upon their defenseless camp of women and children and massacred all of them, and then sought them out, and they being poorly armed, and the Sioux well armed, they fought at a great disadvantage, and their losses were consequently great. The accounts are so confused and contradictory that it is impossible to get a true and reliable statement, and then we all know that their ideas of truth-telling are not of the most exalted kind. It is alleged the Sioux are allowed superior arms, and the Pawnees, on account of their peaceable character, are not. One of two things ought to be done by the Government with these Pawnees, viz.: either keep them rigidly on their reservation, and give them plenty of food, or, when they are permitted to go upon the buffalo hunting-grounds, where the chances are they will meet the hostile Sioux, give them good arms and plenty of ammunition to meet their foes on an equal footing. This is simple justice. I am afraid they will soon get it through their thick skulls that it don't pay a very large dividend to be peaceable and quiet.—Kearney Junction, Cor. Omaha Herald.

The Democratic Platform.

We give below the Resolutions adopted by the recent Democratic State Convention. They will be found eminent sound and meet with a hearty response from the Democratic masses:

Judge Henry C. Whitman, of Cincinnati, from the committee on resolutions, reported the following platform which he said had the unanimous support of the committee:

1. Resolved, That the Democratic party seeks to revive no dead issues, but stands by its principles, which are suited to all times and circumstances.

It supports the Federal Government in all its constitutional authority, and opposes nullification and secession.

It defends the reserved rights of the States and the people, and opposes the centralization that would impair or destroy them.

In order to maintain and preserve these rights, it insists upon a strict construction of the Federal Constitution.

It resists all attempts of one Department of the Government to usurp and destroy the constitutional rights of independence of the other departments.

It opposes all interference, by law with the private affairs or business of men, not required by the public peace of safety, and advocates the greatest individual liberty consistent with public order.

It believes in the capacity of the people for self-government, and opposes all property qualifications as conditions to the right of suffrage or illegibility to hold office.

It favors liberals laws for natualization of foreigners

It insists upon equal and exact justice to all men.

It opposes all monopolies and denies that it is within the province of government to legislate for the benefit of particular classes at the expense and to the detriment of the rest of the community.

It, therefore, opposes a system by which a large portion of the profit producing wealth of the country is exempted from taxation and demands that all constitutional means shall be used to remedy the injustice.

It insists that our tariff laws should be framed with a view to revenue, and not to tax the community for the benefit of particular industries.

It recognizes the evils of an irredeemable currency, but insists that in a return to specie payments care should be taken not to seriously disturb the business of the country, or unjustly injure the debtor class.

It appreciates the benefits conferred by railroads, but opposes all combinations of railroad companies to prevent competition, and thus enchance the cost of trasportation.

It opposes all laws that gives capital an advantage over labor.

It requires honesty and economy in every department of the Government, Federal or State, and it condemns corruption whoever may be the guilty parties.

It is in very nature, and as a necessary result of its principles, a party of progress and support all natures of reform or improvement that are sanctioned by justice and commended by sound practical wisdom.

2. Resolved. That the wealth of a country is the product of its labor, and the best use of capital is that which gives employment and liberal wages to the producing classes. Hence, every measure that tends to protect them from oppression, to improve their condition and dignify their calling, deserves and receives our sympathy and support, and that we cordially recommend the conservative resolutions adopted at the recent National Labor Congress at Cleveland, favoring arbritration ond co-operation.

3. Resolved, That, although always constituting a largre majority of the American people, the agriculuraists have never demanded of Government State or Federal, any special privilege have never infested the halls of Congress or of Legislature with lobbyists and rings but, on the contrary, have suffered under discriminating and unjust laws, until forbearance has ceased to be a virtue. We hereby pledge our sincere and honest efforts to obtain them a redress of grievances and equal and exact justice.

4. Resolved, That the public lands should be sacredly reserved for actual settlers who will dwell upon and cultivate them, and that we will continue to denounce and oppose, as we have always denounced and opposed all gifts of such lands by the Government to incorporated companies.

5. Resolved, That the greatest danger to free institutions is the widespreading corruption that threatens the utter destruction of pubclic virtue. When Credit Mobeler frauds go unpunished; when those engaged in them are elevated to high official position; when seats in the Federal Senate are notoriously purchased; when vast sums of money are corruptly employed in popular elections; when an army of office-holders, with the sanction of the Government, use their official influence to control elections; when bribery of Custom House officers is an established usage; when rings of plunderers are recipients of millions of money appropriated for public use; when official defalcations are of such frequent occurrence as scarcely to excite attention; when Presidential pardons relieve defaulters from merited punishment and Presidential appointments reward Credit Mobiler and salary grabbing Congressmen; and when a Congressional investigation is generally a whitewashing affair, it is not strange that men begin to lose confidence in free institutions, and that the fame of the great Republic is tarnished throughout the civilized world. To remedy these evils we insist that the receipts and expenditures of the government shall be diminished; that its patronage shall be curtailed, and all useless offices abolished; that it shall cease to usurp functions to which it has no title; that official misconduct and fraud and corruption in elections shall be rigorously punishhed; and that public virtue shall be upheld and the want of it condemned by the united voice of the people.

6. Resolved, That we condemn without reserve the late act of Congress granting additional salaries as unjustifiable, and demand its immediate and unconditional repeal. And we denounce every member of Congress whether Republican or Democrat, who supported the law, or received and retained the money procured thereby. And we especially denounce the conduct of President Grant in using the influence of his high position for its passage and whose official signature made it a law.

7. Resolved, That the act of the President, in setting up, by the bayonet a government in Lousiana, not chosen by her people, and having no title whatever to rule over them, was a flagrant violation of her rights and of the Federal constitution.

8. Resolved That every department of the Government being in the hands of the Republican party, they are justly responsible for the evils and wrongs in legislation and administration of which the country complains.

9. Resolved That under the time-honored Democratic, banner, with this declaration of principles inscribed on its folds, we engage in the conflict and we earnestly appeal to patriotic men of every class, without regard to party names or past differences, to unite with us, on terms of perfect equality, in the struggle to rescue the government from the hands of dishonest men and redeem it from the flood of corruption which threatens its ruin.

There was great applause during the reading of the resolutions, and at the conclusion of the reading they were adopted without dissent, with vociferous demonstration.

PINE TREE!

Tar Cordial,

NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY

FOR

Throat and Lungs.

It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—

First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.

Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood

Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

Senator Morton's grab business does not seem wholly settled yet. On the very day that it was 'authoritatively' announced in this city that he had 'some time' ago retuaned his swag, the Treasurer of the United States, Mr. Spinner, was examining the books and no record of any action on Mr. Morton's part was known. To make assurance doubly sure, the books were examined Tuesday night, and as will be seen by a dispatch from Washington reprinted elsewhere there was no notification in Washington, as annouced in this city. The matter is a trival ene, but this small attempt to make capital is on a par with Mr. Morton's entire record in this disgusting business. Who could he not have gone with Senotor Pratt and delivered up his stolden funds? Why did he come home and shuffie about the question for six months and then, instead of confessing his make shift, go through the additional sham and pretense of a restoration? The whole business lowers Mr. Morton in the eyes of those who still remained his friends and strips from him much of that glamor which is conferred by unvaryting success. There are a great many weak brethern who regard the successes of the sort this man as hachieved as a special mark of divine favor and sufficient to counterbalance a multitude of moral short comiegs and political turpitude.

Brigham Young on the Indian Polcy.

Correspondent—Have the Mormons ever had any trouble with the Indians?

The Prophet—But very little. When we make an Indian a promise we never breake it.

Correspondent—What do you think of the Indian agents?

The Prophet—With but few exceptions, they are the most God forsaken rascals that ever cursed the country. They promise everything and fulfill nothing. They swindle the Indiabs from right to left, and the Indians know it. If there had ever been an Indian agent the Indians would be far better than they are now.

Correspondent—Did you ever set any of the blankets or things of thes kind that were given to the Indiaan as annuities?

The Prophet—Oh, the agents are a great set of rascals. I think I have seen one or two Indians who had received blankets at some agency, but they were very few. They don't get many blankets.

Correspondent—Were the blankets of good quality?

The Prophet—Well, I never saw enough of them to know. I do know that the Indians are thoroughly disgusted with the agents. and I believe with good reason. The true policy is to make but few promises or treaties, as you call them, and when promises are made to sacredly fulfill them.—N. Y. Herald Reporter.

Senator Morton has at length returned his share of the salary grab.—Popular disapprobation was too much to resist and he has "come down with the stamps," and 'covered' them into the United States Treasury, Just how much credit he deserves for having relinquished the 'swag' under compulsion, we leave his admirers to guess The disposition to have and to hold it was clerely entertained by the Senator The letter returning the plunder is dated New York, Aug. 19. ThE WORLD S EXPOSITION.

Prof Cox the State Geologist, togethor with his wife and daughter and Mr. J. H. Valen, of this city, returned from Europe on Monay last. arriving here yesterday. The party are in excellent health and spirits, and give glowing accounts of their European tour and the exhibition, par excellence at Vienna. The Prof's stay at the Austrian capital was of a month in duration. long enough to see the sights and carry away vivid pictures of the wotld's fair and accompanying scenes. Among the thousands of visitors at Vienna one could hardly expect to find many of his own country or town. There were, however, quite a number of Indianapolisians, who together enjoyed the varied scenes at Vienna. Among them were Mr. T. O. Morris, Mr. Milton Morris, Miss Nellie Morris, Mr. Dalzell, wife and daughter, Mrs. Haeselman and Mr. Watson Hasselman, Mr. Ohr Watson and wife, Mr. J. H. Vajen and son, Mr. Mooney, Mrs. William Braden. New Albany was represented by one of its prominent bankers, Mr. Brown and several well known German citizens. Franklin, Johnson Co. by Mr. Leyman. From Terre Haute there was also a number of gentlemen with their families. To the question as to how Indiana was represented by its productions, the Professor stated that in its specialty—coal—it was not surpassed by any State or nation It was the original intention to exhibit blocks of coal from different mines, showing the exact depth of the seam and to arrange these as a sort of monument in the department assigned for minerals. Owing to the limited carrying capacity provided by Government, this project was abandoned, and only small specimens taken. Though the awards are not to be given until September. Prof. Cox states that it was stated to him by one of the awarding committee (an American) that Indiana would rank first.

INDIANA TO THE FRONT

Indiana receives the highest award—the gold medal—for her display of minerals. In the matter of native woods the State was not well represented. Specimens of black walnut, oak, etc, in all about ten varities, were sent, put compared with those of other countries, they were meagre enough. Hungary, excellent in display of this kind, showing even the tree itself, beautiful ones 150 feet in length of ash, being noticeable. And with the exception of Maine, which sent a few pine boards, Indiana was the only State making any exhibit of its woods. In agricultural products it was but little better represented. Professor Cox took a half bushel of two kinds of wheat, but with ihat exception nothing else was shown. Indiron some specimens were sent, but of course could not compete with that from the Lake Superior region, which eqvalled if it did not surpass any samples taken to Vienna. Summing up the whole, Prof. Cox regards Indiana as having actually better represented this country than any other State or section California, with its vas cereal wealth, was very poorly represented, a limited amount of grains, and a pictured representation of the Northern Pacific Railroad being about all that the Golden State saw fit to send. There were sewing machines and this alone costing over $30,000, and the noise of the busy agents agents arose as the hum of bees when swarming. Organs and Pianos, comparatively few in number, but of the best manufacture, reapers, mowers, etc., made a very creditable display The mammoth soda water fountain and fizzee spluttered, and excited at first the astonishment of the outside barbarians. But these latter, and especially the Viennese, the Professor states, refused either to destroy their digestion, or titillate and torture their nostrils by partaking of the nondescript decoctions sold at the fountains of dispepsia. Indeed their distaste for the peculiar American "vanity" was marked, and they evidently regarded the inventors of it as the most barbarous of all nations, and on whom good wine and beer would only be wasted. No locomotives, engines, or other superior Yankee intentions were displayed, and the young Republic fared but illy among her sister nations, in attempting to represent herself and her productions. In fact she will be more famous at Vienna for the conspicuous absence of what should properly represent her, than any other nationality. Great Briton, France, Germany, Hungary, Austria, Turkey, China and Japan, were each and all represented by their peculiar products.

DISTANCED BY THE SWISS

The great American school house, which it was at first suppesed would "lay over" anything the effete monarchies could produce was eclipsed by Switzerland, whose beautiful model, two stories in heighth, with eight rooms, furnished with complete apparatus—the department of design, of drawing, painting, fine arts, of philosophy, ect.—formed a model hard to excel. In view of these facts, Professor Cox is, reasonably too, proud of the status of Indiana at the exposition, which, in her principal production there, bears away the palm. The Professor's experience of high prices and not over excellent accommodations was similar to those of the many who have made Vienna a stopping place this summer. He regards the exposition itself a grand success, far surpassing anything that Paris or London—and therefore the world has achieved.

From the Golden Age—Theedore Tilton.

It is doubtful if steam and the mechanical powers are anywhere compelled to accomplish more curious difficulty and widely ranging tasks than when compelled to construct an instrument in which the extremes of strength, and delicacy of mechanism are combined as in a piano. There is no enthusiam engendered in the manufacture of pianos a kin to that which the sculptor feels for the statue born of his imagination, and fashioned by his hand's cunning. One cannot be long in company with the Decker Bros. without perceiving this evidence of their pride in their work.

The tone of each instrument is with them a matter of sleepless solicitude. It must be massive, bell-like in the bass; rich, warm and full in the tenor and fresh, bright and clear, almost sparkling, and mellow though penetrating throughout the treble. The Decker tone is characterized by an indication of reserved power, so that when a fortissimo passage is played, the sound wells forth as if flowing from an eternal spring of harmonies. To produce this unrivalled body of tone in all the varieties of the instrument—the Grand, the Square and the Upright—the Decker Bros. have learned through years of patient investigation, the results of which have been effectively embodied in several exceedingly ingenious patents. By their process of construction, the fullest advantages are derived from the use of the metalic plates, without experiencing any of the usual deleterious effects upon the tone, for in no part of the scale are the strings permitted to come in close contact with the plate.

Our attention was directed to many wonderful labor-saving appliances introduced or perfected by the proprietors, some of them performing tasks in minutes that formerly required hours and so all through the whole factory, at every turn you take, you are impressed with the feeling that in the Decker Brothers German thrift and thoroughness have been grafted upon the American inventive faculty, and this rare combination has produced the grand results that are now hourly adding to their fame as makers of piano fortes, the like of which, many of our contemporarie's have forestalled us in saying, "we never heard before"

Senator Morton makes public his letter to the Secretary of the Senate covering his share of the salary-steal back into the Treasury. The letter is but a week old, and shows by its date how slowly the stubborn spirit of the Indiana Senator yielded to the irresistible presure of public opinion. Senator's restitution is the only case of Congressional repentance that has come to light for a month.

AUBURN COURIER

THURSDAY, SEPT. 4, 1873.

NEWS SUMMARY.

The East.

THE body of Thomas Munce, a wealthy farmer of Washington county, Pa., who disappeared some time ago, was found a few days since, by his friends, pickled in the dissecting-room of the Philadelphia Medical College. Munce was found drowned on the 3d of July, and the body was removed to the Morgue, whence it was turned over to the Medical College. Quite a sensation was produced by the discovery.

A FRIGHTFUL accident occurred in New York the other day. The walls of a building which a party of laborers were pulling down gave way, instantly killing four of them, and wounding nine others so severely they are not expected to recover. Three of the wounded have since died....Michael Broderick, of New York, assaulted his mother-in-law. Broderick's son, aged 13, interceded as a peace-maker, whereupon the father turned upon his boy and stabbed him fatally. Another son came upon the scene, and was in turn stabbed by the infuriated parent, but not fatally. The murderer was arrested....New and rich oil discoveries have been made four miles southwest of Titusville, Pa.

A TERRIBLE accident occurred on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad on the 24th of August, near Cameron, W. Va., by which four German emigrants were killed, and fifteen or twenty wounded. The accident was caused by the spreading of the track, which threw the tender, express car, and one passenger down an embankment and all the coaches off the track. The car turned bottom upwards, the trucks with it. Some of the emigrants became enraged, thinking the conductor and engineer were trying to kill them, and set upon the officers of the train with stones, and they had to flee for their lives....Belfast, Me., has experienced a disastrous conflagration, which destroyed 130 buildings; estimated loss, $500,000....Miss Seavey, of Belmont, N. H., aged 60, died the other day of voluntary starvation, having refused food for twenty-eight days. A sister of the deceased died in the same way a few years ago.

THE accident on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad, near Cameron, W. Va., was not so serious as at first reported. None of the emigrants were killed, though several were severely injured....At Rochester, N. Y., last week, a passenger train ran into a carriage which was crossing the track, smashing the vehicle, and killing the occupants, James Anderson and Dennis Delany, one of whom was horribly mangled. The engineer, John Day, stopped the train as soon as possible, and got off the engine to see what injury had been done. In passing in front of the locomotive he saw it covered with blood and brains, and was so overcome by the shock that he walked a few steps, when he fell. He was carried into the smoking-car, and died in a few minutes.

A FIRE in Lynn, Mass., last week, destroyed $100,000 worth of property....One Prof. Bellene, from France, performed a feat of extraordinary daring at Niagara Falls, the other day. He crossed the river on a tight rope, 1,500 feet long, opposite the Clifton House, in sixteen minutes. Returning to the center, he cast his cloak and balance-pole into the river, and then jumped off into the water beneath, a distance of 140 feet, disappearing for a few seconds, after which he rose to the surface, and was picked up by men in waiting, and went ashore in a small boat.

GOV. DIX has written a letter to Mayor Havemeyer, declining to furnish arms for the New York police....There is trouble brewing among the city authorities of Brooklyn. It is stated that a large amount of the city's securities cannot be found, for the reason that the late Assistant Treasurer speculated with the funds, and the securities were gradually absorbed. This gentleman makes counter charges against other city officials whom he claims are implicated in the affair....Ald. Nichols, of Philadelphia, has been sentenced to nine months' imprisonment for extorting exorbitant fees.

The West.

THE report that Hon. Philetus Sawyer, of Wisconsin, had committed suicide was a cruel hoax, and arose from the blunder of an incompetent telegraph operator....A serious collision occurred on the Cincinnati and Marietta railroad, near Loveland, Ohio, a few days ago, resulting in the death of three persons. The accident was caused by the freight train running out of time. The conductor and engineer have been arrested, and will be prosecuted by the company for murder....John Custis, a colored body-servant of George Washington in 1782, died at Canaan, Washington county, Wis., recently, aged 107 years....Great excitement exists in Baxter Springs, Kan., over the discovery of lead in the streets of that city. It is found in immense quantities near the surface, and the citizens generally have turned out to mining.

THE desperadoes in and around Ellsworth, Kansas, infuriated at the killing of one of their number by the Sheriff, threaten to destroy the town, and the citizens have formed themselves into military companies for its defense....The boiler in a shingle-mill at Spencer, Mich., exploded the other day, killing three men and badly wounding four others.

JOHN HANCOCK, an old and respected citizen of Payson, Ill., recently murdered his wife, while laboring under a fit of temporary insanity, and then hung himself....The report telegraphed from Lawrence, Kansas, and widely published, purporting to give the particulars of the boarding of a train on the Missouri Pacific railroad by a band of ruffians, and the killing of one of them by a passenger, was a miserable hoax....Sheriff Low, of Calloway county, Mo., who was shot by the mob that lynched Kessler, is dead.

THE exploring expedition sent out to ascertain as to the feasibility of turning the Gulf of California into the desert of the Colorado, in Arizona, has made surveys which fully demonstrate the practicability of the scheme....The Yellowstone expedition has had two encounters with the red-skins, the particulars of which are furnished by a dispatch from Muscle Shell River. The first fight occurred on Aug. 4, in which 80 troops were engaged for two hours against 300 Indians. The firing was at long range, and but little damage done to either side, only two Indians being killed. While the fight was going on, several Indians left the war party, in search of stragglers. Coming upon Dr. Honsinger, the veterinary surgeon, and Balarain, the cavalry sutler, who were less than a mile from the column, they killed them and took their horses and valuables. Private John Ball, of the cavalry, while out hunting, met with a similar fate. On the 8th of August, Gen. Stanley directed Gen. Custer to take his cavalry, numbering 450 men, and follow and punish the Indians. On the 11th he was attacked by about 800 Indians on the banks of the Yellowstone river, who opened a brisk fire. After the fighting had been going on some time, Gen. Custer ordered a charge, which was gallantly executed, the red-skins fleeing before the impetuous onset. They were pursued some eight miles, and badly scattered. The battle is described as a fierce one. Gen. Custer and Adjt. Ketcham had their horses shot under them. Lieut. Braden was badly shot in the thigh. Private Tuttle, Gen. Custer's orderly, was killed, and twenty of the soldiers were slightly wounded. The Indians' loss is estimated by Gen. Custer at forty killed and wounded. The Indians were well armed with heavy rifles, and had abundant ammunition. Some were dressed in clothes procured at the Agency. These Indians were mainly Uncapapas, supposed to be under the command of Sitting Bull, and are supposed to have received their supplies from Fort Peck. The expedition is now on the homeward march, and will reach Fort Rice about the 1st of October....One of the attorneys of the Chicago and Alton railroad arrived at Springfield, the other day, and paid to the representatives of each of the men who were killed in the late disaster the sum of $5,000. The prompt manner in which this matter has been settled is worthy of commendation....The extensive brewery of Valentine Blatz, in Milwaukee, has been destroyed by fire. Loss, $500,000.

THE assessed valuation of all the property in Illinois (exclusive of railroads) is $1,186,120,684....At San Jose, Cal., the other day, a young Chinaman shot Miss Alice Dubois three times because she refused to marry him. Alice's steel corsets turned the bullets and saved her life. The maddened Celestial then blew his own brains out.

YOUNG, the money-order counterfeiter, was recently arrested at Arcola, Ill., and now lies in the Chicago jail, wounded in the shoulder by a bullet from the revolver of a Government detective, for which there appears to be little cause. He was accompanied by his wife, who clings to him in spite of the disgrace which has come upon her husband....The night clerk of the Briggs House, Chicago, recently became enraged at one of the bell-boys of the house, and threw him out of a window, breaking his leg in two places.....Supt. Washburn, of the Chicago police force, is about to prefer charges against every detective officer on his force, except one....The DeGollyer pavement has been denounced as a failure in Milwaukee and Chicago....One thousand men employed at the Milwaukee Rolling Mills are thrown out of work by a strike of the heaters of those mills, against a reduction of wages....The Territorial Penitentiary at Laramie City, W. T., was recently destroyed by fire.

The South.

SERIOUS political troubles are reported from Perry county, Ark....Satanta and Big Tree have been taken out of the Texas Penitentiary and sent under guard to Fort Sill, where a conference is to be held between the Kiowas and Comanches, and Secretary Delano and Gov. Davis.

THE first bale of cotton received at Memphis this season was sold for thirty-five cents a pound....Memphis experienced an earthquake shock on the 22d of August....A colored family, consisting of mother and four children, were burned to death in an old shanty in which they were living, in the suburbs of Louisville, last week....Nevin Palmer and James West, both colored, were hung at Baltimore on the 22d of August—the former for rape, and the latter for murder.

THE steamer George C. Wolf blew up on the Mississippi river, twelve miles above Helena, on the 22d of August....Twelve persons were killed outright, and fifteen wounded. The Wolf was from Shreveport, bound for St. Louis. The spot where she blew up is known to river men as the "Grave-Yard," being the same place where the Pennsylvania and St. Nicholas blew up, and the T. L. McGill was burned....Judge Colvin, of the St. Louis Court of Criminal Correction, in a test case brought before his court, has decided that the so-called "Social Evil" ordinance of that city is unconstitutional, and that the General Assembly had no power to grant to the city the right to license prostitution. The case will be appealed to the Supreme Court.

THE steamer Belle Vernon, Capt. James Kenniston, en route from Cincinnati to Memphis, with full cargo, struck the wreck of the Jennie Howell, a few miles below Shawneetown, Ill., on Wednesday, and sunk quickly in 20 feet of water, and is lying across the river. Some lives were lost, but the number and names were not ascertained....Tuesday night the steamer Ruby, with 182 head of cattle for New Orleans, swamped her cattle-pen below Shreveport. The boat is a total loss. One hundred head of cattle were drowned. The cattle stampeded when the larboard railing was cut, and the cattle on that side jumped ashore, leaving all the weight on the other guard, which swamped her. No insurance on the boat. None of the crew were lost, but several injured....A prize fight came off near Jonesville recently between Luke Fay and David Jones, in which the former was terribly used up.

A WASHINGTON dispatch says the proceedings of the Military Commission have been sent to the Secretary of War by Judge Advocate General Holt, he having completed his review, and it is understood that he approved the findings of the court....The Secretary of War has issued a circular that in all cases where an officer recommends the advertising of any official matter, he must suggest only the names of newspapers that, from their location or circulation, are apt to do the greatest service to the department.

Gen. Holt contends that President Johnson received the whole of the records, and that his refusal to act on the recommendation of the court, and to see the daughter of Mrs. Surratt when she applied at the White House for an audience, was simply his own irresponsible act, uncontrolled and unprejudiced by others.

Mr. Morton has been compelled to recall all his appointments in Ohio, owing to severe hoarseness.

THE Washington Daily Republican, of Aug. 27, contains a four-column article in advocacy of the re-election of President Grant to a third term. The article states that the idea is as old as the Government itself, and has always been a subject of difference and disputation; that Washington was requested to run a third term; Thomas Jefferson, the canonized Saint of the Democracy, was similarly honored; so were Madison and Monroe. The article concludes: "If Gen. Grant desires the Presidency for a third term, he can have it, for the people have learned to trust the hand that has guided the Ship of State safely through so many perils, and they will keep him at the helm as long as the exigencies of the State may need him. His willingness to serve the country makes him available. Let Gen. Grant, then, be again put before the people for re-election. DOOMED.

The Findings of the Modoc Court-Martial Approved by the President—The Savages Sentenced to be Hanged on the Third Day of October.

The War Department has promulgated, in general orders, the finding and sentence in the case of the Modoc captives, Capt. Jack, Schonchin, Black Jim, Boston Charley, Barncho, alias One-Eyed Jim, and Slolock, alias Cox, who was tried by the Military Commission for the murder of Gen. Canby and Commissioner Thomas, and for assault with intent to kill the other Peace Commissioners. They are found guilty of the specifications and charges and sentenced to be hanged. The proceedings have been approved by the President and Secretary of War. In the text of the general order, specification first, under the charge of murder, in the violation of the laws of war, recites that they, the Indians, commonly known as Capt. Jack, Schonchin, Boston Charley, Black Jim, Barncho, alias One-Eyed Jim, and Sloluck, alias Cox, members of a certain band of Indians known as Modocs, which band, including the prisoners above named, was, at the time hereinafter alleged, engaged in open and flagrant war with the United States, under the chief command of said Capt. Jack, did, as representatives of said Modoc band, meet, under a flag of truce and suspension of hostilities, Brig.-Gen. E. R. S. Canby, U. S. A., commanding the Department of Columbia, and certain Peace Commissioners, on the part of said United States, for the agreed and professed purpose of discussing and arranging the terms upon which the hostilities existing between the United States and said band should cease, and did thereupon, in wanton violation of said flag of truce, and treacherously disregarding the obligations imposed by said truce under the laws of war, willfully, feloniously, and of malice aforethought, kill and murder said Brig.-Gen. Canby. All this at or near the Lava Beds, so-called, situated near Tule Lake, in the State of California, on or about the 11th day of April, 1873.

The second specification is the same as the first, only that the name of Peace Commissioner Eleazer Thomas, is substituted for that of Gen. Canby. The specifications under the second charge of assault with intent to kill in violation of the laws of war, recite the attempt to kill Peace Commissioners A. B. Meacham and L. S. Dyor, at the time their associates, Thomas and Gen. Canby, were murdered, all of whom were representing the United States. To the charges and specifications, accused pleaded not guilty. But the Commissioners found them guilty, and sentenced them to be hanged at such time and place as the proper authorities should direct.

The following is the order made by the President in the matter:

"EXECUTIVE OFFICE, Aug. 23, 1873.

"The foregoing sentences in the cases of Capt. Jack, Schonchin, Black Jim, Boston Charley, Barncho, alias One-Eyed Jim, and Slolock, alias Cox, Modoc Indian prisoners, are hereby approved, and it is ordered that the sentences in said cases be carried into execution by the proper military authority, under orders of the Secretary of War, on the 3d day of October, 1873. (Signed)

"U. S. GRANT, President."

The Secretary of War has ordered that the sentences be duly executed, under direction of the General commanding the Department of the Columbia, at Fort Klamath, Oregon, on Friday, October 3, 1873.

Terrible Storm on the Coast of Nova Scotia and the Island of Cape Breton.

Dispatches just received from Sydney, Cape Breton, state that a terrible storm of wind and rain has been raging there since Monday, the greatest known at Cape Breton for years. All the harbors are filled with vessels. Thirty vessels were driven ashore at Sydney. The farmers have suffered heavily. Many buildings were blown down, and the crops throughout the country destroyed, and bridges washed away. The storm commenced at noon on Monday, blowing fiercely from the southeast. The wind changed suddenly to east, sending a tidal wave ten feet high sweeping toward the docks and wharves. The wind was blowing frightfully. Among the vessels ashore at Sydney are the Volent, Matilda B. Hunter, Nancy, R. McRae, Maggie, D. Grant, Euxine, Zephyr and Alpha. These are total wrecks. The bark Electra, dismasted, has been on the bar at the entrance to Sydney harbor flying a flag of distress all day. The schooner Case is ashore undamaged. Fifty sail vessels are at Cow Bay, all ashore. The Cunard steamship Alpha, from Sydney, put in there for harbor with steam up and anchors down, and succeeded in holding. The breakwater at Cow Bay is badly damaged. Belle's wharf is destroyed. The destruction to shipping in the bay is frightful.

Powder in His Pocket.

The Reese River Reveille has the following, which serves to exhibit the extravagances of far Western humor: "A festive youth, who performs his daily avocations in the mines of Lander Hill, thought he would take home a little blasting powder the other day; it might come in handy to split an obstinate log he had at home. When he started for his humble cabin in the evening he wrapped a few ounces carefully in several thicknesses of paper, and placed it in his pocket. When he got home he got to thinking about how long it would be before he was likely to get a crushing; and then he thought what a nice perfume that hankerchief extract that he bought last Saturday night had, and he said within himself that a miner's life was hard and uncertain. Then he thought he ought to call on that Smithers girl. He got his necktie in proper shape, his handkerchief was perfumed like unto a new-blown rose; one oiled lock hung gracefully down, on his forehead, and he started for the domicile of his sweetness. This young man is coloring a meerschaum, but his girl detests the horrid smoke; so when he got to the door he knocked the bowl of the meerschaum on his manly heel, and put it in his pocket. Of course he didn't intend to put it in the same pocket with the powder. His affinity met him at the door with a sweet smile on her beauteous countenance, welcomed him to her paternal mansion, and invited him into the parlor and to a seat on the sofa. They were engaged in conversation. He asked her if it wasn't a very beautiful evening, and then she inquired how he liked the dress Miss Brown wore at church last Sunday. He said he didn't like it a bit, and she remarked that Miss Brown was a stuck-up thing anyhow; and all this time that pipe was insidiously burning its way through that paper. He agreed that Miss Brown was stuck-up, and said he'd strike it pretty soon, and then you'd see who would wear plug hats. She told him she thought plug hats so becoming, and then he was going to tell her he adored her; that she was the darling of his soul, and that all his happiness was centered in her No. 7 boots. But he was interrupted. He arose from the floor and inquired if the lightning had struck anybody else, and remarked something about the Virginia explosion being a warning to people not to keep nitro-glycerine in their houses. Then he took off his coat. He said it was an old coat, and he didn't want it nohow. His girl's father suggested that this wasn't 4th of July, and if he wanted to set off fireworks he ought to go up on the hill and do it. Then the young man said it was getting late, and he guessed he'd go home, and suggested that he would send a man around to-morrow to fix the sofa. He says now that flaxseed ain't worth a cuss for a poultice, and he ain't going to call on that Smithers gal any more; she's most too high-toned, and thinks herself too good for a miner, anyhow.

IRON FOR ENGLAND.—A Youngstown, Ohio, iron master, now in England, writes to his partners that he thinks iron can be shipped with advantage from the mill to the London market. And the Columbus (Ohio) State Journal, regarding the fact, says: "There is, or promises to be soon, no sufficient reason why it should not be. We have cheaper coal, and more of it, better ore and more of it, in Ohio than all England, Wales and Ireland. Besides that, the development of our coal and iron interest is comparatively just beginning. We have been picking over the surface, so to speak, as yet; we shall get fairly down to the merits of the matter pretty soon.

The Patrons of Husbandry.

Although the order of the Patrons of Husbandry has been in existence some six years, not much has been heard about it in the New England and Middle States until quite recently. The first "grange" was organized in 1868, in Itasca, Minnesota, under the direction of Mr. O. H. Kelley, the Secretary of the present National Grange, and one of the most active members of the order. During that year, eleven granges or sub-societies were organized, and since that time they have been steadily increasing with a rapidity entirely unprecedented in the history of popular organizations. Over six thousand granges are now in working order in the States and in Canada, with a membership that must number very nearly two millions. There are over a thousand societies in Iowa, over four hundred in Illinois, several in Pennsylvania, in New Jersey, in Vermont, and at this moment deputies from the National Grange are lecturing and organizing subordinate and State granges in various places. Candidates for membership must be sixteen years old, if women, and eighteen, if men; otherwise both sexes stand on terms of absolute equality throughout the seven degrees. It is a secret society, and its organization is very elaborate and complete, embracing three ranks, viz.: subordinate granges, State granges, and the National Grange, having headquarters in Georgetown, D. C. Four degrees are conferred in the subordinate granges; the fifth in State granges; the seventh degree is composed of elected members of the National Grange, who have served one year therein. It has charge of the secret work of the order, and is a high "court of impeachment of all officers of the National Grange."

Change of Color.

Sudden shocks occurring to human beings have frequently changed the color of their hair from black to white in a single night. A physician of Berlin—a strong, healthy, and less than middle-aged man—sent his wife and one daughter to spend last summer at a watering-place. The day that he expected a letter informing him of their arrival, there came one saying that his daughter had been taken sick very suddenly and was already dead. The shock was terrible, and instantly his hair became entirely gray. He had to visit some patients that same afternoon, and they scarcely recognized him. Their peculiar actions revealed the change to him. The other case was of a man 35 years old, living in the Netherlands. He was one day passing the canal in Rotterdam, where he saw a child struggling in the water. He plunged in and brought it to land, but it was already dead by the time he has rescued the body. Bending over it to try to restore life, he discovered that the dead child was his own son. The blow, so sudden and unexpected, and coming upon him when he himself was so much exhausted, turned his hair entirely gray, and left him scarcely recognizable.

Hoist With His Own Petard.

Yesterday, James M. Hinchey was accidentally shot and seriously wounded by a contrivance which he had set to entrap burglars. His place has been robbed twice lately, an entrance having been effected through the back door. At this point he placed the trap, which consisted of a large pistol attached to the door. A wire extended from the door to the pistol, and was so arranged that when the door was opened the trigger was pulled and the weapon exploded. During the day the wire was generally detached. It appears that he went out yesterday morning, and did not return till after twelve o'clock. He went in the front way, and after working awhile, thought he would open the back door to get a little more air. He did this, thinking he had disarranged the apparatus, but the explosion that followed showed him that the machine was in full operation and ready for all comers. The pistol had been heavily charged, the missiles consisting of three bullets, two of which took effect in the left side of the unfortunate man, the other striking the door. Medical aid was at once summoned, and it was found that the balls had penetrated to a considerable depth, and it was not thought advisable to probe the wounds, which were in the direction of the heart. He is considered to be in a critical condition.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

TO STOP THE RAVAGES OF MOTHS.—Camphor will not stop the ravages of moths in carpets after they have commenced eating. Then they pay no regard to the presence of camphor, cedar or tobacco. A good way to kill them is to take a coarse crash towel and wring it out of clear water. Spread it smoothly on the carpet, then iron it; dry with a good hot iron, repeating the operation on all suspected places, and those least used. It does not injure the pile or color of the carpet in the least; it is not necessary to press hard, heat and steam being the agents, and they do the work effectually on worms and eggs. Then the camphor will doubtless prevent future depredations of the miller.

WITHIN a few months several bakeries have been established in the capital of Japan, and bread is now sold regularly in the streets to those wishing to cultivate foreign tastes. It is sold either in loaves or in slices, and venders and purchasers appear to be alike indifferent as to the freshness of the article. Some of the loaves exposed are covered with a rich green mold, which is apparently regarded as an adornment by the Japanese. The slices are toasted brown, and then eaten with the native soy. Butter is not yet in demand among the Japanese, notwithstanding that there are a large number of cows and dairies in Yeddo.

A BABE DIES FROM FRIGHT.—The Boston Herald asserts that an infant only five days old died from fright in Newtonville, Mass., on Friday last, under the following circumstances: On that evening a very heavy thunder storm prevailed in this vicinity, and at each report of the thunder the babe jumped spasmodically, and gave every evidence of thorough fright possible in so young an infant. At last a terrific clap came, and it died instantly. The lightning struck a house only a few rods distant, but it is not thought that the electricity had any effect upon the child, for it was not felt by any others.

A New Press which Prints 22,000 Papers an Hour.

[London Cor. New York World.]

For fifteen years Mr. Hoe, and Mr. Conquest, the London manager of Mr. Hoe's works, have been endeavoring to perfect a "Perfecting Printing Machine," and they have at last succeeded. The last difficulty which stood in their way—the perfect delivery of the printed sheets from the press—was only recently surmounted. Now their machine, they believe, is is perfect; and that it is perfect also in the opinion of others may be judged by the fact that the proprietors of the Daily Telegraph to-day decided to have ten of these new machines immediately constructed for them, and to have them placed in the new offices which they are about to erect in the rear of their present premises. The ten machines can be constructed in about ten months; and in a year from this time the Daily Telegraph, with its "largest circulation in the world," will be printed upon presses each one of which will be capable of delivering 23,000 completed sheets per hour! Does not that take your breath away?

The whole force necessary to each of these presses is two men and a boy—with them 22,000 perfect copies are printed in one hour; and the saving of wages, as between this and the ordinary ten-cylinder Hoe, is 15 to 84. The only one of these presses now complete has been built for Lloyd's weekly newspaper; and to-day at Lloyd's paper mills at Bow its performances were witnessed by a number of experienced newspaper people, among them the proprietor and engineer of the Daily Telegraph establishment. The press did the work it was engaged to do; it printed 22,000 copies of Lloyd's paper in sixty minutes, and never was there better printing. The cost of the press is £3,500; the ten ordered by the Daily Telegraph will cost £35,000; and the engines and other machinery for them will bring the sum up to $200,000 in gold. The present establishment of the Daily Telegraph is about as perfect as need be, but it is all to be thrown aside for these new presses, which, although costing so much, will, in the opinion of the owners of the paper, save them $75,000 a year, besides the advantage of enabling them to go to press at 3 o'clock in the morning instead of at 12 a. m. In a word, if this new machine really proves to be what it seems, it will become a necessity to every great newspaper establishment.

Managing a Husband.

A Pennsylvania lady has a most romantic and ingenious way of managing the gentleman so happy as to be her husband. Exasperated by her persistent conversation, he ungallantly boxed her ears the other day. The wretched woman cast but one lingering, reproachful glance upon her lord and fled, simply observing as she departed that the briny deep should wash away the insult. Leaving behind her everything most dear to her—the home of her married life full of beautiful and cherished memories—this heart-broken woman rushed frantically to the canal, and, with one parting sigh, threw in a large stone with a mighty splash. Then she went and hid herself in the bushes and giggled, while her husband and twenty other men hurried up, with horror depicted on their countenances, and wildly dragged the canal for her body. When the injured wife became convinced that the wretch had suffered enough, she appeared from behind the bushes and led him home, a resigned and willing victim.

Ripening Pears.

Josiah Hooper furnishes some excellent directions on picking and ripening pears. After alluding to the common test of ripeness for picking, namely, gently raising the fruit to see if it will readily detach itself at the stem, he directs that the specimens be placed thinly and evenly on the floor of a cool room, on a blanket previously spread, and then covered with a second blanket. He says: "In a short time the effect of the treatment will be apparent in the most golden-colored Bartletts and rich, ruddy-looking Seckels imaginable. Pears perfected in this manner rarely have the mealiness of their naturally ripened companions, nor do they prematurely decay at the core, as when left on the tree."

Noxious Gases in Wells.

Lives are frequently lost by noxious gases in wells. This may be prevented by the adoption of the following very simple means: Take some pieces of carpet, or common sacks, and make them up into a loose bundle, nearly as large as the area of the well. Inclose in it a brick to give weight, and attach to the bundle a rope of sufficient length to reach to the bottom of the well. Throw this bundle down the well, and haul it up again as quickly as possible. Repeat this operation rapidly for ten minutes, and the atmosphere of the well will become quite obnoxious, as may be proved by letting down a lighted candle. The bundle, as is easily understood, carries before it a quantity of fresh air from the surface, and this, of course, displaces the foul and dangerous air from the bottom.

Peaches and Nectarines Grown Under Glass.

The art of growing peaches and nectarines under glass has been practiced with much success for many years by Thomas J. Pullen, of Hightstown, N. J., and his father, the late Isaac Pullen. In England, this is called orchard house culture. It is a difficult art, and very few succeed in it with anything like a profitable result. Mr. Pullen, however, every year exhibits and sells a large quantity of magnificent fruit from his forcing-houses. We yesterday saw some specimens of Stanwick nectarines, grown under glass by Mr. Pullen, which were really superb in size and color. Also some Crawford's late and old mixon free peaches, grown in the same way, which are rarely surpassed under any kind of culture.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

GRANT IN MAINE.

The Cause of Cæsar's Recent Visit to the Home of Blaine—A Nice Little Game—Blaine for the Senate and Grant for a Third Term.

[Augusta Cor. Boston Post.]

The purpose and inducing object of the visit of President Grant to Speaker Blaine at his residence in this city, this week, which has already been detailed by telegraph, has been the subject of much speculation among politicians hereabouts. Some affect to believe that it has been occasioned by a friendly and social motive, while others intimate that it has much to do with the plans and arrangements of the next Presidency. It is evident, from the gathering of office-holders and Administration file-leaders and certain projected moves on the national checkerboard, somewhat ambiguously made, perhaps, yet still capable of easy and plain interpretation, that some political movement of importance is in progress. Precisely what this is it may be difficult to be determined by those not favored with views inside the "charmed circle," but certain glimpses therein strongly lead to the conclusion that the President has made a change in his "policy" in reference to the next Presidency, and instead of supporting with the whole power his Administration, the nomination of Mr. Elihu B. Washburne as his successor, which it has been announced might be his intention, he has now determined to use all the power at his command to secure a re-nomination for himself, and plainer evidences of this determination may be expected in the horizon of the near future. To a person less selfish than Grant one would suppose that the deep obligations under which he rests to Washburne for his nomination in 1868 would appeal with such force that he would not hesitate to give Washburne his assistance in such emergency as that under contemplation, but would gladly give his friend all the aid at his command, with a readiness, power and persistence that could not be resisted by the party laymen. Grant, however, appears to be moved by different and less noble impulses from those which actuate men generally; he is so thoroughly selfish that he utterly forgets and disregards the claims of gratitude which Washburne or anybody else holds upon him; he cannot see Washburne's claims when his own desires run counter to them, the overshadowing is so darkly drawn. Blaine, willing to enter the lists of the Republican nominatien against Washburne, or even, if necessary, to lead any bolting opposition under the name of labor reform or any other popular movement, is yet too timid and sagacions, withal, to array himself against Grant and his patronage. Even had the country at large mapped out with that precision and exactness which he has long exercised in his control of this State—knowing the price of every doubtful man and the most feasible way to reach him—he has not the available means at his command, neither can he have, to achieve success in this way as against Grant, who has, and will continue to have during his entire term of office, absolute control of an unlimited electioneering fund, which can be raised and expanded at pleasure, at such times, in such manner and sums as he may direct. No autocrat of the East exercises more absolute power and control over the rights and property of his subjects than is vested, directly and indirectly, in Grant. If he desires to raise a corruption fund of fifty millions of dollars, his orders are given to his subservient department officials, and forthwith naval, Indian, and other corrupt contracts are given out, with margins sufficient to meet the demands of the occasion, to say nothing of the sums capable of being realized from the Government Treasury by his willing tools, who, though acting in subordinate positions, have been proved to thoroughly understand the eminently original and genuinely radical principles of "addition, division, and silence."

GRANT'S AMBITION FOR A THIRD TERM.

Having the selfish, itching desire for a third nomination, with plenty of corruption money to expend, totally devoid of modesty in advancing his claims, and with sixty thousand willing, obedient office-holders to perform for him the "work that tells," it is easy to perceive that Grant can so manipulate the machinery of the party, through the convenient caucus, as to secure as many nominations as he desires. And there appears to be no room for doubt that he intends to use his power to force himself on the country for a third term. This determination has been announced, and already the work of preparation for the contest has commenced, and will be persevered in with that dogged persistency which is the only valuable characteristic that he discloses. The dull, unambitious man has become, through the associations and training he has received in the past few years, one of the greatest of selfish, designing schemers, and, should it become necessary, will not hesitate to use his military power to foist himself upon the people in the retention of his grasp upon the Presidency, with all its opportunities of gratification to his irrepressible cupidity. The country may be prepared to witness, during the next three years, the disgraceful spectacle of a President neglecting the public interests and the duties of his position, and expending all his efforts and directing his whole official action with the sole view of aiding his own selfish schemes for a re-election. His reprehensible conduct in giving vitality to the recent salary-grabbing bill by his official signature, and his alleged lobbying for the the success of that iniquitous measure before it had passed his Congress, will have been patched over, forgiven, or forgotten before the contest for a renomination actively opens, as his lobbying for the San Domingo job has long ago ceased to be remembered against him; and with all the necessary means and appliances, and the wheels of the party machinery under his direct and immediate control, with sail well trimmed, will be a light and easy matter for him to secure the coveted position.

BLAINE'S SENATORIAL ASPIRATIONS.

It is evident that Blaine realizes this, [illegible] and retires from the field, merely determining to postpone the gratification of his long-cherished desires for the Presidency, and is now, thus early, courting the support of the Administration for the United States Senatorship as successor to Hon. Lot M. Morrill, of this city, whose desertion by Blaine in the memorable Senatorial contest of 1869 will be remembered, as through it Lot was barely yet effectively laid low by Hamlin, the great "Baskahegan Giant" of the East. Blaine seeks the Senatorship as a stepping-stone to become Grant's successor in 1880; he fears to engage in a contest with Hamlin for the Senatorsnip held by the latter, which is to be filled by the Legislature of next year, knowing the sentiment of the people of the State to be decidedly adverse to selecting both United States Senators from Augusta, whose increasing power and prominence in political, railroad, and other matters, they have come to view with a distrust which has required little fostering to promote to a troublesome growth. Blaine, therefore, and for other reasons which might be added, will postpone his claims, holding his troops in camp, extending his lines and strengthening his outposts for the struggle for the position now given by Morrill; with good reason he prefers a fight with any Kennebec or Western man to one with Hamlin, who will have no mean competitor in Hon. J. H. Drummond, of Portland, and a strong, well-prepared, and quite confident opponent in Gov. Perham, either of whom will make quite as prosperous a fight as it would be possible for Blaine to wage under the circumstances. Blaine, therefore, aims to become Mr. Morrill's successor, and to do this the more easily, avoiding thus much friction, he desires to dispose of poor Lot in some position where he will be well out of his way. And in this may be found the particular motive of Grant's visit to Augusta at this time, to arrange satisfactorily with Blaine to procure his assistance for his own renomination, by providing some scheme of official position to remove Morrill from Blaine's otherwise smooth pathway to the United States Senatorship, and the long-yearned-for prize beyond.

THE CHIEF JUSTICESHIP

has been mentioned as a good and convenient shelf on which to place Mr. Morrill, who, though not yet converted into salt, as was his female namesake anciently, is a shriveled up piece of clay, nearly fit for preservation without the necessity of any embalming process, and is prepared to submit without a struggle to be disposed of in such manner as will best gratify the selfish ambition of younger, smarter, more active and skillful, and less honest leaders. But a wise provision of the Constitution intervenes, and will not permit such an appointment. Probably, as the Governorship of the State is already bargained by the ring for the next five years, and, furthermore, as he lacks requisite State popularity, and, perhaps, even ambition for that place or that of Representative in the lower National House, a foreign mission or some other convenient deposit for mummies will be Morrill's receiving tomb, nolens volens. Holding the party in the hollow of his hand, Blaine will find no difficulty in using his "coax, drive and buy" policy to compass the defeat of any of his coadjutors who may, perchance, rise up in the pathway of his progress to height whence his dearest hopes can be seen to end in fruition. Blaine is happy in the assurances of Administration help which he has received; while Grant chuckles in a quiet, satisfied curl of tobacco smoke, that the plans of his pet scheme open under such gratifying auspices.

Massachusetts—"Look at Her."

There was a Massachusetts once of whom Daniel Webster said: "Look at her." Well, "look at her" now. Look on this picture and then on that, being two views of her representation in Congress:

It would make the contrast still broader to prosecute an inquiry how far the Massachusetts Representatives of to-day are interested in Credit Mobilier, in land grabs, in granite contracts, in the purchase of a new site for an Executive Mansion, etc., etc. In addition, it may be remarked that six of the above-named persons drew $28,000 as "back pay" for the last Congress, and that ten Massachusetts Representatives in that Congress pocketed $46,500 "back pay." Look at her! There she stands. And Ben Butler for next Governor.—Chicago Tribune.

The following are a portion of the leading Republicans who, while in official position, held out their hands for plunder and were tainted with the Credit Mobilier fraud: Schuyler Colfax, ex-Speaker and ex-Vice President; Henry Wilson, present Vice-President of the United States; Mr. Daws, Chairman of the Committee of Ways and Means, and yet knows so little about finance that he had to ask Ames how to invest his money; Mr. Garfield, Chairman of the Appropriation Committee; Mr. Bingham, Chairman of the Committee on Judiciary, now a foreign minister; Mr. Scofield, Chairman of Naval Affairs; W. D. Kelley, leader of the protectionists in Congress; Senator Patterson, Chairman of the District of Columbia Committee; Senator Harlan, Chairman of Indian Affairs and editor of Administration organ at Washington; Senator Allison, of Iowa; J. F. Wilson, Government Director of the Pacific railroad. All of these are upheld and defended by the Republican press. Wearing as they do the railroad collar about their necks they are sustained by the party.

"WHY are you forever humming that air?" Foote asked a man without a sense of tune in him. "Because it haunts me." "No wonder," said Foote; "you are ever murdering it."

The Creation, According to the Modocs.

Mr. Joaquin Miller, in his book entitled Life Among the Modocs, has given some picturesque sketches of Indian life and traditions. Among much other interesting matter, he tells us that the idea of the creation of the world as it was entertained by the Modocs, now verging on extinction in accordance with the demands of modern civilization, was this: The Great Spirit made Mount Shasta first of all. He pushed down snow and ice from the skies through a hole which he made in the blue heavens by turning a stone round and round, till he made this great mountain; then he stepped out of the clouds on to the mountain top, and descended and planted the trees all around by putting his finger on the ground. The sun melted the snow, and the water ran down and nurtured the trees and made the rivers. After this he made the fish for the rivers out of the small end of his staff. He made the birds by blowing some leaves which he took up from the ground among the trees. After that he made the beasts out of the remainder of his stick, but he made the grizzly bear out of the big end, and made him master over all the others." Having done that, the Great Spirit converted Mount Shasta into a wigwam, and its volcanic eruptions are the outcome of the fire that he lights in the center of the mountain. The development of man was a later occurrence. The daughter of the Great Spirit, venturing too far, got astray and fell into the power of the grizzly bears, and she was forced to marry one of them, and the red men were the fruit of the marriage. These red men were taken under the protection of the Great Spirit; but the grizzlies were punished by being compelled to walk on four feet, whereas before they had walked on two. To this day the grizzly bear is never slain by the red men, who recognize in him a sort of kinsman.

Mormon Dome.

Among the events of the famous Mormon war was the burning of the Nauvoo temple. The structure was burned in the night time, and so successful was the party engaged in its firing that probably he was never suspected. The recent death of the incendiary, however, has removed the necessity of further secrecy, and a day or two ago we were put in possession of his name and the facts connected with the burning of the temple, by the only living person cognizant of them. The temple was fired by Joseph B. Agnew, who recently died in Appanoose township, Hancock county, in Illinois, at the age of 58 years. It was always supposed that the party who burned the building had entered through the basement, but the facts are Mr. Agnew surreptitiously obtained a key to one of the doors of the temple sometime before the act. No one was engaged with him, and only four knew he was the party. Agnew prepared his fire balls and other combustibles at his residence. Placing them in his saddle bags, he rode on horse-back to Nauvoo, and in the night entered the temple with his key, passed up the cupola, arranged his materials and fired them, and then quietly escaped the way he came. Our informant, who is a responsible and prominent citizen of the western part of the State, says he can produce the key of the temple which Agnew secured in order to accomplish his work.

A Mad Hoosier.

There are some fine specimens of manhood among the rural population of Indiana—regular Spartan fellows, in fact. A high-toned agriculturist of that State last week had his barn-yard fence burned by the sparks from a passing locomotive. He swore, and went into the house to make out a bill against the corporation. The next day a recently-completed calf-pen was burned by sparks from the same locomotive. There was no swearing about it, however. The time for words was past. With stern determination he went to work and piled a couple of cords of fence rails upon the track, and, about the time the train was due, set fire to them. Then taking his double-barreled shotgun he calmly awaited the issue. The rails were seen quick enough for the engineer to stop the train; but, though justice was foiled in that particular, the old man had his artillery in reserve and brought it into immediate action. He emptied both barrels into the express car, and then, feeling that his mission was accomplished, set down his gun and surrendered. It is considered highly improbable in that section of the country that he will do his own harvesting next season.—Exchange.

Two Pounds of Baby.

William M. States has secured a lease of the diminutive baby which was on exhibition at the recent baby show at Pacific Hall, and proposes to start upon a tour of the Eastern States and Europe with this wonderful infant. The child was brought to Edouard & Cobb's photograph gallery, yesterday, to have his picture taken. Previous to the sitting a pair of scales were brought, and the weight of the infant, clothes and all, was found to be but two pounds and a half. Its name is Jeanie Orlanie, and it is three months and a half old. The father weighs upward of 190 pounds and the mother 150 pounds. This is their sixth child, all the others having attained the usual weight of children of their age. The little novelty is perfect in form, though not a very handsome babe.—San Francisco Chronicle.

A Paris Horror.

A large draper's shop has been burned, and reveals from the death of three shop assistants how the latter are boarded. All modern shops in Paris have the rolling iron shutter, which once let down is locked, the proprietor keeping the key. In the case in question, the assistants, after their supper, made their beds, as usual in such establishments, on the shop floor, the proprietor locking them up as safely as the goods. When the fire broke out there was no exit but by the shuttered door. The three young men cried for relief, the proprietor could not be found; the police cut at the iron with hatchets; the voices within grew weaker, then ceased. The inside of the shop was a furnace, and three shriveled—save where lengthened by muscular agony—carbonized masses were all that remained of the poor lads.

The Danger of Laughing in the Wrong Place.

In addition to the regular claque at the Paris theaters, a new profession has sprung up with a similar object, though the means of attaining the latter are not the same. The scene of action, too, is different, being in this in the Cafes Chantants. Attached to these establishments are certain individuals who, for the modest sum of two or three francs a night, engage to indulge in hilarious and contagious merriment, and at particular couplets supposed to be more than usually comic, to split their sides with laughter. But mere routine is occasionally rather dangerous, as was proved not long since by the following incident. Without the fact having been communicated to the professional laughter at the Cafe Chantant in the Champs Elysees, a particular song had been withdrawn from the programme and another substituted. The laugher had been quietly dozing without attending to what was going on, when suddenly rousing himself and looking at the clock inside the gate, he perceived, believing the programme unchanged, that it was time for him to indulge in one of his most excruciating fits of cachinnatory excitement. He did so. In another instant he was nearly murdered. He had burst out in the midst of a touching couplet about Alsace and Lorraine. Though he escaped with his life, his hat was smashed in, and his clothes torn off his body by the deeply-moved and patriotic audience, before he could explain that he was not a German in disguise, but an unfortunate professional laugher, who had exercised his calling in the wrong place.

How to Take a Drink of Brandy.

If young men will drink liquors, we insist that they should do it gracefully. A great many accomplished bar-tenders and polite by-standers have their risibilities excited to a degree dangerous to proper saloon decorum by the awkward manner in which upstart green 'uns take their grog, to say nothing of the danger from strangulation incident to starting a horn of brandy down the wrong way. The following is the proper way to do the business. It may come a little awkward at first, but practice will make it easy, and the habit of doing the thing gracefully and easily will save you from a world of ridicule, and from many of the evils which crazy temperance people are always charging as sure to follow drinking. Stand up straight like a man; your left side to the bar; take the glass neatly and firmly between the tips of the thumb and four fingers of the right hand, letting the little finger drop down to near the bottom of the glass; swing the glass in a plane exactly corresponding with the top of the bar, until it is precisely before you. Just then throw the head back a little, push the chin forward, so as to leave the throat in a full open, easy position. Compress the lips tightly, draw a full breath through the nostril, and, with a graceful curve of the arm, raise the glass until the rim is within about three inches of your chin. Now is the supreme moment. Just here, turn your eyes upward, think of your mother, and—open your hand, instead of your mouth! If anybody laughs it will be an insult which you should resent by never going there again.—Elkader Journal.

Narrow-Gauge Railways.

The difference between the cost of narrow-gauge railroads and ordinary four feet eight and a half inch gauge is rather more than most people imagine—that is, if we are to take the word of a writer in the Financier. There are now fifteen narrow-gauge railroads in operation in the United States, having 700 miles of track, and there are no less than twenty organizations and 1,250 miles under process of construction. The roads have been planned and constructed in the past two years. The cost through a level country is about $10,000 a mile, including equipment of rolling stock, while the broad-gauge costs from $35,000 to $40,000 per mile.

Sunrise Among the Clouds.

An aerial voyager thus relates his experience among the clouds at sunrise: "At 5:10 a. m., we gained our greatest elevation, which was about 12,000 feet, from which objects were seen at a distance of 150 miles on every side. The view of this stupendous landscape was enjoyed for about an hour, and at 5:15 we had the satisfaction of seeing the sun rise, which still more enhanced the beauties of the scene. Shortly after the balloon descended rapidly to a lower level, and all again was dark; and it was not until we had seen the sun set twice and rise three times that daylight was fairly established."

THE trial of General Bazaine is likely to furnish as extensive and just about as interesting a fund of literature as some of our American court-martials or the reports on the Ku-Klux cases. The preliminary report of Gen. Riviere in Gen. Bazaine's case fills four octavo volumes. This is before the trial has commenced. It comprises an account of the battles about Metz, a volume on the artillery, another on food supplies, and a fourth on the communications. The conclusion of the report accuses Bazaine of having capitulated without having exhausted all his means of defense, and of having caused his troops to lay down their arms without having made every effort in his power to avert this disgrace. These offenses, according to the code of military justice, are punishable with death and military degradation.

WATER THE DOGS.—During these warm days, be sure that the dogs have plenty of fresh water. There is reason to believe that many cases of dog-madness are owing to the fact that the animals are infuriated with thirst, while they have no water to drink. When you find a dog drinking water that is not clean, you may be sure that the requirements of his thirst are not fully provided for. Let the dogs have plenty of fresh water.

THEY tell of a harvest hand who was severely attacked with cholera morbus, and his physician asked if he had eaten anything the night before. "Oh, no; nothing but a couple of cucumbers, a can of cove oysters and a watermelon or two." Some peoples' stomachs can't bear anything.

Effects of Tobacco.

The use of tobacco has so much extended itself in the present generation that we are all obliged to make a decision for ourselves on the ancient controversy between its friends and enemies. We cannot form a reasonable opinion about tobacco without bearing in mind that it produces, according to circumstances, one of two entirely distinct and even opposite classes of effects. In certain states of the body it acts as a stimulant, in other states as a narcotic. People who have a dislike to smoking affirm that it stupefies; but this assertion, at least so far as the temporary consequences are concerned, is not supported by experience. Most of the really brilliant conversations that I have listened to have been accompanied by clouds of tobacco smoke; and a great deal of the best literary composition that is produced by contemporary authors is wrought by men who are actually smoking while they work. My own experience is that very moderate smoking acts as a pleasant stimulus upon the brain, while it produces a temporary lassitude of the muscular system, not perceptible in times of rest, but an appreciable hindrance in times of muscular exertion. It is better, therefore, for men who feel these effects from tobacco to avoid it when in exercise, and to use it only when the body rests and the mind labors. Pray remember, however, that this is the experience of an exceedingly moderate smoker, who has not yet got himself into the general condition of the body which is brought on by a larger indulgence in tobacco. On the other hand, it is evident that men engaged in physical labor find a muscular stimulus in occasional smoking, and not a temporary lassitude. It is probable that the effect varies with individual cases, and is never precisely what our own experience would lead us to imagine. For excessive smokers, it appears to be little more than the tranquilizing of a sort of uneasiness, the continual satisfaction of a continual craving. I have never been able to ascertain that moderate smoking diminished intellectual force; but I have observed in excessive smokers a decided weakening of the will, and a preference for talking about work to the effort of actual labor. The opinions of medical men on this subject are so much at variance that their science only adds to our uncertainty. One doctor tells me that the most moderate smoking is unquestionably injurious, while others affirm that it is innocent. Speaking simply from self-observation, I find that in my own case tea and coffee are far more perilous than tobacco.—Philip Gilbert Hamerton.

Time Devoted to Meals.

Dr. Derry states that the average time occupied in the process of taking food by the people of Massachusetts does not exceed from twelve to fifteen minutes for each meal. Such haste is injurous to health for many reasons. The process of digestion begins in the mouth with the acton of the teeth, and through the excitement of the salivary glands by the presence of food. Unless saliva is abundantly mingled with the latter, the first act of digestion is obstructed, and nature's plan is changed. This fluid not only lubricates but acts chemically in the mouth, if a reasonable time be given it, upon all the starchy elements which make up the great bulk of what we eat. When eating in haste, a great deal of air is swallowed. Air is, to a certain extent, always entangled in the saliva and assists digestion, but when "wads" of food succeed each other very rapidly, they seem to act like pistons in the tube leading from the back to the throat, and drive before and between them into the stomach such amounts of air as to distend that organ and impede its functions. Another effect of eating in this way is that the masses of food imperfectly mixed with saliva become impacted in the œsophagus, checking its muscular action, which is obviously intended to propel only one piece at a time. This embarrassment is overcome by taking at one gulp as much fluid as the mouth will hold, thus distending the elastic food, and washing the obstructed food into the stomach. All this is unnatural, and can hardly fail to work mischief.

A Clergyman on the Gallows.

The Rev. Dr. Carpenter, formerly of Brooklyn, N. Y., has gained an unenviable notoriety since the Russell execution, last Friday. This divine has been in constant attendance on the murderer, and became devotedly attached to him. On the morning of the execution, while the criminal was being removed from one cell to another, this preacher of the Gospel (whether for effect, notoriety, or show, will never be known) mounted the scaffold, and, while in position on the drop, artistically placed the noose around his ecclesiastical neck, put the black cap over his head, and meditated for nearly five minutes. The reporters present seemed to be trustful that the trap would drop, and the reverend hang himself for their especial benefit. Dr. Carpenter, not yet satisfied, must needs, after the doomed man hung suspended from the gallows beam, exclaim, in tragic tones and melodramatic style, "Murder most foul!"—San Francisco Letter.

Niagara Humbugs.

A late letter from the Falls says: Going under the falls for two dollars—especially when you don't go under the falls—is one of the swindles; paying fifty cents to see the whirlpool is another—especially when there is no whirlpool to see; the same sum for the whirlpool rapids is another—especially when you can see them better for nothing, unless you happen to have your mother-in-law with you, and to be animated with the hope that her love of nature's great phenomenon may tempt her too far, and give you the double advantage of her death and a cheap funeral. I met a party of three in the vicinity of these rapids yesterday. One was a gentleman recently married, whom I had known for a long time, and the two others were his wife and his mother-in-law. The old lady went farther and tarried longer than the rest. I suggested a doubt as to the safety of her venturings. "Oh," whispered the kind-hearted youth, "that's my mother-in-law, and there ain't rapids enough this side of —— to carry her off."

Took Refuge in a Log.

The romancer of the Detroit Press talks as follows: "A Detroiter named Andrew Steadman, who buys cattle, deals in hides, and occasionally makes a dollar by buying and selling produce, went out to Nankin township a few days ago to buy a span of heavy horses which were wanted by a firm in the city. Upon reaching the farmer's house he found that the man was working with a neighbor a mile away. To save the distance he cut across lots, but was warned before he started to look out for a savage bovine which had the run of a ten-acre field. Thinking how he was going to get that span or horses for $50 less than their value, Steadman kept plodding through the field, which had a strip of bushes two or three rods wide running half way across it. There were a few stumps and logs, one small tree, but nothing which prevented any one from crossing the strip. The Detroiter was about ten rods from the bushes when he heard 'a distant thunder sound,' and looked around to see from which way the shower was coming. About thirty rods away he beheld the old bovine coming for him, head down, back up and eyes blazing. Steadman was satisfied that he was the man who was wanted, and he went for the bushes. He thought the bull would stop and run around the strip, and was startled when the old fellow dashed through them on his trail, uttering a deep 'boom!' every instant. Steadman dodged this way and that, but the bovine took along after him, smashing bushes and leaping logs, and it was getting to be a red-hot affair when the man spied the open end of a large hollow log. The bull was not over forty feet behind, and into the log went Steadman, finding an orifice about twelve feet long, and large enough to be roomy. The bovine had seen the movement, and stopped at the log and ripped off a bushel of bark at the first dash. Then putting his horns under it he gave it a roll, and Steadman spun around like a dried pea in a policeman's whistle. The log was large, but old and tender, and every time the bull hauled back and jumped for it he covered himself with glory and clouds of bark and wood. Sometimes he whirled one end, and then he gave the center a heave, and then he knocked a foot off the other end. Steadman swore, shrieked and pleaded, his eyes full of bark and his mouth stopped up, and every act of his life passed before him like a vision. 'W-o-o-h! w-h-o-o-p!' bellowed the bovine, as he slammed away at the log, and every moment Steadman expected to see the roof cave in on him. He was in despair, when he heard the barking of dogs and the shouts of men, and after a few minutes the farmers succeeded in releasing him, but it took a good hour to get the kinks out of his back and the rotten wood from his ears and eyes."

A GREAT MODERN CONUNDRUM SOLVED.—In a select school in the Sixth Ward, the other day, a class of boys were spelling, when the teacher came to the word "sacrifice," and stopped to explain it and make a good moral point. She told them that sacrifice meant to slay, to kill, and also to forego one's own convenience for the sake of making others happy. "For instance," she said, "I have a kite, and a lame boy, who can't roll a hoop, or play like other boys, comes along and asks for it, what should I do?" A youth, named Snyder, raised his hand, and when nodded at, roared: "Smash him in the mouth and run!"—Detroit Free Press.

THE FLUTE.—Like many good things, the flute is a very old instrument. The Egyptians played upon it more than four thousand years ago, and the ancient Greeks, especially the Spartans, loved its strains. The name flute comes from the Latin fluta, a lamprey or kind of eel inhabiting the waters of Sicily, whose side is perforated with seven holes, as the flute was in primitive days.

The Auburn Courier

Thursday, September 4, 1873

It may make your railroad trip more pleasant to know that one hundred and fifty perions have been killed by the railroads of the United States during August.

A Fellow named Coleman, at Gallapin, Texas, engaged a coffin for a man named Smead, hired a grave digger and four carriages, and then hunted up Smead and shot him.

Andersonville, Texas, was visited by a preacher the other day for the first time, and the inhabitants would have got up a horse race for his entertainment if he had not stopped them.

Senator Adelbert Ames, who voted four times for the back pay steal, drew the money, and is, moreover, a son-in law of Brazen Ben Butler, has been nominated for Governor by the Republican Convention of Mississippi.

Gunckle is his name—Republican member from Ohio, and telegraph says he has not only refunded the back swag, but refused to take the "forward" pay that Mr. Morton thinks too "small." Now watch how Oliver will flounder about in the mire, and how he will finally wriggle out by a variously dated letter.

Morton has turned his swag into the Treasury after six months reflection, was it through conscience or cowardice If it was the first, it is a mighty slow one. If the latter it is not a very laudable motive. He hears the threatenings of the people and then relinquishes the spoils. How much credit is his due. Give him all he deserves.

Morton struck the "Key note" for the Radicals of Ohio, at Athens, on Saturday evening last. It is the same old argument used by him during the war. He was particularly silent on the Credit Mobelier steal, and Salary Grab. He gave the living issues of to day before the people, the go by, but hurled invectives at the Democracy.

Gen. Butler opened his campaign for the Republican nomination for Governor on Tuesday evening, at Worcester. His speech is purely a personal defence, and in making this defence he refers to some of his enemies in a savage manner. The indcations are that Butler will be victorious in the contest. We hope he may; it will be a good lesson to the citizens of Massachusetts to have this black guard for their chief executive for two years. He will do less harm as Governor than as a member of Congress.

We admire the style of the Democrats of Pennsylvania at their late State Convention. The Committee on Permanent Organization selected R. Milton Spear, a member of the last Congress and a Salary Grabber, for permanent chairman of the convention. The sterling Democracy of the old Keystone State could not stand the disgrace of being presided over by a Treasury thief, and the report of the Committee was unanimously rejected and an honest man selected to fill the place. The conduct of the Pennsylvania Democrats is worthy of imitation.

—Stump orators are naturally prone to deal in round numbers. Thus Mr. Morton tells us that President Grant's administration has paid off $380,000,000 of the public debt, and reduced taxation $130,000. Accepting these round numbers, we have been under the impression that it was the people, by means of taxation, and not Gen. Grant's adminstration, that had made so large a hole in the public debt within the past five years. What Mr Morton ought to have figured out was how much more of the public debt the people would have paid off in the same time, if the Republican party had not diverted a large portion of the actual taxation to the enrichment of special interests. If all the money which the people have paid out in taxes and duties had been added to the revenue, and all the reduction which has been made had been taken from the special interests now under protection, Mr. Morton could have made a still better showing for Gen. Grant's administration in this particular, though it is a matter with which Gen. Grant and his personal administration have very little to do.

The speech of Hon. William Allen is deserving of careful attention, as showing and ably enforcing two points. That the great danger which confronts the "government of the people and by the people" at this time is corruption and dishonesty and treachery in high places; and that the party which offers office to rebel Generals is not too consistent in denying the right of Northern War Democrats to hold office. On the former of these points, especially, Mr. Allen's utterances are statesmanlike, and will be received and read as such.

The old party locks are terrified at the movements of the people, all over the West, for reform. Gov. Morton, in his first speech at Athens, Ohio, had to answer a note sent up to him enquiring what he had done with and how he stood on the back pay steal.—Old Ben Butler says Morton was the first to advocate it, but finding it unpopular with the people he was among the first to swear he never knew anything about it. No wonder old Cameron admires the bold Butler over the timid Morton. But Morton cannot fool the people much longer.—He has recalled all his Ohio appointments.

The Cleveland Leader (Dyed-in-the wool) speakes with a voice of warning to the Republicans of Ohio. "We tell our Republican friends that the nomination of Bill Allen is no joke. There is to be no boy's play in this campaign. The Democratic party is stronger to-day than it has been in Ohio for many years. The courage of that party has revived, and it will go into the contest resolved to deserve success, even if it do not win a victory. Republicans must open their eyes, and they must appreciate the gravity of the occasion, for a victory over the Democrats this fall will be a harder job than any victory we have ever won over the confederate force of sick Republicans and politic Democrats."

The question is frequently asked, "Who is responsible for the Salary Swindle Bill?" We answer the question by stating that the United States Senate is composed of 17 Democrats and 57 Republicans, and the House of 103 Democrats and 138 Republicans. The President of the United States, who is a Republican, is required by the Constitution to give his assent to all laws before they become binding and valid. Now, without directly answering the question, we ask the intelligent reader, "Is not the Republican party responsible for the Salary Swindle Bill"? If not, who is responsible? Certainly not the Democrats, though individual members of that party may have voted for the "grab." We repudiate it.

—Will some good Republican paper tell us why it is that the Congressmen who voted for the salary increase are all "thieves" and the President who signed the bill and made it the law is only responsible for an "error in judgment?" If one is a thief the other is equally so, and if one is to be excused on the grounds of error in judgment all should be acquited for the same reason.—Auburn Courier.

Will the Courier please inform us why the minority of the Republican members, who voted for the salary increase are all "theives" (according to Democratic authority) and the majority of the Democratic members, who voted for the increase, are only responsible for an "error in judgment?" Is there a difference 'twixt tweedle-dee and tweedle-dum?—Kendallville Standard.

Well, that is not answering our question, but we'll answer the above in order that our neighbor may have no excuse to answer the first promptly and fairly. We regard any Democrat who voted for the grab as great a thief as Grant, who signed it, and the Republican members are no more thieves than they. We have said this time and again. Our query has reference to both parties. Now will the slippery Standard answer the first question above, without equivocation. If congressmen are to be condemed for voting for the "swag" why should not Grant, whose signature made it a law, receive the same censure?

FINAL SETTLEMENT.

Notice is hereby given that William Lessig, Administrator of the estate of Elizabeth Walsworth deceased, has filed his Final Settlement report in my office, which will be heard at the next term of the DeKalb Circuit Court.

J. R. LANNING, Clerk,

Sept. 2, 73.

As will be seen by a note in the telegrams, Mr. Morton was finally driven to refund his part of the grab. He made an agreement with Mr. Pratt, his fellow Senator, to do this same thing when Congress adjourned and while Mr. Pratt promptly put his swag back Mr. Morton came home, and a characterless sheet in the city at once announced that he had refunded the spoil. The statement was made so positively, that some of the presses in the country half believed it, not knowing the untrustworthy character of the medium through which the assertion came. Presently the Treasurer threw open his books and it was seen that Mr. Morton still held the stolen money in his possession. Then a plea was made that he did not mean to keep it, but proposed to send it back "some time." The country rang with the scandal, and no trust was placed in any assertion from Mr. Morton or his friends, because it was well known, as the files of the Congress Globe attested, that among the champions of the bill, Mr. Morton's name stood very conspicuous: It was further known that he had characterized the theft as "a political blunder," whereas the people regarded it as a moral iniquity, not less repugnant or mischievous than the Credit Mobilier or Secor thefts. Just as he is about to appear on the stump, Mr. Morton, appraised by the public clamor of the danger of further trifling, sends the spoil back, and hastens to show his good deed before men. It was just aweek ago yesterday, that Mr. Morton made up his mind to disgorge, and yet the organ speakes of knowing of the restitution for "some time," and that the Senator, some what tired of abuse had finally consented to let his virtuous act become known by men. Beautiful modesty! Precisely five days did the modest man hide his repentance, and on the sixth opened himself before the people. Of such is the leader of parties.—Ind. Sentinel.

While we do not believe it probable or possible that Grant will be elected to the Presidency for another term, there can be no doubt that he is a candidate and is shaping things for the accomplishment of that purpose. His dast success, his want of ability, and his vaulting ambition has led him to believe that it is only neccessary to make a request and the voters of the nation would willingly confer upon him the office of Chief Executive for life. While the leading Republican journals may not even tolerate the idea of a third term, is does not prevent his being a candidate, nor is it sufficient evidence that he will not be the Republican nominee for the next Presidency. The leading administration paper at Washington has expressed itself on this question in terms that cannot be mistaken. It says that if General Grant "desires the Presidency for a third term, he can have it, for the people have learned to trust the hand that has guided the ship of State safely through so many perils, and they will keep him at the helm as long as the exigencies of the State may need and his willingness to serve the country may make him available." This from a paper which is the recognized mouth piece of the President, must certainly reflect his views, as well as the views of the leading Republican politicians at the capitol. The leading papers of the Republican party may treat the idea of a third term as a trivial matter, other Presidential aspirants may regard it of no consequence, but we apprehend that before the end comes, they will find it a serious matter. With the nation's Treasury under his control, and immense patronage at his disposal, we see no reason why he cannot procure the Republican nomination if he desir it. His chances to be nominated for a third term are as good, if not better than they were for a second term, but the possibility of being elected are not so flattering.

A convict in the Northern Indiana State Prison was asked by a visitor a few days since what was the first step to his ruin, when he answered: "The first step was cheating a printer out of two years subscription—when I had done that, the devil got such a hold on me that I could not shake him off." What a sad warning to those who think that it is no crime to cheat the printer.

J. L. Davis is receiving a large lot of stoves and stove furniture, such as patent skillets, tea-kettles, &c., of a new and improved pattern, all nicely polished on the inside. We saw a nice base burner coal stove delivered the other day, and it will not be long before these come into general use. The fuel is fed in at the top and it holds enough to last a whole day.—Call in and see the new styles of cook stoves, &c.

Run-a-way.—An exciteing run-away occurred last Saturday, at Corunna. Mr. Moses Willis and son were crossing the Railroad bridge, which covers the Air Line track at this place, just a train was passing below. The horses became unmanagable and run about eighty rods, when the vehicle was turned upside-down throwing Mr. N. and his son upon some lumber, injuring the latter, so much so that little hopes were had of his recovery. One of the horses was also very badly hurt.

Commissioner Gonser desires us to state that we over estimated the cost of the fence around the court yard. He says it only amounted to 8 cents per foot instead of 10. Well, we knew well enough that this was the case, but we were so ashamed the niggardly amount would go abroad to our everlasting credit as a county, that we exagerated for once, and guseal it two cents higher. We are glad, however, that the above commissioner makes the correction as it relieves the other two from considerable embarrassment in the matter.

Man Killed.—A man by the name of Joseph Troy, while going from Ft. Wayne to Angola, last Saturday, on the accommodation train, went to the side door of the caboose car, when the conductor ordered him away, seeing that he was in an intoxicated condition. When the conductor went out Troy stepped forward to the front platform and it is supposed, for nobody saw him, fell between the cars for he was picked up shortly afterward near Summit, and lived but a few moments.—His body was terribly cut and mangled. He was employed at Angola. And yet the same thing will be repeated again soon without a doubt

Commissioners' Proceedings.

The Board met last Monday, all the members present:

The bridge across the St. Joe, at Spencerville, was let to J. A. McKay, at twenty three dollars per lineal foot for 146 feet.

The petition of E. Y. Williamson for vacation of alley in Waterloo was granted

The viewers appointed on petition for vacation and relocation of road in Jackson township reported in favor of petition which was confirmed by the Commissioners. The old road commences 65 rods south of township line between sections 2 and3, and runs southeast 65 rods, passing over land owned by D. E. Draggoo.—The road as relocated commences 100 roads south of township line, passing through land owned by Wm. McClellan and J. E. Draggoo.

Hard to Believe.—We regret to make public the fact of the trial before Justice Altenburg, of one of our citizens who has heretofore borne a good character. The charge is simply frightful, that of committing a rape upon a little girl, who lived with him at the time. It seems that a few ago months Smith who resides a short distance south west of town, on his farm took a little girl by the name of Garver to raise. A few weeks ago she left him and then made the charge of committing a rape upon her person. At the preliminary trial last Monday the Justice deemed the evidence of such a character as to require the defendant, Smith, to enter into a reconnizance of $5,000 to appear at the next term of court. If Mr. Smith is innocent, as we trust he is, he is still in a bad position, one from which it is not so easy to be extricated, yet we hope on account of his former good character, and for his relatives and friends, that he will be vindicated if innocent and duly punished if guilty.

We have been known in Fort Wayne many years to be the most successful clothing house ever opened in the city. It is not only our liberal advertising that has made us popular but our fair and honorable dealings, with those who have stood by us since we have been in the business. In selling them nicely made clothing at reasonable prices they have advertised us. With the 20 years experience we have had since boyhood, we profess to know the wants of every one and what class of goods are wanted. Therefore we can say that we can fit a boy of the small size up to the largest man in the grade of goods, from the finest to the lowest grades. We caution those who are not acquainted in this place to enquire for us before you drop in some other place where they have been trying to imitate our well established place. It is to your own interest as well as to ours to come direct to us at the popular Red Front, No. 5 Keystone Block.

Good common suits for men from $6 to $10, Cassimere suits from $9 to $20, fine cloth suits from $12 to $25. Cloaks from $3 to $25, with or without saques, men's working pants from $1 50 to $2.50, children, boys and youths suits from $3 up. We also keep a large line of hats, caps, shirs, underwear, gloves and many articles too numerous to mention, at exceeding low prices.

There seems to be some little disagreement between our School Board and some of our German citizens. By the new school law, a petition signed by twenty-five, or more, persons who desire the German language taught in our common schools, the Trustees are required to employ a German teacher for that purpose. A petition to this effect duly signed was presented to the Board, and the Board engaged Mr. Klackner, of this place, for this department. Mr. Otto was recommended, upon the part of the Germans and hence the disaffection.—The Board claims that Mr. K. is fully qualified to teach both the English and German and therefore will be of greater benefit to the school than an exclusive German teacher. On the other hand the Germans claim that Mr. Klinchner is not proficient in their language. The County Superintendent says that K. is qualified and upon this certification he is engaged. To an out-sider it is difficult to determine what is exactly just in the matter, but we think the Board possessed of sufficient intelligence and liberality to devise for the best interests of the school. We think there ought to be a German department, and that our German citizens should have every facility constructed with the public welfare.

A Splendid Establishment.

While at Fort Wayne the other day we visited the large and magnificent establishment of Mayer & Voirol, on Main-st., and found its appointments the most elegant and costly to be found in the State. The building, just refitted and handsomely arranged, is a three story brick, on Main, facing Court street, one of the finest locations in the city. The first story is used exclusively for the large retail trade of this popular firm, while the other two are packed with a first-class assortment of goods for the wholesale trade. The handsome and costly furniture, and dazzling brilliancy of their extensive stock is at once realized on entering their retail department. Black walnut furniture, beautifully carved and inlaid with rich settings, and filled with gold and silver in every form, the ticking of an hundred clocks, the display of beautiful watches, neatly arranged, the fine and valuable jewelry of every grade and variety, glittering in the cases go to make up a scene not to be found in every city the size of Fort Wayne. This firm can surely step to the front rank of dealers in their line of goods with becoming modesty, and Ft. Wayne ought to be proud of the enterprise and taste shown in the establishment of so magnificent a feature within her limits.

The Races.

Last Friday afternoon we visited the fair ground at Waterloo, and found quite a good attendance there to witness the two trotting races to come off that afternoon. The following horses were entered for the three minute races:

Grey Ida, C. B. Johnson, Camden, Dr. Everett, C. B. Andress, Hillsdale, John Brown. A. S, Leas, Waterloo, Lady Freemyre, J. Anderson, Colon, Jery Benton, J. Swihart, N. Benton. After several attempts at scoring, they finally got a send off, Dr. Everett winning the heat. After the heat he was declared ineligible to the race and Lady Fremyer came in winner of the race, Grey Ida 2nd, Jerry Benton 3d, the best time being 3 minutes ½ second.—The following enteries were made in 2:45 race: Wild Bill, N. Booth, Ann Arbor, Belle Gray, W. B. Conant, Coldwater Kit Carson, C. Howland, Hillsdale, Benny H. L. Slick, Quincy. Wild Bill came in the winner of the race, Belle Grey 2nd, Benny 3d. Time 2:45.

SECOND DAY.

The programme opened Saturday afternoon with a pacing race for which Grey Frank, Brown Billy, Selim and Scar-faced Charley were entered. Gray Frank was the favorite in the pools, and won the first three heats, Selim 2d Brown Billy 3d.—Brown Billy disappointed a good many coming on the track in bad condition.—Best time 2·43½. The second was a trotting race free to all. Tom Hunter, Bay Molly, Greenwood and Benny were entered Old Tom took first, Bay Molly Second, and Greenwood third. Time 2:39, 2:38¾, 2:38.

Died Yesterday.

Every day is written this little sentence: "Died yesterday," so-and-so. Every day a flower is plucked from sunny home—a breach is made in some happy circle—a jewel stolen from some treasury of love.

Each day, from the summer fields of life, some harvester disappears—yea every hour some sentinel falls from aloft to the ramparts into eternity. Even as we write the funeral of one "died yesterday," winds like a winter shadow along the streets.

"Died yesterday." Who died? Perhaps it was a gentle babe, sinless as an angel, pure as the zephyr's hymn—one whose laugh was as the gush of summer rills, loitering in the bower of roses—whose life was but a perpetual litany—a May-time crowned with the passion flowers that never fade.

Or mayhap it was a youth hopeful, happy and generous, whose path was hemmed by flowers with not a serpent lurking underneath—one whose soul panted for communion with the great and good and reached for the garden in the distance—But the heart is still now; he "died yesterday."

"Died yesterday." A young girl, pure as the orange flowers that clasped her forehead, was stricken down as she stood at the altar; and from the strong aisles of the temple, she was borne to the "garden of the slumbers."

An aged patriarch, bowed with age and cares, even as he looked out upon the distance hills for the coming of the aged hosts, sank into dreamless slumber, and on his door post is written: "Died yesterday."

"Died yesterday." Daily men, women and children are passing away and hourly in some grave-yard the sod is flung upon the dead. As often in the morn we find some flower that blushed sweetly in thee sunset was withred up forever, so daily, when we rise from the bivouac to stand against our posts, we miss some brother soldier whose cheery cry in the sieges and struggles of the past has been as fire from heaven upon our hearts.

Each day some pearl drops from the jewel thread of friendship—some lyre to which we have been wont to listen has been hushed forever. But wise is he who mourns not the pearl and music lost for life with him shall pass away silently as an Eastern shadow from the hills, and death be a triump.

THE LITTLE HAND.

[This sweet little gem of a poem is the production of the late Lady Lawrence, wife of Sir Henry Lawrence, who was killed in the beginning of the Sepoy rebellion, in India.]

That hand of thine, my precious child,
How oft its soft caress I woo,
And ask, with many a hope and fear,
What is that little hand to do?

How ductile, soft, unworn by toil,
The ready instrument of play,
It executes the fancies quaint
That make life thy one holiday.

It rolls the ball, it guides the pen,
And ciphers strange can deftly trace;
And oft, with warm affection's gush,
It fondly strokes my careworn face.

The mimic arms it well can wield,
And rein thy small and steady steed;
And when we con the lettered page,
Points to the tiny words we read.

And in thy parents' hands 'tis clasped,
When night and morn our prayer is pray'd;
And pillows oft thy rosy cheek
When slumber's spell is on thee laid.

'Twill not be always thus, my boy,
For real life has other tasks—
What is that little hand to do?
Once more thy yearning mother asks.

Is it to guide the seaman's helm,
Or point the gun 'mid flashing swords;
Or will it wield the student's pen,
And clothe thy thoughts in living words?

Will it be hard and worn with toil?
Or pale with sickness' livid hue?
Oh! could thy mother's heart divine
What is that little hand to do!

But might her fervent prayer prevail,
Unsullied should that hand remain—
Clean from corruption's filthy touch,
And pure from every sinful stain.

Still ready for thy master's work,
The servant of a willing mind,
More prompt to give than to receive,
And grasped in many a greeting kind.

And may another hand be found
To hold it in love's wedded grasp;
And may the hands which God then joins
Be one till death shall loose their clasp.

MY GRANDMOTHER'S LEGACY.

I shut my eyes—am I dreaming? I open them again. Oh, no, it is a bright reality. The close-cut grass stretching out from my window, down to the overgrown plantation, is the same across which my ancestors tripped in their high-heeled shoes, before the red tide of the revolution swept them away. The old stone foundation, with its broken Triton and mouldering dolphin, then threw its silver spray far into the sunny air; now, a few slow drops trickle among the mosses that fringe its edge.

Have you ever lived where there was not something that reminded you of the dead? This is the chair in which they were sitting, long years before I was born. Yonder is the couch where they were lying when death opened for them the door of life. Their eyes saw what I am seeing; their ears heard the song of the birds as I hear them now. The blue periwinkle stars in the glass on my table—I gathered them this morning under the oaks in the plantation; and so, hands that have been dust for ages, gathered them on some sweet spring morning in the past.

I am sitting in the little, dark-paneled room where, one sunny morning, my grandmother sat with her child in her arms, when a courier arrived, panting, breathless: "The queen is guillotined!" There was no more hope; my grandmother must fly. Clasping her babe to her heart, she arose; horses were saddled; a rapid flight to the coast; a tearful meeting with her husband, disguised as a fisherman; trembling haste; a crazy boat on a stormy sea; a landing on the shore of Scotland—poor, friendless, with aching hearts. Such was the story I had often heard from my grandmother's lips.

Left an orphan in my babyhood, she was father, mother, all to me. Hour after hour I have sat at her feet, listening to tales of "beautiful France," of the gay court, the beautiful queen, the old chateau where her happiest days were spent. "You were not born there, pauvre petite," she would say, softly. "Ah! that was wrong; but you may die there—I think you will. You will be thankful for that, Mignon?" And her eyes would wander over the bleak Scotch moor, seeing beyond them the blue sky and flowery fields of her sunny France. Does she know that her half-prophecy has been in part fulfilled? Does she know that at last my feet tread the grass-grown paths in the old garden?—that for me the birds sing and the trees shake out their tender leaves? A new generation of leaves, but still the same her eyes saw and loved. There is little changed. A friend remembered us; the estates were saved, and I inherited them. Not much money; but the gray walls, the trees, the fields, are mine. I look around; I say, "My own." Does she know all this? I believe she does. Her picture looks down upon me now; not as I remember her, with silvery hair shading her delicate high-born face, but young, with laughing eyes, and ripe lips just parted in a smile.

In the long salon beyond are rows of haughty faces, blooming faces, stern, wicked, saintly faces. One after another they lifted the burden of life, bore it awhile, then laying it down crept away to their long, dreamless sleep, under the stones in the little chapel. Now there is only one weak woman's hand to lift the banner of the name they bore so long and nobly. Stretch out your shadowy hands that its folds trail not in the dust! Strengthen me, shades of the dead, that I bear it not unworthily!

The air is still with that stillness that speaks of life, not death. Somewhere in the distance Jean is drawing water. The creaking of the wheel becomes musical through faintness. In the farmyard the busy hens are cackling, and one loud-voiced cock is crowing lustily. Lisette is clattering about her kitchen, singing a plaintive little song; the chorus reaches me—"Marie! Marie! je vous aime toujours." I am idly wondering who was Marie? And did the singer love her always?

Presently Lisette's heels click along the hall. "Mademoiselle's keys," she says, with a flash of her white teeth. Jean has found them among the periwinkle stars. I take them from her hand. One, smaller than the rest, has slipped off the ring. A little leather box, clasped with iron, stands before me on the window seat. A few days before her death, my grandmother gave it into my keeping. "Take it, mon enfant, it contains the life secrets of many of your race. There are stories, too, from other lips as they were told to me. You may like to read them. You will keep it for my sake." My life has been a busy one, and I have never opened it. Now, as I fit the key into the rusty lock and raise the lid, a cloud of dust salutes me, and a musty, moldy smell. The papers are mildewed with age, the characters almost illegible. One is tied with a black ribbon; choosing this, I unroll the closely-written sheets. One falls out; it is in my grandmother's clear, firm hand. Ah! how long ago was that written! The date is 17—.

"A strange thing has occurred. I was ill—very ill—a year ago. Dear Henri begged the Moorish physician (so he is called) to see me. He came, tall and grave. I was frightened. He was gentle to me, and I grew to like him. He is always among the poor; he will receive nothing from any one. Henri offered him money; he refused. I gave him my hand, he touched it with his lips. No one knows whence he comes, or who he is. The poor bless his name. He never smiles. I was sure he had some great sorrow.

"One day a man came to me and handed me a letter:

"'I am ill. Will you come?'

"I went with Henri. The room was hung with black. The physician was by a window, looking out upon the court; it was full of people—poor, and many weeping. He stretched out his hand and smiled. 'I have sent for you, madam, to say "farewell," and to ask for your husband to procure passports for my servant—he is to take me home.'

"'Not now,' I cried, 'you are ill.'

"'No, not now,' he said; 'to-morrow.'

"I had flowers for him—roses, delicate fuchsias, and pure white lilies. He took them eagerly, inhaled their perfume, fondled them, and told me the legends of their birth.

"'This is my flower,' he said, lifting a lily from the rest. 'It has returned to us.' He held it close against his heart, saying softly, 'Is it an omen of good?' He sat musing a long time, gazing up at the blue sky.

"'Au revoir,' I said as I bent over him. He looked up brightly:

"'No; adieu.'

"At the door I turned again; he waved his hand, then raised the lily to his lips and smiled. In the morning his servant came and gave me a packet; it contained the manuscript I inclose. On the outside was written:

"'This is the story of my life. No one will know it but you. Adieu.'

"The man was weeping. His master had died during the night."

I unrolled the yellow sheets. There was no heading to the story they contained. I looked at the end; there was no name. It commenced abruptly:

"I come of a doomed race. A curse hung over me at my birth. In consequence of a horrible crime committed by one of my ancestors, the good genius of our race deserted us, and a demon, fierce and cruel, shadowed us with his black wings.

"The first-born-child of every generation was doomed, if a boy, to an early and violent death; if a girl, to a life of misery. Generation after generation the curse had fallen. By water, by fire, by the sword, the first-born son had perished; and a mother wept bitter tears when a girl was placed in her arms. There was a legend that the curse would cease when one was found bold enough to foil the demon; then, and then only, would the guardian of our race return.

"There is Moorish blood in our veins. In the third generation our remote ancestry shows itself. Men call me 'the Moorish physician.' True to my instincts, I have devoted myself to the study of Eastern lore. The volume of the heavens has long been open to my gaze. Earth's deepest mysteries have yielded to my touch. The voices of the deep breathe mighty secrets to my ear, and in the war of the elements, the flash of the lightning, the roar and thunder of the waves, when man shrinks back appalled, my spirit finds its wings.

"I was the second son. My brother was assassinated by an unseen hand.

"I returned to my home and plunged deeper and deeper into the abstruse studies I delighted in. Why could they not suffice! Alas! I loved. Ah, fatal power! When we willed it, our love must be returned. As I knelt before the altar, I looked upon the fair creature who had yielded her pure heart to me, as the priest may look on the victim at whose throat he holds the knife. I was pressing the cup of anguish to those ruby lips; those sweet eyes would soon overflow with bitter tears. And yet, madman that I was, with eager haste I clasped the fair blossom closer to my heart, knowing that my fatal grasp must blight its bloom forever.

"For one short year, earth's fairest hues spread out before me; and then, in darkness and in tempest, our child was born. There were vague mutterings in the air as I took my infant daughter in my arms. Do you wonder that I could not answer back her mother's happy smile? My rose and its sweet bud grew day by day in loveliness. I suffered tortures. Oh, that she might be taken before her gentle heart should bleed for the sufferings of her child!

"Years passed. She began to fade—my beautiful flower. I watched her anxiously. The wind and the wave saw my sorrow; they reveal no secrets. Her sweet life ebbed so slowly—would it be too late? With a sigh of thankfulness I closed her beautiful eyes.

"I wandered from land to land, taking my child with me. I watched her every step. In agony I waited the time when the doom of our dark race should fall on her innocent heart. In Madrid a Spanish nobleman saw her. Her beauty charmed him. Rumors of my wealth had reached his ears. Artfully, selfishly, he wove his chains around her. How I hated him! From the first I knew him. The woe was ever worked by a human hand; and as I watched the baleful light in his hard eyes—the close pressure of his thin, cruel lips—I gnashed my teeth in impotent fury. My darling! can you not see how that strong, fierce hand will crush all the sweetness out of your fresh, young life? And she loved him. He would turn to me with a smile of scornful triumph when her innocent eyes told him this. Madly jealous, if she displeased him he would cast a cold, hard look upon her, whispering harsh, cutting words of anger, till she paled and trembled, lifting pleading eyes to him. And I was powerless!

"I took her home. The Spaniard followed us. Our German winter chilled him, but he persevered. The spring came. Step by step he was forcing me back. In vain I nightly lifted despairing eyes to the proud stars; they smiled down coldly on me, but no voice came.

"Again I read the moldering parchment which recorded the dire curse, and the mysterious words of prophecy regarding its fulfillment. By fasting and watching I strove to read their meaning.

"'The red hand shall do, while the white hand shall fail.'

"'The cypress-crowned cup shall confer immortality.'

"Both of these images foreshadowed death.

"Then followed a legend:

"A flower bloomed in the cleft of a rock. The fierce waves saw it; they coveted its beauty, but the rock laughed down on them as they surged and foamed at its feet. The tempest woke, the waves arose; they dashed their spray far up the face of the rock. Then the rock cried, 'Oh, Azrael! take thou the flower, for I can shelter it no longer.' Then Azrael heard, and stretching out his strong right hand he plucked the flower and bore it to sunny plains, where long it bloomed in peace and beauty.

"In the watches of the night the meaning was made clear to me. I knelt and cried 'Oh, Azrael! I give my flower into thy keeping. See that thou bear her tenderly to sunny plains, where angel hands shall welcome her.' Then I called my child. She came and laid her sunny head upon my shoulder. I gave the cup of death into her hand; I watched her drink it. I spoke playful words to her; I told her it was the elixir of life, and she smiled as she took it from my hand. I drew her to the casement; she lay in my arms, and I spoke to her of the things she loved—of the flowers and stars, and of the heavenly plains where her mother wandered. She listened dreamily. I forced my lips to smile as she clasped her arms about my neck. Her breath fluttered a little, and her startled eyes sought mine. I turned away. Suddenly she said, 'My father, there is some one standing in the moonlight, holding out to me a fair, white lily.' Then I knew the guardian of our race had come for this, his child. I bowed my head.

"In the morning came the Spaniard. I bade him follow me. We stood beside her. He wrung his hands and wept. I had foiled the demon.

"Do you wonder that while others smile my lips are grave? Do you marvel that I keep vigil by the couch of pain and sorrow? I have no remorse. I did no wrong. Her pure, white soul went up to God without one stain of earth to mar its loveliness. But oh, my child, my child! Faint voices call to me—a hand has beckoned from the stars—my time is short! My angel ones, I come!"

I laid down the manuscript with a shudder. Could this be? I looked around me fearfully. There in her dress of green, God's beautiful earth smiled up at the sky. The birds were singing overhead; in the kitchen Jean and Lisette were laughing; the bees hummed in and out of my window. Life—busy, beautiful life—was all around me. Turning the key on the ghostly story, I went out into the sunshine.

Mrs. Young, No. 17.

Testimony thickens in the case of Ann Eliza, wife No. 17 of the Prophet, to show that her matrimonial misery is merely a myth. John W. Young, the son of the Prophet by wife No. 1, who is now in New York, has made a public statement, in which he affirms that Ann Eliza is a falsifier, and the truth is not in her. According to the statement of Young, Jr., Ann Eliza got divorced from her first husband, who was a plasterer, and was a widow with two children when she married Brigham. When she contracted her polygamous marriage, she did so with her eyes open. The farm on which she resided was the best in the Territory, and the house in which she lived, a handsome cottage, costing $12,000. A horse and carriage was at her service, and five servants ministered to her wants. When she said she must come to the city, she had a handsome house furnished her, and Brigham's steward was ordered to provide her with everything she desired. Mr. Young further said, "If Ann Eliza had only asked for a divorce, and she had gone to President Young and told him what she wanted, he would have divorced her on the spot, and it would not have cost her three cents." Mr. Young closes his screed with the pertinent remark that, if the rest of the world desires to convert the Mormons, better examples of its goodness must be sent to Utah. Ann Eliza is evidently in a bad box. There is no probability that the courts will grant a divorce. Brigham will not compromise, his son says, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding, and Ann Eliza can never again be allowed to resume the family relations or enjoy the apostolic embrace. She has evidently gone out of the frying-pan into the fire.

Transporting Stock.

The Turf, Field and Farm says: Our manner of transporting live animals is so fiendish as to call for prompt reform; and without the real facts are presented for the consideration of the people, there will be no change for the better. In the year 1872, there arrived at the seven cities—Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Albany, Providence, and Boston—1,000,324 cattle, 2,932,149 sheep, and 3,465,446 hogs. Estimating the average weight of cattle at 1,200 pounds, and the loss incurred by death in starving, smothering in process of transportation, at 10 per cent., we have a clear sacrifice of 120,038,880 pounds of beef. Placing the shrinkage on hogs and sheep at 15 pounds per head, we find that the loss on 2,932,149 sheep amounts to 43,982,235 pounds; and the loss on 3,465,446 hogs is 51,981,690 pounds. Aside from this, we must bear in mind that a very large per cent. of the cattle, hogs and sheep slaughtered are absolutely unfit to go into the human stomach. The tricks and inhumanity of the drovers and dealers cause a great waste, and add vastly to the cost of meats. It is full time that the consumer was made acquainted with the facts, in order that the cry for reform may be heard from one end of the land to the other.

Tell the Truth.—There is no moral difference between "white" and "black" lies. We think a great lie a great sin, and a great shame to a man; but, after all, little lies are much more dangerous, because there are so many of them, and because each one of them is diamond-pointed. And these little, petty untruths, which are so small that we do not notice them, and so numerous that we cannot estimate them, are the ones that take off the very enamel of the moral sense—cut away its entire surface.

A Vienna Bath.

I have been testing a bath-house. I explored the establishment, asking every one I met "fur ein warmes bad." Some pointed in one direction and some in another. At last I found myself before the woman who sold the tickets. I paid fifty kreutzers. She called "Marie!" Marie, a bright, black-eyed German maiden, came. She went to a shelf and burdened herself with a quantity of linen. Then she signed for me to follow. I went in an expectant, wondering and rather anxious frame of mind. Marie went into a neatly-furnished bath-room. Marie spread a linen sheet in the tub. Marie then turns on the water. Marie waits for the tub to fill, and I wait for Marie to depart, that I may commence disrobing. Marie seems in no hurry. I ponder over the possibilities involved in a German warm bath. At last Marie leaves. Then I modestly remove my collar. Suddenly Marie returns. It is only to bring another towel. Great Scott! There is no lock on the door, and supposing I had been——. I got into my bath in fear and trembling. These people are so queer in their ways. Marie may return with two or three of those great, strapping German women to scrub me. I know nothing of their bathing customs. Marie no longer disturbs me. On emerging I examine the pile of linen she has left. There is a small towel and two seemingly large aprons, long enough to reach from the shoulder to the heels. I can't imagine what they are for, unless to throw on and dry oneself in. I put them to such use. I would so use forty were they left, for I am resolved to have my 50 kreutzers' worth in some way. When I inquired the use of the two aprons, I discovered that they were to be worn while Marie came in, and, turning off the hot water, lets on the cold.—Vienna Letter.

A Centennial Cheese.

Among the many suggestions that have been made in regard to the Philadelphia celebration of '76 that from a New Hampshire man who proposes to make a centennial cheese is the most remarkable. His letter to the commissioners, with the exception of some details which are eliminated, reads as follows:

"Dear Sirs: I speak of cheese—cheese in the grandest and most sublime sense of the term; cheese such as the world has never seen; cheese!—hundreds of thousands of pounds of it. It shall be an immense plain, the consolidated efforts of every cheese manufacturer in the United States, and will be capable, when laid down upon its side, of accommodating many hundreds of people. Such a cheese as the one I speak of would certainly create astonishment, and would gain for our manufacturers the admiration of the world. I desire space for such a cheese. Can I have it? Answer."

It has been suggested that the cheese would answer a variety of purposes; that it would make an admirable race course, for its circumference would certainly exceed half-a-mile. Its surface would be even and free from dust, and when it had worn through the interior might be scraped out, leaving only its shell, so that windows and entrances might be inserted, and the whole thing might serve the requirements or a restaurant more wonderful than any of those farmed out by the Commissioner at Vienna.—Worcester (Mass.) Spy.

An Indian shield is a rare curiosity. The red warrior prefers, like the modern soldier, to fight with limbs unincumbered. It is probable that shields and spears were at one time in common use among the Western Indians, as among uncivilized nations of other quarters of the globe. The introduction of powder and ball has, however, made the shield comparatively useless. They are still occasionally to be met with, though not as common as when Catlin sketched with unequaled fidelity the manners and customs of Dakota tribes. Among the Southwestern Indians, more particularly the Comanches, shields are in general use, being efficient to fend off the Mexican spear. The editor of the Byan (Texas) Appeal describes one taken in a fight in March last. The shield was an exact circle, eighteen inches in diameter. The body was as stiff and unyielding as board and five times as tough. It was made of the thick hide of the buffalo's neck, thoroughly dried, and almost as impenetrable as iron. On one side it was decorated with fancy belting and strings for use and ornament; the other had a covering of fancy buckskin, stained with different colors, ornamented with beautiful feathers, the tail of a civet cat, and a young woman's scalp.

HUMORS OF THE GRANGE.

[The swiftly increasing numerical strength of the farmers' "Granges," or anti-monopoly associations of the "Patrons of Husbandry," in the West, has made it incumbent upon the average politicians of that section to assume agricultural pretensions as rapidly as possible. "Hay-seed in the hair and blue drilling overalls," says the Indianapolis Sentinel, "are now the fashionable affectation of him who craves the ballots of rural electors." The humor of this style of time-serving is obvious, and an accidental bard turns it to satirical account, for the Atchison Champion, in the following supposititious "Serenade of a Modern Politician to his Love:"]

The moon is shining on the grange,
The winds are hushed, the leaves are still,
The patient stars look softly down
Upon my cot at Shannon Hill.
Then come, my horny-handed love,
And wander through the dell with me,
And gaze at the Durham bull,
And listen to his pedigree.

Once I was in the railroad ring,
But now my hands are hard with toil;
I've scattered hay-seed in my hair,
And blacked my boots with harness oil.
My city cows have all gone dry,
I am no longer in my prime;
My day is drawing to its close,
And it will soon be milking time.

I think I know a new milch-cow
That's just exactly what I need;
She's thin from running out to grass,
But only wants a change of feed.
I'll mix a mash of free-trade bran,
Swindles, high taxes, and back pay,
And coax her to the ballot-box,
And feed her till election day.

With one to grasp her by the horns!
And one to hold her by the tail!
Oh, let me safely sit between,
And calmly fill my milking-pail;
And when November's breezes show
'Tis time my Berkshire hogs to kill,
I'll move back into town again,
And sigh no more for Shannon Hill!

Variety of Food.

The Scientific American is of the opinion that we require variety in our food. It says experience has proved that, for some reason unknown to science, variety is essential to health after reaching the age when we are free to choose our food. The perpetual recurrence of the same edibles, even though their number be considerable, becomes in all periods of life, except infancy, not only wearisome, but positively injurious. Salt pork, salt fish and potatoes, with pies, poor bread and Japan tea, are the staples of food of thousands of families during our long winters. It should be understood how needful a change of diet is from time to time. Fresh vegetables, particularly in the country, are readily obtained and preserved, and should be unsparingly used. The edible roots, as turnips, carrots, onions and beets, and cabbages, are as well worth preserving as the omnipresent potato. All these vegetables need thorough boiling, and more than they generally get.

Practical Advice for Fishermen.

First—Find out if there are any fish in the river to which you are going; if so, get some one who knows the water to show you where the fish lie; and when he shows them to you, don't you show yourself to them.

Second—Don't imagine, if the fish does not dart away, that he has not seen you; on the contrary, he is very likely devoting his whole attention to you, and preparing to start the moment danger is imminent.

Third—If you are fishing with a fly, and you pass it neatly three times over him, and he refuses it, you need not wait any longer; he has seen your line of invitation, and does not intend to come.

Fourth—If you are above a fish when you hook him, get below him as soon as you can; for if you pull him one instant against the stream, and he is a heavy fish, he will break his hold.

Fifth—Never throw a long line when a short one will answer.

Sixth—Never mind what is said about "playing your fish till he is tired;" put him in your basket as soon as you can.

Seventh—Remember that everything depends upon the way you begin your acquaintance. If you can prevail on a fish to go down the stream a little way with you, you will afterward have no difficulty in persuading him to let you have the pleasure of seeing him to dinner.

Siamese Cats.

The Pittsburgh Post says: "Mount Washington can show something in the cat line that we venture to assert can be found nowhere else. A few days since a cat belonging to George Cramer, a butcher, gave birth to five kittens, all formed together in various parts of the body. This Siamese quintuplex condition of affairs, however, did not appear to suit the feelings and comfort of the mass, and a persistent struggle ensued between the kittens to effect a separation, which has finally been made. As a consequence of the dissolution of the union, some of the kittens have six legs while others have but two. Those who have seen two cats with their tails tied together, and thrown over a line, can imagine how desperately those infant kittens struggled for liberty. Those that survive (most of them are dead) exhibit all the characteristics of the feline race in general, but their condition does not contribute additional weight to the aphorism that 'union is strength,' as it will require very careful nursing to bring them safely out of their kittenhood. The mother seems to regard the curious freak with complacency, is proud of her offspring, and, for aught we know, credits herself with originality in the production of something quite out of the usual line in this business. Had the kittens been secured in time, and preserved, they might have made a trip round the world as curiosities in some traveling museum. Maj. Burnell ought to have them."

A Kentucky Double-Header.

Sylvester Bowman, of Claiborne county, Ky., undertook to bruise the head of a six-foot serpent lately, but the pesky serpent came near turning the tables on Bowman. Another man helped him out of the scrape, and the snake was found to have a horn at the end of its tail a little over an inch and a quarter long, shaped like a rooster's spur. But what was still more astonishing, it had two eyes in its tail, which, excepting the horn, was shaped exactly like the head, but was not so large. Indeed, to have seen the tail one would have thought that it was the head, and that the horn was its tongue. The horn was very sharp. The snake seemed very fierce at its tail-end, and endeavored to strike everything that came near its tail. Various experiments were made to ascertain whether it could see with the eyes in its tail, and it was demonstrated beyond a doubt that it could. These eyes had lids, which opened and shut and gleamed with anger. Indeed, the tail-head seemed far more fierce than the other head. It was so fierce at both ends that it was necessary to shoot it. This statement was vouched for by the minister of the place, the selectmen, schoolmaster, and editor.

Colored Jews.

In the city of Cochin, Hindostan, says the Jewish Times, live some 2,000 colored Israelites, whose skin is not so dark as that of the genuine Ethiopian. They are Jews in every sense, worship the God of their fathers, the only true Jehovah, and are intellectually the superiors of the white inhabitants of the place. According to their own account their origin is as follows: The conquest of a portion of the East Indies by the Europeans opened to commerce a wide field and attracted a multitude of speculators from all parts of the world. Among these were many young Israelites from Bagdad, Bassorah and Yemen, who came to make their fortune in the new Eldorado. After they had settled down they purchased from the negroes black female slaves, many of whom were afterward converted and then married by their masters. It was from these marriages that the present race descends. Ancient Hebrew manuscripts and law tables, written on parchment, have been found among the Cochin Jews.

Dog and Logic.—A fat old gentleman was bitten in the calf of his leg by a dog. He at once rushed to a magistrate, and preferred a complaint against a joker in the neighborhood, whom he supposed to be the owner of the offending cur. The following was the defense offered on the trial by the wag: 1. By testimony in favor of the general good character of my dog, I shall prove that nothing could make him so forgetful of his canine dignity as to bite a calf. 2d. He is blind and cannot see to bite. 3d. Even if he could see to bite, it would be utterly impossible for him to go out of his way to do so, on account of his severe lameness. 4th. Granting his eyes and legs to be good, he has no teeth. 5th. My dog died six weeks ago. 6th. I never had any dog.

Give Them Work.

Children enjoy playtime all the more if they have work to do on occasion. If you would have your little ones interested in home and its surroundings, and also have them grow up to love work, and to depend upon that for their happiness, give them a personal interest in something. One child may have a piece of ground and be allowed to cultivate it, appropriating the proceeds as he pleases. Another may have a few fowls and be taught to keep an account of their eggs and the cost of their keeping. Even in towns, something of this kind may be planned for each little one, which will combine profit with pleasure, and give them habits of industry.

Another Step.

The Northern Pacific Railroad Company has with characteristic energy taken another important step in the prosecution of its great undertaking. The camp-fires of the Stanley Expedition will hardly die out in Dakota before those of the construction corps will be burning. The Company, on the 15th inst., advertises for contracts to grade and bridge the line between the Missouri river and the Yellowstone, a distance of 205 miles, through the country which the expedition has just now passed; or rather the located line is some 30 miles north of the route pursued by Stanley, avoiding the bad lands through which he passed, and traversing a rolling prairie region, well watered and covered with the rich buffalo-grass, which affords the finest pasturage. The success attained by the Engineers of the Company in finding so good a line through what has been regarded as one of the most difficult sections of the whole route, must afford satisfaction to all interested in this great National thoroughfare.—[Com.

Old Humbugs Discarded.—Thank heaven, the old-school practice is passing away. Ipecac, aloes, calomel, blistering, the lancet, and (worse than all) medicated rum, have given place to a new remedy, which bids fair to become the universal medicine of mankind. Vinegar Bitters is that remedy. It is destined to take precedence of all other curatives now before the world. The pharmacopœia and conspectus of the regular Faculty contain nothing that will compare with it. Every day hundreds of the sick are emancipating themselves from systems of treatment which entail great expense and do no good, and are flying to this cheap and absolutely certain means of relief. Dyspepsia, rheumatism, liver complaint, periodic fevers, sick headache, kidney diseases, constipation, nervous affections, and in short all maladies, acute or chronic, which do not involve the irreparable injury of some vital organ, are cured by this pure inalcoholic vegetable restorative.—[Com.

Want of Vitality.

If a deficiency of vital energy is not a disease in itself it is a condition which lays the system open to the attacks of all conceivable maladies. Night and day we are surrounded more or less by deleterious influences. No atmosphere is entirely pure, no water utterly free from injurious particles; while in many localities both are positively unwholesome. What defense has the weak, languid system, in which the vital principle is deficient or dormant, against any of the morbid influences which produce epidemic and other diseases? None whatever. There is no safety save in artificial reinforcement. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters have, beyond all question, a vitalizing effect. If the nervous forces of the body have been recklessly expended in exhausting physical or mental labor, or dissipated in the indulgencies of a "fast" life, this powerful vegetable tonic and corrective will restore them. If the defective vitality is a constitutional evil it can be remedied to a great extent by this wonderful invigorant. At a season of the year when the air is more or less impregnated with the seeds of periodic fevers, it is especially desirable that the digestion should be perfect, the habit of body regular, the liver active, the blood pure and the nerves firm. These conditions are the best protection against all disorders, and they are conditions which the Bitters are better adapted than any other medicinal agent to promote and secure. See to it, however, that no imitation or counterfeit is substituted for the genuine article, and let all who value health and have an antipathy to poison beware of the local bitters made from condemned drugs and vilely adulterated alcohol, which have sprung up like unwholesome fungi all over the country.

NOTICE TO INVESTORS.

The attention of the investing public is called to the limited remainder of the NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD SEVEN-THIRTY LOAN. Of the $9,000,000 of this loan unsold on the first of June last, less than $5,000,000 now remains, and this balance will soon be absorbed, after which the Company has resolved to issue only six per cent. bonds.

There are now between 500 and 600 miles of the Road in regular operation, with a growing traffic; surveys and construction are progressing satisfactorily; the survey prosecuted the present season in connection with the Stanley military expedition has resulted in the location of an excellent line through Western Dakota and Eastern Montana, and the Company has advertised for proposals for grading and bridging the Yellowstone Division, extending 205 miles from Bismarck, at the crossing of the Missouri river, to the crossing of the Yellowstone in Montana. The Company's lands (amounting to more than 20,000 acres per mile of Road) are selling to settlers at an average price of nearly six dollars per acre, and the proceeds of land sales constitute a Sinking Fund for the re-purchase and cancellation of first mortgage bonds.

The Company's seven and three-tenths per cent. gold bonds, the last of which are now offered, yield nearly 8½ per cent. per annum at the present price of gold.

All marketable securities are received in exchange at current rates, and full information furnished on inquiry.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR

To its Natural Vitality and Color.

Advancing years, sickness, care, disappointment and hereditary predisposition, all turn the hair gray, and either of them incline it to shed prematurely.

Ayer's Hair Vigor, by long and extensive use, has proven that it stops the falling of the hair immediately; often renews the growth, and always surely restores its color, when faded or gray. It stimulates the nutritive organs to healthy activity, and preserves both the hair and its beauty. Thus brashy, weak or sickly hair becomes glossy, pliable and strengthened; lost hair regrows with lively expression; falling hair is checked and stablished; thin hair thickens and faded or gray hair resume their original color. Its operation is sure and harmless. It cures dandruff, heals all humors, and keeps the scalp cool, clean and soft—under which conditions, diseases of the scalp are impossible.

As a dressing for ladies' hair, the Vigor is praised for its grateful and agreeable perfume, and valued for the soft luster and richness of tone it imparts.

Why Matt Carpenter was Refused.

The Tribune finally explains the cause of Carpenter's rejection from a Long Branch hotel last week:

We are not in the midst of a hot campaign, and as there is no reason for attacking private character or retailing political scandal or seaside gossip, so there is no excuse for suppressing the truth when its publication is needed, and no pretext for attributing it to partisanship or predjudice. Distinguished public men, Representatives and Senators in Congress, have had the effrontery to stand up in Congress and before their constituents and undertake to defend as shameless a breach of public trust as ever was thrust in the face of a decent people, and instead of a hot outburst of indignant denunciation, there has been only a sort of sick-at-the-stomach turning away from the low flung self seeking gang-rascalities have been developed in all departments of the Government that should keep our prisons more than full were justice done —legislation has been bought and sold, corporations have in the most deliberate and unblushing manner bought seats in the Senate for their retained attorneys—the Legislature has become a market place, and the polls an arena for violence or bribery—and we settle down to our lower standards of morality, our debasing tendencies and constantly deteriorating moral sense with complacent calmness as if to the natural and inevitable. How far shall we let this numbness of perception, this utter deadness to all sense of shame, carry us? Granted that in the fierceness of our money-getting passion we may put conscience out of court entirely, and sacrifice everything to the main chance—shall we stop at that? Or are we to have sitting at our hearths as household gods all shames and crimes? The last great scandal, touched lightly by the press but bruited everywhere now, is not of avarice and greed, but of intemperance and lust. Open, public, brazen, flaunted in the faces of decent wives and mothers, and of pure daughters and sisters a shame, foul-fronted, sickening, beastly. Between the sensual sot, of brilliant intellect but vile associations and depraved habits, who so lately he himself and paramour on public exhibition in this city and at Long Branch —between him and the Presidency of the United States are but two lives, and one of them of frailest tenure. Is the nation drunken that it sees this large disgrace paraded under its very eyes, and takes into its nostrils the stench of the offense, and makes no sign of nausea? Has dead and buried decency no resurrection? who and where is the clear-thinking stetesman—no, not statesman, common man — every-day man— hard fisted, rough, and hearty, but honest way down, true to wife and family and his own manhood who will roll away the stone from the sepulcher of public virtue? The time calls out for him. The country waits his coming. A nation bowed down with the shame brought on it by its trusted servants, with its face in the dust, paces in its anguish for some convulsion that shall rend the heavens and purify the air. And the United States Senate—what is its duty? Has it any self respect left?

The Art of Being President

In the August number of the Atlantic, James Parton, in his paper on Thomas Jefferson, talks of the "art" of being President, in a manner that will no doubt convince those who read it that there is such an art. In this he places Thomes Jefferson at the head, and gives these as the chief characteristics which stand out strongly in these days;

1. Mr. Jefferson would not appoint men to office merely because they were conspicuous partisans.
2. He took great care to get the right man for the right place.
3. He would not give an appointment to a relative.
4. He turned no man out of office because he was opposed to him in politics.
5. He reduced the patronage of the Government to the minimum.
6. He endeavored to simplify the apparatus and the operations of Government, so that the rural member of Congress and his constituents might understand them.
7. He abolished court etiquette and every usage that resembled it.
8. He declined to receive presents while in office.
9. He used the prestige and the opportunities of his office for the public advantage.
10. In his use of the pardoning power he was governed by principals that rendered that absurd relic of Divine Right comparatively harmless.

A Lancaster Justice of the Peace has had under advisement for a week a case turning on the question whether "twisting the tails off of poor pups at the first joint, has injured the pups or beautified them, and at last accounts was unable to decide it.

Edward Haris met with a terrible and fatal accident at his sawmill in Brooklyn, Conn., not long ago. His body was cut completely in two by a circular saw, one of his arms cut off and his heart cut in two. He was alone in the mill at the time, and no one knows how the accident happened.

When John Bright the Quaker member of the British Cabinet, is presented to the Queen, she allows him to dispense with kneeling and kissing her hands, and shakes with him like a common christian.

There is a body of Christians in Maine calling themselves "Repository Baptists," a schism from the Free will Baptists. Their distinctive principle is opposition to an educated ministry.—Standard.

Sarah DeCamp was laughing and gigling in church at Grand Banks, Neb., when the preacher said, "The devil has his eyes on Sarah DeCamp." The next day Sarah DeCamp's body was hauled from the river, her sensative nature having impelled her to suicide.

At Brigeport, Conn., recently, while police officers Jeanings and Hearty were conversing, a dog owned by the latter attacked Jennings. The animal was beaten off, when he jumped at his owner, catching him by the neck and cheek, and inflicting fearful and probably fatal wounds.

If a man must be robbed by highwaymen, Wisconsin is the place to have it done A pair of these gentry who were robbing a farmer, the other day, held an umbrella over his head to keep the sun off while they went through him, and offered him a sip of good brandy when they had finished the job.

A gentleman was chiding his son for staying out late at night, and said: "Why, when I was your age, my father would not allow me to go out of the house after dark." "Then you had a deuce of a father, you had," said the young profligate, whereupon the father very rashly vociferated: "I had a confounded sight better one than you have, you young rascal.

Jefferson Davis does not yet understand that he was beaten in' the late onpleasantness." He thinks he was cheated, instead. He has a great confidence, too, in the Southern women. All these facts appear in a speech he has just made at White Sulphur Springs. We suggest to Mr. Jefferson Davis that the war for the Union is over, and that time can more profitably be spent in looking toward the future than in mourning over the past.—Ex.

The Indianapolis Journal yesterday announced that "Senator Morton returned his back pay to the Treasury some time ago," and that the Journal "had been apprised of this fact for some time." The dispaches this morning bring the letter authorizing the return of Morton's share of the salary grab to the Treasury. It bears date August 19th—just 8 days ago. The Senator declares that he had from the first determined that he would not draw the money. This is very thin. The sublime courage which would enable a man to endure for five months the scoffs and jibes of partisan friends as well as political opponents, is only drawn from a serene consciousness that five thousand dollars in good unearned greenbacks awaited him at the subsidence of the popular clamor, Oliver sinned away his day of grace, and his act of restitution, long delayed, proceeds from cowardice instead of the promptings of conscience.

WISHART
PINE TREE!
Tar Cordial,
NATURE'S GREAT REMEDY
FOR
Throat and Lungs.
☞ ☞ ☞
It is gratifying to us to inform the public that Dr. L. Q. C. Wishart's Pine Tree Tar Cordial, for Throat and Lungs diseases, has gained an enviable reputation from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast, and from thence to some of the first families of Europe, not through the press alone, but by persons throughout the States actually benefited and cured at his office. While he publishes less, so say our reporters, he is unable to supply the demand. It gains and holds its reputation—
First. Not by stopping cough, but by loosening and assisting nature to throw off the unhealthy matter collected about the throat and bronchial tubes, which causes irritation.
Second. It removes the cause of irritation of the mucous membrane and bronchial tubes, assists the lungs to act and throw off the unhealthy secretions, and purifies the blood
Third. It is free from squills, lobelia, ipecac and opium, of which most throat and lung remedies are composed, which allay cough only, and disorganize the stomach. It has a soothing effect on the stomach, acts on the liver and kidneys, and lymphatic and nervous regions, thus reaching to every part of the system, and in its invigorating and purifying effects it has gained a reputation which it must hold above all others in the market.

SENATOR THURMAN ON THE SALARY GRAB

We take the following from a speech delivered by Senator Thurman, at Waverly, Ohio, last week!

I must have one word on the subject of the salary grab, because if I did not some body would say I had dodged it. You all know I opposed it from first to last, and finally voted against the conference report, and thereby the measure itself—(applause) and I did not wait for public clamor to tell me that I should not take that back pay, but in two or three days, I believe on the very day after that bill became a law, I resolved, and I will say it, to the honor of my colleague, that he resolved that not one dollar of thrt money would ever be touched by us [applause] and just as soon as the Deyartment beceded it was necessary to covdr it in the Treasury, that is to put it beyond your power to draw it, I did cover it in that way into the Treasury [applause] and I shall go back next winter to vote to repeal that law, with just the same earnestness that I fought against it from beginning to end. [applause.]

But now, let me ask you, who is responsible for that measure? Governor Mortod and Governor Noyes are going around the country saying that it is not a party question; that the Republican party is not responsible for it. Why, they applied a different rule in times gone by. Had not the Republican party an overwhelming majority in the House of Representatives, more than three to one, and in the Senate of the United States, and did they not have the President of the United States, whose simple vote would have prevented that measure from becoming a law? How can they say that the responsibility was not upon them? How was it when the Missouri Compromise was repealed Was it of any avail when you said that the majoity of the Democrats in Congress had voted against that repeal? Nearly all of the Northern Democrats voted against it, but the thing was carried by the votes of the Southern Democrats and Whigs. Was that any answer to the people? Not the least bit. None of these gentlemen said that that was a no party measure. They said, you have the majority, and the President and you are responsible for the passage of the act repealing the Missouri Compromise and they said it with such effect that whereas before its passage we carried the state, the next election after the repeal we were defeated by over eighty thousand majority by their holding us the Democrats, responsible because we had the power in Congress. But now, when it comes to this salary grab, they said. "Oh, don't hold us responsible; there are some Democrats who are responsible for it." I am sorry to say that there are, but they are with the party which has the majority. And the President is responsible Why, who beleives that that bill could have passed if Grant had crooked his little finger. Why, it could no more have lived than you could live without the vital air. It was because it was known that he was in favor of it. He had only to say that I vote this bill and it would have been dead as stone. But what did he say and it is written in the law? 'Approved, U. S. Grant." He put it on the record and it is on your statute book that he approved that bill, salary-grab and all.

It won't do for them to say now that they are not responsible for that bill. I could, if I had time, show you by the votes cast on that occasion the responsibility as manifested by their leaders. But I won't do it, except in one case, and that is in the case of that gentleman who has come into this State to instruct you how to vote; that is the case of Governor Morton. They dared not introduce the increase of salary in a separate bill. It would have to be subjected to unlimited debate, and would be defeated. So they moved it as a part of the appropriation, and they could cut off debate by moving the previous question, which they did. In the Senate on the appropriation bill we were limited to five minute speeches, so we had no chance to talk much about it. That is the cunning way in which they did that thing. That bill h d first passed the House of Representatives. The Senate amended it. In the Senate bill, as it came from the House, this salary grab was not in it. The Senate bill was amended in certain particulars, and these men, who were lying in wait for the last expiring hours of Congress, waited until it came back to the House of Representatives, and then Benjamin Butler moved the Salary-grab as an amendment to the amendment made by the Senate, and it provided for the increase of the salaries of the President, Vice-President, the members of the Cabinet, of the divers heads of Bureaus and clerks, and, finally, of the members of Congress, making it go back so as to pay the members for the two years' work already done. They put it through the House of Representatives. When it came to the Senate there was a test vote on the amendment made by Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, and that vote was to strike off all the House amendment except so much as related to the President's salary. If that amendment had prevailed and the rest of the resolution agreed to, the whole effect would have been to raise the President's salary, and not a single member of Congress would have received additional pay. That was the test vote. That motion, if it had prevailed, could not have been called a salary grab except so far as the President was concerned. It limited the amount of the grab from a million and a half to one hundred thousand dollars, and I very cheerfully, although opposed to raising the Presidents salary, voted for that. I thought if the people are to pay it out of their pockets it is better to only pay one hundred thousand dollars, than a million and a half And in that vote, which was the test vote, where was Governor Morton found? Why, gentleman, among the knaves, that is among those who voted against that amendment and voted to keep the salary Grab in the bill, ade yet he comes around here and says he was opposed to it, making a speech the whole effect of which was to justify the increase. And it is said he is actually turning his money into the Treasury. It was a long time before he did return it, and it required a great amount of kicking before he turned it in.

Let us see where the Republican leaders in the Senate are. Roscoe Conkling, of New York, and Governor Morton, of Indiana, although voting against the motion of Mr. Edmunds, voted to keep the increase in the bill. They were not the only ones. There are Cameron and Carpenter, who are leading men. There was Conkling, Ferry, Morton, Nye, Sawyer, Stewart, all leading men. [illegible] these men, or any ten men in the Senate, had voted for the motion the salary grab would have failed.

But one word more. The Republican State Convention, with a consistency of logic most beautiful, have resolved that they have entire confidence in the integrity and wisdom of General Grant, and they approve him from top to toe. Further down in the resolutions that Convention condemns the increase of salary is not very strong terms, but sufficiently strong. And yet that Convention, which could condemn the members of Congress who participated in the salary grab, have no condemnation for Gen. Grant, without whose signature it would'not have become a law. But what respect has Grant shown to the opinions of the Republican party?

Well, what next? Why, next came John A. Bingham, of Ohio, who you say was in the Credit Moblier up to his eyes, and who was also one of the Committee who reported the Salary Grab in the House of Representatives, and maintained it by voice and vote to the very end, and took mighty good care to pocket his back pay as soon as he could draw it. What is done with him? What respect does the president exhibit in his case? Why, he appoints him to the first mission in the United States Government; he sends him to represent the Government of the Unite States at the empire of Japan, with his salary grab in his pocket, and with the proceeds of the Credit Moblier back of that.

What next? There is Shellabarger. He consulted with his own conscience in a long letter in a newspaper, and after prayfull considering the whole thing he thought it his duty, as a lawyer and an ex-member of Congress and a father, that he should pocket the Salary Grab. He held a high ethical court in his own brain and conscience, and he gave judgment in his own favor, forgetting the old maxim. 'That a man should not be the judge of his own cause.' He gave a decision, and that decision was in favor of himself. And what followed upon that decision? Why, right away this man who is thus stained with his back pay Salary Grab, is appointed to the Commissionership of the Civil Service Reform. Won't he reform every other fellow gloriously, after the manner he has reformed, himself?

Sarah DeCamp was laughing and gigling in church at Grand Banks, Neb., when the preacher said, "The devil has his eyes on Sarah DeCamp." The next day Sarah DeCamp's body was hauled from the river, her sensative nature having impelled her to suicide.

◆

"Dutch John" is what his Court House friends call him.

Mad as a March Hare.

A very touching case of mental alienation in a charming young lady is described by a careful observer. Not long ago her mother found her in her room energetically darning stockings, and soon after she appeared in the kitchen and assisted that wondering dame in making and baking bread and pastry. Alarmed by these fearful signs of intellectual disorder, her fond parents immediately watched her through a keyhole while she sewed buttons on her father's garments and mended those of her little brother.—Much affected, the venerable man remarked that never during a medical practice of twenty-five years had he known any young person to manifest such symptons as these.

The most heart rendering phase of all, however, was shown the other day when her kind father, with a faint hope of rousing her from her sad state gave her $200 and told her to buy a new dress. Alas! 'twas useless. She instantly observed that she didn't need a new dress, and if she would let her keep $25 to pay a poor widow's rent, she'd much rather he would take the rest of the money for himself. For a few moments the grief-stricken old gentleman gazed upon his hapless child, then hiding his face, muttered between his sobs, 'Her mind is gone! her mind is gone!"

A Mile a Minute.

Of the flight of a railroad train at the rate of sixty miles an hour, between Salem and Portland, in Oregon an editor of the Evening News, of the latter city, says: 'The depots and towns along the road presented a lunicrous appearance; they seemed to be stretched out like a piece of rubber!—The depots looked like bricks flying through the air, and telegraph poles distanced Highland flings to the music of the screaming whistle and the snort of the iron steed. The reins of steam were loosened, and the angry engine trembled as she bounded over the tinkling rails, scarcely touching them.—With the speed of lightning, almost, she passed over bridges, around curves, and over deep gorges, hurrying on with her freight of human beings to aid a sister city in her dread affliction. In the short [illegible] three minutes from the time of leaving the Salem depot, little capital engine was doing beautiful work in the city of Portland. Although the train started thirty six minutes behind time, it arrived at its destination just thirty minutes ahead of time.

Where can such rapid speed be equalled? Where was prompter response ever made to a call so many miles away, end so soon answered?—But one alone of the many passengers realized the dangers of the situation; the others would have said, 'give her more steam,' if that had been their privilege. We have been told of a laughable incident that happened at Milwaukee. A gentleman who wished to come down on the train was in waiting at the depot, and had stepped out near the platform in order to jump on board as soon as the train slacked up. While waiting patiently, he turned his eyes up the track and saw something coming. Strange ideas flitted through his mind of death and the hereafter. Not having time to reach tall timber, he embraced a large post in the shed, and clung to it for sweet life. As the train shot past, his hat was carried almost fifty yards, and his coat tails were both dislocated. As soon as he thought it safe to loosen his hold, he made a break for home, bare-headed, havinfi come to the conclusion that he didn't care to go to Portland, any way."

Under date Washington, August 26th, 1873, the following letter from Senator Oliver Perry Morton, of Indiana, is made public;

New York, Aug. 19, 1873.

The Hon. George C. Gorham, Secretary of the United States Senate:

You are hereby directed to return to the Treasury of the United States the money to which I am entitled by the law of the last Congress as increased compensation, known as "back-pay." I had determined from the first that I would not draw the money, and now comply with the formality which seems necessary to close up the matter in your accounts.

[Signed] O. P. Morton.

This settles the matter. But, while we record the fact that Senator Morton has covered his back pay into the Treasury, we rise to inquire of the Senator why he delayed this matter from the adjournment of Congress until the 19th of August, 1873?

DID IT PAY?

Sharply the sickle rings out through the air,
Cutting the billowy grass so fast;
Bright shines the sun on the broad hay lands,
Where wearily toil all the harvest hands;
All day long, with unceasing zeal,
They have driven the sickle and swung the steel;
Often and often they glance at the sun,
And as often wish that their day's work was done,
For the heavens all seem like bright, molten brass,
And the ground seems to scorch their feet as they pass.
But to old Farmer John, who leaned 'gainst the fence,
It all seemed a matter of dollars and cents;
He watched while the mowers fell the rich hay,
And watched till he saw it all hauled away.
And while he stood watching, he reckoned the yield
Of hay from the meadow and wheat from the field.
Of hay he reckoned, when all was done,
There would be at least full seventy ton;
Each ton, to count at the lowest rate,
Would bring twelve dollars, sold early or late.
And then he counted each bushel of wheat,
Cleaned from the thrashing of refuse and cheat;
Passed on to the oats, and ran the whole score,
And found he had hundreds of bushels more;
And then, in fancy, he paid off his hands,
Gathered his corn, and cleared up his lands,
Balanced things well for the year to come,
And found himself richer by quite a round sum.
Then said, as he ligh ed his pipe of clay,
"I knew that common sense farming would pay;
My land yields as well as any around,
Better stock than mine can nowhere be found;
My farm is in order, each pasture and lot,
My fences are 'up,' when I am about.
I have reapers enough, and harrows, and now,
Just one thing I need—'tis a new 'Gang plow.'
It will save, in the end, the wage of a man,
And I'll make by saving whenever I can."
The farmer forgot, when he laid his plans,
The good wife at home, who had stayed his hands,
Who had toiled for him when none other would,
And in every way had done what she could;
Who had starved, and pinched, and slaved herself,
To help him gather his hoard of pelf;
Who had worked, when with fever her hands were hot,
To help him purchase one more "pasture lot."
He forgot to ask, in his thankless greed,
If there was not something his wife might need;
He forgot to ask if she had a care,
Or a wish as to how should be spent her share.
He forgot how often, in vain,
That the old farm-house might be painted again;
He forgot how she'd toiled from year to year,
With the household arrangements all crooked and queer,
When a few days of labor, or dollars' outlay,
Would have fixed things convenient—just the right way,
And while, in fancy, he drove his new plow,
(A certain possession with him now,
Thinking how much it would speed his work,
This new "Gang plow," with its new-fangled quirk.)
It never entered his head to buy
A sewing machine for his wife, O Fie!
"His mother had sewed with her hands, and she
Was as good wife as woman could be;
He wasn't the man who 'gim-cracks' would buy,
When money was scarce, and taxes were high."
Time went on; all the hay was sold,
The wheat and corn brought plenty of gold,
The plow was bought, and with money in bank,
The farmer was "rich with no one to thank."
With no one to thank! though his wife was bowed
With striving to carry her end of the load;
Bowed and wrinkled, and seamed with care,
With many and many a silvery hair;
Beauty and youth had slipped away,
In the wearing duties of every day;
'Till Youth, Ambition, and Health were gone.
What to her were broad acres of waving grain,
When she ne'er might see sons or daughters again?
What to her were the barns with grain piled high?
What the finest stock that money could buy?
Long years ago, she had wanted the gold,
To give her children the wealth untold,
Of education, position and place,
But these were denied to her very face.
Now, when her boys and girls were gone,
And weary and old she was left alone,
She only sighed, at the very best,
To be left a little space for rest;
And when, worn out with toil and strife,
The good wife ended her weary life,
The farmer saw at what fearful cost
He valued the life that now was lost.
But unavailing were tears and remorse.
Ah! he would have given his very best horse
To see his wife in the house as of yore,
But love and the dead return no more.
And this was the end! Ah! let it be told
There are some things better than land or gold.
There are things more worth giving a life to gain
Than "the choicest stock," or "the finest grain."
So Farmer John thinks, as lonely and gray,
He wonders if "common-sense farming" does pay.

A LITTLE MISTAKE.

"Why don't I marry? Not because I have any dislike to womanhood; far from it."

"How about the 'little Rose?'" several voices cried in chorus, but our host instantly replied, "Hush!" It was a sore point with him.

I have mentioned our host, and now let me introduce him. He was a man of powerful build, fair, with a profusion of whiskers; with beard and mustache, but soft, light eyes, which had nothing in them of his character, reckless and jovial. His words, given above, sprang from some banter of ours (there were half a dozen of us who had sat after the late dinner in the largest room of the smallest but "snuggest" shooting-box the whole county of Yorkshire contained) upon his apparent dislike of the gentle sex. Perhaps we felt curious to know why or how it was that a man with an unencumbered estate, a congenial temper, and a good country gentleman, albeit on the verge of forty, should not long ago have been—what shall I say? in love? no, that is not always the case, but—married.

Few of us, it may be, thought at the time that we called out "How about little Rose?" that there was a sore point there. It was only an imperfect knowledge of the story of a young lady with whom our friend's name had been mixed up; but such of us as were best acquainted with it remembered of hearing of a little governess in a private family where he visited (where it was thought the daughter of the house, a coarse, showy girl, was the attraction) being found hearing a a declaration of love from our friend. The story went, too, that the governess, upon whom they had some claim of relationship, was sent from the house upon a planned tale of her lover's falsehood, and kept abroad till she shortly died in that belief; that the memory of the girl so remained with him that he quickly left London, and was lost to the manœuvering mammas who sought his unencumbered estate rather than himself for their daughters "on show."

"You want to know," he said, not answering the question put to him—"you want to know why I didn't get married at the 'usual' time? Well, I don't mind telling you. Fill your glasses, then; and, Con, don't you play the 'nurse' with the bottle."

According to our host's invitation, we filled our glasses, and, drawing up, sat pulling at our cigars in silence, awaiting his story. He sat looking at the fire for a few moments, and then broke out—

"It's not much I have to tell, but as some of you have not yet passed your flirting days, it may teach you a lesson. I was only twenty-two when it happened, and I believe that is about the 'usual' time when matrimony is perpetrated. Then my father was alive, and I only plain 'Mr.' I had never lived much down here, but had passed a good deal of my time in London, and I had some old friends of my college days, and old boaters on the Cam, with whom the days passed more pleasantly than profitably, I'm afraid. At any rate, I will own that, after a longer and more varied season than usual, I felt that my constitution would be better for a change. So I determined to get away and take the Cumberland lakes for a time. My most intimate friend at that time, Jack ——, well, never mind his other name, as some of you may know him, though now he's settled down to what he calls a 'quiet life.' That means a small house, his 'suburban retreat,' and a large family of babies crying about the place from morning till night. Jack, I say, had given me a light commission to execute for him in the neighborhood, and it was to serve as an introduction for me to some lady of his acquaintance, who, he said, possessed two charming daughters. A man has a liking for female society at that time of life, and, the ladies being so promisingly described, I determined on my arrival in Cumberland to take advantage of my commission. I did so, and I found the ladies—one dark and the other fair—the young ladies I speak of now. My good friend Jack had informed me that they were of very opposite temperaments. Elsie—very fair—was gay and fond of bold and 'merry' natures, he said; Dell—short for Delilah—was dark, and retiring almost to bashfulness and timidity. He had joked me by saying that he expected to see me come back tied to one of their apron-strings; and that, if I were anything of a reasonable being, these were two girls who ought to satisfy any expectation. Of course my commission procured me an invitation to the house, and my stay in Cumberland began most favorably. Alas for promises! I had determined to act upon Jack's suggestion, and render myself agreeable to the young ladies according to their respective inclinations. When, therefore, I met them, I conversed with the fair one in a light, lively, and, as I believed, happy manner. I even forced myself into a merry mood, made jokes, and laughed at them myself, but, strange to say, she answered scarcely a word to all my observations. I sought all opportunities before a week was out of catching her unexpectedly. In the recess of the windows of the dining-room I hemmed her in, and made laughing love. I praised the color of her hair and eyes, and vowed I'd steal a ringlet of her hair, if only to kiss it. If she ran away, I thought it was coyness, and followed her. Mind you, I was only acting upon my friend's suggestion, and was not rude beyond what youth will excuse. With the sister, Dell—dark, dark-eyed Dell—I played a wholly diverse character. Books—Scott, Byron and Shakespeare; music—the oratorios, Schubert, and the works of the "severe" school of composition, formed the ground-work of my discourses, and I never attempted to catch her alone. Being by chance one day wandering about, I met the fair Elsie coming across a hill toward me. Two were company, I thought, and here was a happy occasion for rehearsing my part. Laughingly I talked to her—I cannot say with her—joked and told stories. I spoke of my travels, my college life, my London experiences—such as a lady might hear—and enlarged upon them almost to the verge of romance—to interest and amuse her. Not a word above a monosyllable could I extract in reply. Shall I admit that I had begun to feel what slow work was, when luckily the sister, also a lonely pilgrim upon the hills, appeared before us? Although it placed me between two fires, I felt it almost as a relief. I could play the two parts at once, I thought, and so we proceeded on—a trio. The knowledge that I was the protector of a young lady who had been described to me as of retiring and almost timid disposition, made me doubly anxious to prove my powers of entertaining. I continued to rattle on in slight asides to Elsie, and then at length, after we had gone some way in silence, I turned to Delilah with some remark about the weather. Don't laugh, it's a very genuine remark. She turned away, and I thought she laughed, but perhaps it was only thought, for when she replied it was a quiet acquiescence in my observation. Then again there was a silence, and an aside with the fair Elsie, who blushed and turned away. A few minutes afterward I ventured to inquire of Delilah, with all the modesty I could, if she were fond of poetry. Did she like Shelley? She stared at me so hard that, for a moment, I thought she believed I was questioning her as to her knowledge. I was about to relieve her from what I thought an embarrassment, when she said:

"'No; he's so jolly dry!'

"You know the old saying, 'You might knock me down with a feather?' It was true in my case. The manner was so rough and boisterous that I was quite taken by surprise. I ventured, however, another remark, and said, mildly, that I thought Cumberland very charming, and that I should not mind living there forever. And then, turning to Elsie, whispered softly, 'With you.'

"Delilah answered quickly:

"'It may be charming, but it's awfully slow, and you'd soon get the old notion out of your head.'

"And then she ran on telling me of the opera she was 'dying' to hear, the fetes at the Horticultural Gardens she 'pined' to go to, and the thousand and one of the 'jolly old London lions'—so she expressed it—she had heard of by name and knew nothing of by acquaintance. Elsie said never a word, and the retiring, timid Dell rattled on as if she possessed a fund of information of London life, and only longed to be in it. My mind was in a whirl of confusion. I remembered my friend's description, "fair and good-humored, with high spirits; dark, modest and full of quiet grace." I had made no mistake.

"That walk did not finish as it had begun at our meeting. In almost total silence we approached the house. Delilah had long since stopped the flow of her talk—I cannot say 'our conversation,' for in truth she had quite run me off—and I could but think. The sisters exchanged looks, and Elsie shrank away from me, as though I were mad and would bite, when I addressed her. The other only curled her lip in scorn, or turned away her head if I only looked toward her; and at last I was so annoyed with them—not with myself—that I could scarcely tell what I did say. I knew I was right, however, and was glad when we reached their home. 'Would I not stay?' said mamma—the girls had fled away the moment we arrived, and as soon as they had crossed the hall I could have sworn I heard a laugh. 'No;' I thanked the good lady, and said that I had a particular engagement a few miles away, which would detain me two days. After that, I hoped to be permitted to call on her and her charming daughters again. With this lame excuse, I left for two days. Is it necessary to tell you how I employed them? I was wild, excited, and, because in youth one feels these little crosses somewhat more keenly than we do in later life, when we know that 'man is not perfect, nor woman neither.' I had determined, then, to write to Jack, 'my good friend,' and tell him of the extraordinary conduct—as I thought—of his 'modest and retiring' maiden, and request any explanation it might be in his power to afford. I caught that night's post, and throughout the next day remained indoors, fearing, if I stirred out, to meet the family I had made my friends, and so give the lie to my assertion that I had gone away for two days. These two days shall I ever forget them, the fever of excitement I was in, and the monotony of the self-constituted imprisonment. The post on the second morning brought me a latter from Jack. I tore it open, and dashed at once into the pith of his epistle. How I cursed his circumlocution! Instead of at once replying to the question I had put to him, he commenced witn a roundabout story of his acquaintanceship with the ladies of the 'Lodge.' I skipped the pages one, two, and three, and, determined to know the worst, I went at once to the last break of his letter. This was it:

"'After all, you see, I had a jolly time of it, and, between the two, wonder that I came away faithful to the little woman soon to be my wife. If I did make a little error in my description of them, set it down to the dangerous fascination they exercised over me. It is Elsie who is fair and retiring; Dell who is dark and dashing; that's the word.' He would have written before, he said, had he thought it of any consequence, but he apologized for what he considered after all all only a 'little mistake.'

"Need I tell you how, when I called at the 'Lodge' again, I was met with the reply to my inquiry, 'not at home,' though I thought the servant was a long time gone to give my name, and I felt almost certain, as I left the house, that I saw a dark-haired, girlish, laughing face peeping from behind the drawn curtains? Need I tell you how, in envy, hatred, malice, and all uncharitableness of spirit, I rushed up to town only to find the story known to all my set, and going the round of the 'social and literary' club I had joined shortly before? Unnecessary, too, to tell you how I experienced to the full extent the capacity of the club for 'sociability,' in an immense amount of 'chaff' upon the matter from the members; and how thenceforward, till I left the place, I was known as the 'bashful man.' Suffice it that I had at first a decided inclination to sacrifice my 'dear friend' Jack upon the altar of my wounded pride, by horsewhipping him for putting the story about. But at length I rushed away from London (our host did not say how long after, and he skipped the story of little Rose, which was the real cause of his leaving, with something like a break in his voice,) and joined the Governor—poor old man—down here, and went in for life as a 'country squire,' with an interest in turnip-crops, pigs, and sheep, and the education of the crow-boy. So you see why I didn't marry at the 'usual' time for such chances—some I know would call them the 'mischances'—of life; and I'm not likely to play the fool now.

"And now," he concluded, rising, "there's the billiard-room open for those who like to knock the balls about; there are candles for those who like their bed—I'm one of them. Six in the morning—early tub—and I'll promise you a good find and a couple of fox-tail before dinner, my boys."—Newsboys' Magazine.

A Useful Shoe.

We lately saw in a shoe shop a shoe that would seem to be very useful for farmers. The upper part was of leather, the sole of wood. The upper portion was in two pieces only, and all the sewing required is to stitch these together and to fasten in the counter. This is done by a machine. The entire sole, including the heel is of one piece of whitewood. This is well shapen to fit the inner curve of the foot, and requires no inside sole. The wooden sole is about an inch in thickness, and the heel proportionally thicker. On the upper edge a small portion is cut away about the thickness of the upper leather, and to this the upper portion is attached by brass or copper tacks, which first pass through a leather band. The shoe weighs hardly more than a common leather shoe having a double leather sole. If each were exposed to moisture, as by wearing them in the mud, the wooden soled one would be the lightest. These shoes are designed especially for men engaged in distilleries, breweries, or who work mixing mortar, or in damp places; but it is obvious that they would be excellent for farmers. As a shoe to wear in the barn, stable barnyard, or for general use in sloppy weather, it has many advantages. The Dutch, as well as the people of several other countries in Europe, generally wear shoes made entirely of wood, and they are in great favor, notwithstanding their being large and unsightly. The combined wood and leather shoe has all the advantage of the wooden shoe and is open to none of the objections. These shoes could be made of split leather for about eighty cents per pair, and ought to retail for a dollar. The sample we saw was not marked "patented." If a patent is not secured on them, this patent is not extended by Congressional action, and a stock company does not secure a monopoly in making and selling them, we think farmers may keep their feet dry at small expense and make a great saving in the matter of shoe leather.—Prairie Farmer.

INGROWING NAILS.—One of the most painful surgical operations is removing nails which have grown into the flesh. There is no necessity whatsoever for this pain. The new method is to keep the patient ten or fifteen days on a bed or on a sofa with a bread or meal poultice applied to the toe. This poultice is changed several times daily, and the toe is bathed twice a day in water as warm as may be borne. In ten or fifteen days the nail becomes so soft it may be cut with scissors and removed by hand without the least pain. Could not the nail be made soft enough by keeping in hot water, often changed, for ten or twelve hours?

SPEAKING of the cholera, a leading English authority says that there is no sign of any rapid spread of it in Europe, and that there seems to be little doubt that physical, like moral, epidemics, wear themselves out to some extent; or rather, that the human frame accommodates itself to the conditions which cause them, that they do not produce the virulent effects after long prevalence that they produced at first.

AMONG the recent and ingenious devices for utilizing the electric spark, is that which substitutes it for the ordinary flint or percussion cap on fire-arms. By the aid of a small galvanic battery within the handle of the pistol or gun, or by the convenient arrangement of a Leyden jar and rubber, the current is generated, and conducted by a wire to the cartridge. The contact of the wire with the cartridge may be effected by a simple press pin or lever.

He flew out and drove home. "My father," he cried, "embrace me! Your son has just been named by the Shah a chevalier of the lion and the sun." "Impossible!" said the father, flushing with paternal pride. "Indeed, yes," said the son, "here is my patent," displaying to the curious eyes of his parent the programme of the opera, which had been printed in Persian. "Bless you, my son," exclaimed the Count; "I will pay your debts, and I offer you this trifle of pocket money," handing him notes to the amount of ten thousand francs. The Tichborne Case.

The proceedings in the Tichborne case on Aug. 11 seem to have been particularly lively. The Daily Telegraph report says: "A necessarily dry summary can give no notion of the torrent of invective which Dr. Kenealy poured forth. Utterly regardless of the presence of the Bench, he addressed himself to the jury and at Mr. Bowker, who sat unmoved below him; he made no attempt to conceal his meaning; he openly admitted that conspiracy and perjury were the 'logical effect' of his charges; and once again, referring to Lord Bellew's private life, he begged the jury to declare that the man who had basely seduced his friend's wife was unworthy to be believed upon his oath. A storm was evidently impending. In a few minutes it burst. A reference to Chatillon—who seems to have been Roger Tichborne's paidagogos rather than strictly his tutor—as 'a valet,' drew from the Lord Chief Justice the indignant remonstrance, 'That is a most improper remark.' 'I say it is a proper remark,' said Dr. Kenealy. 'I say it is not, sir.' 'With all submission to your Lordship, I say it is. I do not wish for a discussion with your Lordship.' 'Nor will I have a discussion with you, sir,' was the retort; 'I have had enough of them.' 'It was a proper remark,' persisted Dr. Kenealy; 'it was my duty to make it.' 'It is your duty,' severely interposed Mr. Justice Mellor, 'to follow those rules which guide a gentleman in the performance of his duty.' 'I know a gentleman's conduct as well as you, my Lord,' cried Dr. Kenealy, swinging round toward Mr. Justice Mellor; 'I beg you will not repeat that observation.' 'I repeat it,' said Mr. Justice Mellor. 'You shall not repeat it to me, my Lord,' called out Dr. Kenealy. 'I will not allow you, sir,' interrupted the Lord Chief Justice, 'to address a member of the Bench in that tone.' 'If a member of the Bench,' cried Dr. Kenealy, 'forgets his duty, he must be properly rebuked.' To the surprise of all in court, the Lord Chief Justice, instead of ordering Dr. Kenealy's committal, repeated, 'You shall not speak to the Bench in that way, sir;' and, as if he were actually trying to drive his Lordship to commit him, Dr. Kenealy again retorted that his remarks were 'called for.' 'I say you shall not address them to me, sir,' was the reply. 'I address them to you, gentlemen of the jury,' said the learned counsel, turning round toward the 'sheep pen;' and so ended this extraordinary altercation."

THE CLAIMANT'S BUTCHER-SHOP.

The following advertisement appears in the Australian papers: "The Claimant's butcher-shop, now standing in Wagga-Wagga, New South Wales, for sale. The house is made of logs, has a brick chimney and a bark roof. On the door still remain penciled accounts of sales of meat written by the Claimant himself. The whole structure can be easily taken down, the door, chimney and sheets of bark (roof) packed in cases, and by the aids of plans and photographs re-erected anywhere. This remarkable specimen of an Australian bush-house, rendered particularly interesting through the most remarkable trial of modern times, will be sent some 400 miles by bullock wagons, and put on board a ship bound direct to London for the sum of £2,400. Affidavits will accompany it to prove its authenticity. The time occupied by transit will occupy nearly five months."

A Whale Breaking an Electric Cable and Getting Killed.

On the evening of July 4 the Indian cable between Kurrachee and Gwadur, a distance of three hundred miles, suddenly failed. The telegraph steamer Amber Witch, Capt. Bishop, with the electrical staff, under Mr. Mance, started on the following day to repair the damage, which, by tests, appeared to be one hundred and eighteen miles from Kurrachee. The Amber Witch arrived on the ground on the 6th, in a heavy sea and thick fog, but the cable was successfully grappled within a quarter of a mile of the fault.

M. H. Izaak Walton gives this account of what was found: "On winding in the cable unusual resistance was experienced, as if it were foul of rocks; but after persevering tor some time the body of an immense whale, entangled in the cable, was brought to the surface, when it was found to be firmly secured by two and a half turns of the cable immediately above the tail. Sharks and other fish had partially eaten the body, which was rapidly decomposing, the jaws falling away on reaching the surface. The tail, which measured twelve feet across, was perfect, and covered with barnacles at the extremities. Apparently the whale was, at time of entanglement, using the cable to free itself from parasites, such as barnacles, which annoy them very much, and the cable, hanging in a loop over a submarine precipice, he probably with a fillip of his tail twisted around him, and thus came to an untimely end.

Valuation of New York City.

New York appears to double its assessed valuation every fifteen years. At least that has been the rule, starting from 1841. Going thirty years further back, the increase was still more rapid. In 1811 New York had fairly distanced Philadelphia in the number of its population, and started as the first city of the Union, with a population of 96,000, and an assessed valuation of $25,000,000. By 1841 the population had nearly quadrupled, while the assessed valuation had increased tenfold, amounting then to $251,194,020. After an interval of fifteen years—in 1856—the population had all but exactly doubled, and the assessed valuation had doubled also—amounting to $511,740,492. The next fifteen years added only 50 per cent. to the population, but doubled the valuation of real and personal property. In spite of sundry obvious obstacles to a steadily maintained rate of increase, it is not too much to anticipate that by 1886 the gross assessment of property on Manhattan Island will be over $2,000,000,000.

AN OLD MAN'S DREAM.

BY OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

Oh, for an hour of youthful joy!
Give back my twentieth spring!
I'd rather laugh a bright haired boy
Than reign a gray haired king.

Off with the wrinkled spoils of age;
Away with learning's crown;
Tear out life's wisdom written page,
And dash its trophies down.

One moment let my life blood stream
From boyhood's fount of flame;
Give me one giddy, reeling dream
Of life, and love, and fame.

My listening angel heard the prayer,
And calmly smiling said,
"If I but touch thy silver hair,
Thy hasty wish had sped.

But is there nothing in thy track
To bid thee fondly stay,
While the swift seasons hurry back
To find the wished for day?"

Ah, truest soul of woman kind!
Without thee what were life?
One bliss I cannot leave behind—
I'll take my precious wife!

The angel took a sapphire pen,
And wrote in rainbow hue;
"The man would be a boy again,
And be a husband too!

"And is there nothing yet unsaid
Before the change appears?
Remember all their gifts have fled
With these dissolving years!"

"Why, yes, I would one favor more—
My fond paternal joys—
I could not bear to lose them all;
I'll take my girls and boys."

The smiling angel dropped his pen—
Why, this will never do;
The man would be a boy again,
And be a father too!

And so I laughed—my laughter woke
The household with its noise,
I wrote my dream when morning broke
To please my fair haired boys.

WHY is a solar eclipse like a woman whipping her boy? Because it's hiding of the sun.

WHAT kind of essence does a young man like when he pops the question?—Acquiescence.

IT is said that, to be perfectly consistent, Miss Anthony always concludes her prayers with "Amen and Women."

IT has been suggested that in building railroads the rails should be red hot, so that the workmen will lay them down rapidly.

MRS. PARTINGTON will not allow Ike to play the guitar. She says he had it once when he was a child, and it nearly killed him.

"YE are the children of the devil," was the text of a divine in the morning, and in the afternoon he said, "children, obey your parents."

NOTWITHSTANDING all they say against it, there is not an editor in the State who would refuse to receive "back pay"—from subscribers.

IT is said that while "beaux" are permitted to go on in the way they are bent, "belles" are expected to go on in the way they are told.

AN observant man of the world remarks, that when a young widow resumes tight corsets it is to show her admirers that she is solaced.

THE Boston Transcript asks: If a miss is as good as a mile, how good is a Mrs? If she is a widow she will be good for a league, perhaps.

A FRIEND of ours is in a dilemma; he says his financee objects to his being "loose" and yet threatens to discard him if she ever sees him "tight."

A FASCINATING young lady, at one of our resorts, on being asked recently if she had ever read Shakespeare, tossed her pretty head with the answer, "Shakespeare? Of course I have; I read that when it first came out."

A JOHN BULL, conversing with an Indian, asked him if he knew the sun never sets in the Queen's dominions. "No," said the Indian. "Do you know the reason why?" asked John. Because God is afraid to trust an Englishman in the dark," was the savage's reply.

A PROFESSOR, in explaining to a class of young ladies the entire theory, according to which the body is entirely renewed every seven years, said: "Thus, Miss B., in seven years you will in reality be no longer Miss B." "I really hope I shan't," demurely responded the girl, casting down her eyes.

SINCE Jones has been in reduced circumstances he takes much pleasure in singing the following version of a popular song:

"While beefsteak and venison cost lots of cash,
Be it ever so gristly, there's nothing like hash.
The scrapings and leavings of no use elsewhere,
When mixed all together make excellent fare.
Hash, hash, good meat hash!
Be it ever so gristly, there's nothing like hash!

"A stranger from home, hotels dazzle in vain;
O give me cheap eating-house food that's more plain;
The waiter who gaily re-echoes my call
For a nice plate of hash or a single fish-ball.
Hash, hash," etc.

THE sunfish is the largest of the true fishes, measuring sometimes 36 feet. Its liver is of large size, generally two tons in weight, and yields from six to eight barrels of oil. The sunfish are very powerful in the water, and, if harpooned in the shoulder, are very hard to kill, often carrying off the whole harpoon line. They sometimes run off with 200 fathoms of line and two harpoons in them, and will employ the fishermen 24 hours before they are subdued. Great caution must be used in striking them, as with a blow of the tail they will stave in the boat if it is within reach. From 60 to 100 of them may sometimes be seen together off the coast of Ireland basking in the morning sun in the latter part of June.

THREE ancient cakes of copper from Wales, supposed to have been mined there by the Romans during their occupation of Great Britain, were the subject of a paper read not long since at a meeting of the Archæological Society. A member declared that the Romans valued copper at 440 times its present price.

NEW YORK city consumes 750,000 hogs, 520,000 sheep, and 47,000 bullocks annually.

Vanderbilt.

A Saratoga correspondent of the Boston Journal thus sketches the Commodore:

Vanderbilt is the marked man at the Springs. He comes in June and remains until September. He comes for rest and recuperation. He makes it his business to attain these at all hazards. He occupies a suite of rooms over the offices of Congress, and has for years. The sun is hardly more regular in his comings. He smokes ten cigars a day; he does not lay them in, but buys them at the stand every morning. By reason of strength he has reached fourscore years; his form is slightly bent, but his step, though slow, is still elastic. He can be seen any day, sitting on the rail of the piazza, with one foot under him. He is usually surrounded with a company of gentlemen, deep in horse-flesh or in stocks. He converses, in low tones, unimpassioned listening rather than talking. He has engagements that fill up the day. At 8 o'clock in the evening he sits down to whist, and has for years. He once, in Albany, kept a committee waiting for an hour, who had summoned him before them. When asked why he did not appear at the proper time, he replied: "Eight o'clock is my whist hour, gentlemen, and I would not leave it at the bidding of the President." He has an exact hour for his breakfast; this meal is a very light affair, an egg, a little toast, and a cup of tea, with lemon squeezed into it. His dinner is equally simple; a decanter of wine is placed at his table. A small glass suffices.

After breakfast he looks over his business letters, puts a "No" here and a "Yes" there, scribbles a word or two, for he is an indifferent writer, and after spending fifteen or twenty minutes on business that involves millions, he turns to his friends, who are usually with him, and says "Now for business," which means "Let us go to the stables and look at the horses." He rides daily and goes to bed at an early hour—summarily dismissing his company by taking his candle and saying "Good night, gentlemen." We have men here thirty and forty years of age who are older than the Commodore. Their heads are bald; their step uncertain, and their underpinning infirm; men who cannot take their dinner until they have swallowed a bottle of wine; men who envy Vanderbilt his vigor and health, but who give a wide berth to the temperate and considerate line of life that has made the octogenarian what he is.

Humors of Nevada.

The Gold Hill News says: An Irishman, a resident of this city, noted for his wit upon all occasions, and also for his successful attacks on the tiger, was proceeding home the other evening, and, when he had reached the Divide, was stopped by some footpads to "hold up his hands." The robbers knew he had made a large winning and got off with it, and had preceded him for the purpose of waylaying him. Pat did not scare worth a cent, and when stopped, quietly asked the robbers what they wanted. They answered, "We want your money!" Pat, quietly proceeding to light his dudheen, said: "O, murther, murther! but ye fellers are awful thick to-night." "Awful thick!" said one of the robbers, "what do you mean?" "I mane," said Pat, "that this is the fourth time I was stopped since I left Virginny!" One of the men, disgusted with himself to think that others of the profession had got in ahead of him, struck Pat on the neck and then kicked him, saying: "Get out of here, or I'll blow the top of your head off." Pat did "get" willingly, and arrived safely home with $700 in coin in his pocket.

STEALING HEAVEN'S LIVERY.—The great Alcoholless Remedy, VINEGAR BITTERS, is everywhere driving pestiferous rum potions out of the market. That famous combination of the finest medicinal herbs on the continent of America is accomplishing such cures of diseases which affect the stomach, the liver, the bowels, the kidneys, and the nervous system, that the grateful masses have adopted it as their Standard Specific. The various rum bitters have gone down before this pure vegetable antidote like tenpins before a well-aimed ball. The people have at length discovered that all the spirituous excitants are worse than shams—that both morally and medicinally they are inimical to the well-being and safety of the community. It won't do. The handwriting is on the wall! They are weighed and found wanting. Rum remedies are defunct, and VINEGAR BITTERS, THE UNIVERSAL ANTIDOTE, reigns in their stead.—[Com.

THE German Minister of War has recently issued an order that every man subject to military service in the Empire shall present himself for enrollment with a photograph of himself in his possession, duly certified to by the police or municipal authorities of the locality in which the candidate may reside. This course has been taken to prevent in the future any fraud on the recruiting officers of a kind that has heretofore been practised and whereby able-bodied men, whose names have been drawn have sent in their place for examination individuals who suffer from some physical defect, and who have thus secured immunity from service.

"How NICE your collars have always looked this hot weather. What do you wear?" said one gentleman to another. "I always wear either the Elmwood or Warwick. They are the best that can be found."—[Com.

PEERLESS CLOTHES WRINGER.

DR. R. V. PIERCE, of Buffalo, N. Y., was the first physician to advocate Constitutional as well as local treatment for the cure of Catarrh, and so successful has his Golden Medical Discovery proven as a constitutional treatment, when combined with the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, applied locally by Dr. Pierce's Nasal Douche (the only method of reaching the upper and back cavities or chambers of the head), that he has long offered a reward of $500 for a case he can not cure. Both medicines with the instrument for $2, by all Druggists. 655

Rockland Institute—Nyack, on Hudson.

Rockland Institute, at Nyack, on the Hudson, enters upon the fall term of 1873 under highly favorable auspices. Under the direction of Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield, it has come to be recognized as among the first Female Institutions of the land. The best culture of the East gives it an unqualified indorsement, and the elegant accomplishments of our young ladies who have graduated therefrom commend it to the confidence and patronage of the Northwest. The atmosphere of home pervades the place, and with kindly but strict discipline, the mind, the morals, and the manners of the pupils are molded to the highest standard. There is a gymnasium for daily exercise, boats for boating, safe bathing, and, with the bracing air and the climatic change from the West to the East, buoyant health and the best types of physical development are assured. The course of study is full and systematic—the Faculty, in every department, is the best the country affords—Professors of varied accomplishments, who emulate Mr. and Mrs. Mansfield in whole-hearted devotion to their work. All the refinements of social life and intellectual intercourse combine to make education at Nyack a perennial memory to the pupil.—[Com.

"THE UNIVERSAL AYER."—On my journeys over the continent—through Turkey, India, China, Japan, Peru, Chili, Paraguay, Brazil and Mexico, and the United States—in them all to some extent and in some to a great extent, I have found the UNIVERSAL AYER represented by his family medicines, which are often held in fabulous esteem. Whether they win their marvelous reputation by their cures I know not, but I know they have it to such a degree that it frequently gave me a distinguished importance to have come from the same country.—[Field's letters from abroad.

EDWARD BAYER, Esq., Horton, Kings county, N. S., writes that an astonishing cure has been effected on his daughter by the use of Johnson's Anodyne Liniment. The whole spine became diseased, she lost the use of her limbs, and her back was rounded up like a bow, in consequence of taking cold after having been inoculated for the kine pock. She is now well.—[Com.

Nature's Appeals for Help.

Every indication of debility and exhaustion is a mute appeal of Nature for medicinal aid to arrest the progress of decay. How are these silent appeals of physical weakness to the resources of the healing art usually met? Too often, unfortunately, the drugs prescribed aggravate the symptoms. Whoever recommends drastic purgatives, or mineral salivants, or poisonous alkaloids, under such circumstances, is an ally of the enemy and an enemy of the patient. Whoever, on the contrary, advises the broken down and desponding sufferer to resort to that peerless vegetable invigorant, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, for aid and comfort, is a true philanthropist. It is safe to say that there never was an instance in which such advice was given and accepted without the happiest results. From the very depths of weakness and despondency thousands have been restored to vigor, health and cheerfulness by the renovating operation of this wholesome stimulant and alterative. All its medicinal ingredients are remarkable for their sanative properties, and in combination form an absolute specific for indigestion, liver complaint, nervous affections, rheumatism, intermittent and remittent fevers, general and local weakness, and every species of disorder incident to change of season or climate. The stimulative element of this invaluable protective and restorative is not an impure excitant, but the thoroughly rectified essence of sound rye, admitted by all good chemists to be the most healthful of exhilerants.

Dr. J. Walker's California Vinegar Bitters are a purely Vegetable preparation, made chiefly from the native herbs found on the lower ranges of the Sierra Nevada mountains of California, the medicinal properties of which are extracted therefrom without the use of Alcohol. The question is almost daily asked, "What is the cause of the unparalleled success of VINEGAR BITTERS?" Our answer is, that they remove the cause of disease, and the patient recovers his health. They are the great blood purifier and a life-giving principle, a perfect Renovator and Invigorator of the system. Never before in the history of the world has a medicine been compounded possessing the remarkable qualities of VINEGAR BITTERS in healing the sick of every disease man is heir to. They are a gentle Purgative as well as a Tonic, relieving Congestion or Inflammation of the Liver and Visceral Organs, in Bilious Diseases.

The properties of DR. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS are Aperient, Diaphoretic, Carminative, Nutritious, Laxative, Diuretic, Sedative, Counter-Irritant, Sudorific, Alterative, and Anti-Bilious.

Grateful Thousands proclaim VINEGAR BITTERS the most wonderful Invigorant that ever sustained the sinking system.

No Person can take these Bitters according to directions, and remain long unwell, provided their bones are not destroyed by mineral poison or other means, and vital organs wasted beyond repair.

Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, which are so prevalent in the valleys of our great rivers throughout the United States, especially those of the Mississippi, Ohio, Missouri, Illinois, Tennessee, Cumberland, Arkansas, Red, Colorado, Brazos, Rio Grande, Pearl, Alabama, Mobile, Savannah, Roanoke, James, and many others, with their vast tributaries, throughout our entire country during the Summer and Autumn, and remarkably so during seasons of unusual heat and dryness, are invariably accompanied by extensive derangements of the stomach and liver, and other abdominal viscera. In their treatment, a purgative, exerting a powerful influence upon these various organs, is essentially necessary. There is no cathartic for the purpose equal to DR. J. WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS, as they will speedily remove the dark-colored viscid matter with which the bowels are loaded, at the same time stimulating the secretions of the liver, and generally restoring the healthy functions of the digestive organs.

Fortify the body against disease by purifying all its fluids with VINEGAR BITTERS. No epidemic can take hold of a system thus fore-armed.

Dyspepsia or Indigestion, Headache, Pain in the Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of the Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of the Stomach, Bad Taste in the Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of the Heart, Inflammation of the Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms, are the offsprings of Dyspepsia. One bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement.

Scrofula, or King's Evil, White Swellings, Ulcers, Erysipelas, Swelled Neck, Goitre, Scrofulous Inflammations, Indolent Inflammations, Mercurial Affections, Old Sores, Eruptions of the Skin, Sore Eyes, etc. In these, as in all other constitutional Diseases, WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS have shown their great curative powers in the most obstinate and intractable cases.

For Inflammatory and Chronic Rheumatism, Gout, Bilious, Remittent and Intermittent Fevers, Diseases of the Blood, Liver, Kidneys and Bladder, these Bitters have no equal. Such Diseases are caused by Vitiated Blood.

Mechanical Diseases.—Persons engaged in Paints and Minerals, such as Plumbers, Type-setters, Gold-beaters, and Miners, as they advance in life, are subject to paralysis of the Bowels. To guard against this, take a dose of WALKER'S VINEGAR BITTERS occasionally.

For Skin Diseases, Eruptions, Tetter, Salt-Rheum, Blotches, Spots, Pimples, Pustules, Boils, Carbuncles, Ring-worms, Scald-head, Sore Eyes, Erysipelas, Itch, Scurfs, Discolorations of the Skin, Humors and Diseases of the Skin of whatever name or nature, are literally dug up and carried out of the system in a short time by the use of these Bitters.

Pin, Tape, and other Worms, lurking in the system of so many thousands, are effectually destroyed and removed. No system of medicine, no vermifuges, no anthelminitics will free the system from worms like these Bitters.

For Female Complaints, in young or old, married or single, at the dawn of womanhood, or the turn of life, these Tonic Bitters display so decided an influence that improvement is soon perceptible.

Cleanse the Vitiated Blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in Pimples, Eruptions, or Sores; cleanse it when you find it obstructed and sluggish in the veins; cleanse it when it is foul; your feelings will tell you when. Keep the blood pure, and the health of the system will follow.

INDIANA KU-KLUX.

Louisville, Ky., September 5.—At two o'clock this morning a body of horsemen entered Charlestown, Indiana, and posted the following notice all over the town:

To Andrew Reynolds and family, Thomas Reynolds and wife, Samuel Long, Andy Stone, Edward Washburn, Patrick H. Carney.

"You are hereby notified to leave the State of Indiana within fifteen days from this date or abide by the consequences. A few more associates of the above parties will take warning hereby, as threats have been made against the property of citizens, and any overt act in Charlestown or vicinity will be held against the parties above named. "One, Two, Three, Follow me." September 5, 1873. T. Reynolds is the party threatened in jail by the vigilant committee some days since. Considerable excitement has prevailed all day in Charlestown.

—In his recent speech at Columbus, the Hon. William Allen, the venerable Democratic candidate for Governor of Ohio, struck the key note of the campaign in the very first sentence. "There is but one political question," said he, "before the people of the United States; all other questions are subordinate to that one and merge in it; and that question is whether it will be possible for the American people to purge the the great principle of popular representation from the pollutions which now contaminate it, and to keep it free from contamination in the future." The entire speech was confined to an exposition of the doctrine enunciated in this opening paragraph, and its application not to the times of Jefferson and Jackson but to the corruptions of the present day—the Pacific Railway swindles, the Credit Mobilier bribery, the salary steal, and kindred frauds and rascalities.—New York Sun.

A little intercourse outside the city of Indianapolis discloses the fact that there is a confusion of ideas about the Exposition and the State Fair proper Some folks think yet that there is to be another fair for the farmers and stock raisers, and others are in doubt what portion of the exposition month s regarded as the stock fair. To answer the question baiefly and directly, the State Fair for the show of stock and award of premiums is from October first to the tenth. Entries must be all in on or before noon of September 30. From that time to the close of the Exposition, October 10, each day will present a regular fair program. in the ring and on the track as usual at the State Fair. There are already assurances that the stock rings and classes will be full and complete, and such as will do credit to the State. With the strong tendency to fine breeding now pervading the State, there is no doubt that the State Fair will bring together an exhibition that will repay a visit by all who desire to obtain the best knowledge by practical observation.—Sentinel.

There was a disgraceful scene in a Republican caucus in Charlestown, Mass., on Wednesday night, held under the shadow of Bunker Hill. The caucus met in a room about twenty-five feet square; not large enough to hold one tenth part of the people who beseiged the door. All who gained admittance were Butler men; but there were two factions—the Swift and Wilson factions—who were fighting for the Chairmanship of the city committee. When the Chairman called the caucus to order and attemted to perfect an organization a mob of Swift men surged upon him, bearing the representatives of their faction in their arms, and with drawn pistols carried everything before them, breaking down the table and crushing it into kindling wood. After the mob had yelled and swayed over the room for half an hour the Chairman declared the meeting adjourned. Then Swift mounted a chair and, constituting himself Chairman went on with the caucus. Somewhere between the yells of his retainers he presented the names of six Butler men for delegates to the State Convention, and they were declared elected. In the row James Hart, belonging to the opposite faction, was set upon by several roughs, one of whom kicked him in the abdomen, severely, if not mortally injuring him.

From the New York Sun.

A STRAIGHT DEMOCRATIC CONTEST.

There will doubtless be a Republican nominee for President in 1876 who will be called the regular candidate. Whether the campaign will be like that of 1824, when all the candidates were of the same party, and when the regular caucus nominee came out third in the race, cannot now be determined.

If a state of things analogous to the events of 1824 does not arise three years hence, then there will be on great opposition party with its single candidate in the field against the regular nominee of the Republican party. Now, it is to the last degree important that at the close of the elections of this present autumn the friends of reform throughout the country should be able to determine whether the Democratic party as now organized is to constitute the Opposition in 1876 or whether it is to spring from some other source and be composed of materials drawn from many quarters.

The Democrats themselves seem to understand this. Confident in their ability to meet the demands of the exigency, or at all events not disposed to flinch from trying the experiment, their State Conventions are repudiating the coalition of last year, rejecting all proposals for new alliances, laying down old fashioned platforms, and placing thereon as candidates none but polticians of the most orthodox type Even in Massachusetts, where the Democrats never were successful except through coalitions, and where members of that party are about as plenty as blackberries at the north pole they do not try to take advantage of the Republican dissensions growing out of the bitter Butler and Washburn contest, but merely echo the Ohio resolutions and nominate a straight out candidate for Governor. Thn tenor of the discussions and the final action of the Democratic state Committee of New York in issuing their call for the State Convention in October very clearly show that the Democracy of this State will pursue the same course this fall which has already been marked out by their political brethren in Ohio, Pennsylvania Maryland, and elsewhere.

Upon the whole, it is well perhaps that this issue is thus squarely made. The Democrats could not try the question under more favorable circumstances than the present. Since the last election the Republican party has lost much of its prestage. The investigations of the past winter proved that many of its most distinguished leaders were steeped in corruption. The resolutions of its State Conventions this year have been chiefly remarkable for their condemtion of the most notorious acts of the party for some time past, and for their censure of those who have long shaped its policy and worn its honors. It is obvious, too, from the loosening of party lines in the Northwest that large masses of the people desire a change of politics; and all history shows that the party in power rather than the party of the Opposition suffers most by the weakening of existing ties.

If, therefore, in the contests of this fall the Democrats, even with the aids we have pointed out, triumph in those States which everybody knows they must carry to elect a President in 1876, theirs will be thenceforward be recognized as the opposition which is to encounter the repuplican candidate three years hence. If, on the other hand, with wind and tide in his favor, they are pretty generally beaten, then it can hardly be doubted that large numbers of the leaders of the party will admit the fact that its usefulness is gone and its days numbered while its rank and file, tired of achieving nothing but successive defeats, will insist that it stand aside and make room for a new organization.

A SAM PATCH LEAP.

Toronto, Ont, Aug. 26th.—Prof. Ballene, from France, crossed the Niagara river yesterday, on a tight rope, 1,500 feet long, opposite the Clifton House, in sixteen minutes. Returning to the centre, he cast his cloak and balance-pole in the river, and then jumped off into the water beneath a distance of 140 feet, disappearing for a few seconds, after which he rose to the surface, and was picked up by men in waiting, and went ashore in a small boat.

The Muncie line is now giving half fare rates to the Indianapolis, Louisville, Cincinnati Expositions. Persons contemplating going to either of the above points should remember this popular route.

Mr. Morton's Grab Record.

Mr Morton did not distinguish himself at Washington by opposing this bill. The record of the votes shows that he was sometimes for and and sometimes against it, and on its final passage he did not vote at all. Moreover, when it came into the Senate, amended on motion of Mr. Sargent so as to make the increase of salary $1,500 a year instead of $2,500. Mr. Morton declared that the change was not worth while and accordingly voted nay, for the avowed reason that if any increase at all was made he wanted it larger. He was undoubtedly conscientious enough to understand that it would not pay to outrage public opinion for fifteen hundred dollars; what he really thought about the bill when the increase was raised again to 25 hundred, we can only judge from his actions. As we have said already he did not vote when the bill came back from the Conference Committee, with Gen. Butler's figures restored. The same timidity and vascillation which characterized him while the matter was under discussion has marked his conduct since the fruits of the theft became his. After dallying with the money nearly half a year, he has suddenly grown weary of being questioned about it, as we yesterday predicted he would, and has authorized his home organ to announce that he has covered his back pay into the Treasury. This is an excellent result of the persistent impertinence with which the people have this year insisted upon inquiring into the doings of their leaders.—The New York Tribune.

The Sentinel speaking of Senator Morton's railroad scheme, says. "He seems unconscious of the fact that be is trifling with a mighty subject in his talk about Congress having power to regulate commerce on through lines of railroads connecting two or more States, and leaving the States to regulate the other roads. Does he fail to see, can any rational man fail to comprehend that, if Congress may lawfully regulate the through lines, it may also, indeed it must also, regulate all the others, because the others are but feeders, auxiliaries, side tracks, for the inter-state or main roads; and in practical effect are parts of them and are chiefly owned by them? Any such a pretended limitation is only a delusion. It is but a salve for the people until Congress is well possessed of the principal power. Then State control over any roads would speedily cease, and Congress would absorb the whole. This is a result alarming to contemplate."

Much as the Indianapolis Journal, Morton's own, ridicules the idea of Grant being a candidate a third time, we have it on most eminent authority that Morton will back him for a third nomination, if he himself cannot be nominated. With Grant as President, Morton must always be chief. He assumes the leadership, and controls Grant when and where no other man can control him.—Logansport (Ind.) Pharos.

Had Morton stoutly opposed the salary bill, and then after its passage promptly covered the "swag" into the Treasury, he would have become the most formid candidate for the Presidency in the Republican party. But his support of the salary bill in the United States Senate, and his vacillating course in keeping the "swag" nearly six months before he would cover it into the Treasury, has killed the Senator politically, and destroyed his prospects for the Presidency. In the expressive language of Andy Johnson, we pronounce Oliver Perry Morton "a dead duck!"—Messenger.

Another royal sight-seer is about to begin his travels. He has determined to visit Europe, not only to relieve himself from the weighty cares of state but to allow certain little misdemeanors, over which his subjects are somewhat incensed, to be forgotten. We refer to the Sultan of Zanzibar. Many of our readers, doubtless, are not personally acquainted with this illustrious personage, but it is safe to predict that the more heathenish he is the greater will be the adoration lavished upon him. This sort of thing may become monotonous to Europeans after a while.

We can fancy ourself smoking one of them cigars furnished by Lord Mansfield, free gratis. for nothing. How is it, my Lord.

The indications are that a very large breadth of land will be sown to wheat this fall. The farmers are progressing favorably with their work.

Postal-cards are very convenient for ministers to send to recreant church members, inviting them out to prayer meeting; and for editors to send to delinquent subscribers, inviting them to pay what they owe the printer.

We learn that a prominent Insurance agent of Waterloo, is a defaulter to a considerable amount, and is not to be found. As we are not acquainted with the facts in the case, we await further developments.

Scribner's Monthly for September opens with an illustrated article entitled "A Cruise among the Azores," and is followed by a large number of excellent articles. Scribner's is an excellent magazine and this is an excellent number.

The old tan yard has at last been exterminated. There is nothing left of it but a mound of tan bark, a few sheds and Mr Fluke, who is now building a new brick residence in the west end, will soon take up his residence therein.

Another new building is going up on the fair grounds at Waterloo. A number of new stalls for stock has been added, the track is to be put in the best of style, and other improvements made. All it wants now is a hearty encouragement from our citizens generally.

There are but few live, wide-awake farmers but what are extremely busy putting in a large wheat crop, though some have already finished. Every farm nearly has two or three teams going, and with a fair yield next year we may expect a large harvest of this grain

Hon. James S. Collins, informs us that his family, who have been sojourning at Ann Arbor, Michigan, for the past three years, are again to take up their residence at the old homestead northeast of town. They will receive a warm welcome from many friends."—Col. City Post.

In an editorial on the horse disease, the Congregationalist suggested that it might be well to sit at the feet of a horse and learn humility. "Just so," "sit down at the hind feet of a mule, and if he don't humiliate you, pull his tail and tickle the inside of his legs with a stable fork."

Those little brothers! will we never hear the last of them? On the consumation of a recent marriage in an up-town family, a visitor unwisely observed to the youngster: "You're a brotherin-law now, Tommy." "Yes, said Tommy, puffing out his cheeks offensively, "but ma says I will be an uncle by-and-by."

REMEMBER.—The Circuit Court commences next week, and doubtless a number of our subscribers will be in attendance. Those indebted to us for a year or more, will please call and pay up. Substantial Growth.

It is safe to say that the growth of Auburn during the past year, in the matter of good and substantial dwellings, and increase of permanent population, greatly exceeds that of any year in its history. This is certainly a very encouraging fact, and if our people so will, it is only a small beginning of what we may see each year for the decade. The planting of manufacturing establishments will do the business and these industries should be encouraged until the clatter of machinery is heard in every direction, and our people are sending wares of their own make to every part of the land.

We notice the following going the round of the papers. Its a whopper, and should be read to be appreciated. They have commenced at the toe: We trust they will keep on, they may run against something they can't burlesque.

"Jurors and judges have estimated the value of entire legs and arms lost by carelessness of others; but this matter has been brought to a fine point, indeed, in Auburn. A damsel there lost her toe by reason of a defect in the sidewalk. Twelve men have discussed the value of that toe, and have given the poor young woman $1,500 damages. This would have been little enough, even for the little toe. If it was the "light fantastic toe," which we suppose to be the great toe, it was surely not enough, for then she could not dance, even at the verdict.

Commissioners Proceedings.

The Petition of Geo. D. Thomas and others, for location and vacation of road in Union Township, presented last term, was, on the report of the business, dismissed, on the ground that it does not sufficiently fix the termination, and because two causes of action have been united therein, in asking for location and vacation.

Petition for change of road in Smithfield township, by Henry McClish, and others, presented at March session, was upon report of viewers, refused.

L. D. Pattee, submitted report of the Poor Farm to Sept. 1st, 1873. He reports 14 inmates, 7 males and 7 females.

Sabbath School Picnic.

The children of the various Sabbath schools of this place, will join in a grand Pic-nic, to be held next Saturday, at the grove on Cedar Creek southeast of town. This is to be a gala day for the children, and every thing will be done for their amusement and entertainment. All the officers and teachers and parents should be present to make it an enjoyable affair for the little folks. The following is the programme for the occasion.

The schools will meet at the M. E. church at ten o'clock precisely.

Music by the Auburn band.

Song by the schools.

Procession will form and march to the grove in the following order: Band, children, officers of the schools, teachers, citizens.

After arriving at the grove, music, songs, remarks, etc., will be in order, and such sports and amusements indulged in as will make it pleasant for those present. As it is to be a basket picnic, it is requested that the provisions be brought to the church before starting, as they will be taken to the grove by wagon.

The Coming Fair.

What are you doing to aid it, and to make it a success? The time is rapidly approaching, and what is done must be done speedily. The officers of the association are doing all they can to have all the necessary arrangements perfected for a successful exhibition. The fair last year was a splendid success, and that to be held this year may be made much better, if the people will only take hold of the matter, and bring the necessary articles for exhibition. It is now too late to prepare anything for the fair, but there is hardly a farmer or mechanic in the county but what has something already prepared, worthy of exhibition; and all that is necessary to be done is to bring the articles to the fair. The cause of failure in fairs heretofore held was not that the articles exhibited were not meritorious, but that there were not enough of them. Let not the coming fair be a failure for that reason. The grounds have been improved, and ample accommodations will be furnished to all who attend. The fair will be held October 7th to 11th.

The heavy aggregate of premiums is another inducement that gives the fair a prominence and pre-eminence, and it is no slight one. We trust that our own citizens will take more than their usual pride in the coming fair and turn out a better show of what they have and what they are making, and what they can make, than ever before. A little consultation with the Secretary will furnish all the necessary information as to the space available, the premiums, conveniences, etc.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A young lady, daughter of Wm. W. Smith, of Waterloo, died very suddenly last Monday under somewhat suspicious circumstances. She was taken with pains in the stomach and bowels Sunday evening, and died the succeeding afternoon. She was at the time employed at the Eagle Hotel, and always bore a good reputation. Rumor had it that an attempt at abortion had been made, and coronor Latson was summoned and a post mortem examination held, but no evidence of pregnancy was discovered. We learn, however, that the public mind there is not entirely satisfied in the case. The jury returned a verdict of cause of death, unknown.

LOOKS SUSPICIOUS.—Last Saturday night Sheriff Meese was awakened by the continual barking of his dog, and was induced thereby to get up and ascertain the cause of the animal's alarm. On going to the east door of this handsome edifice he found a ladder placed against the building just below one of the second story windows, not connected with the prison part of the house. Several neighbors were called who expected to bag the game, and catch the confederate who was then thought to be on the inside. No one was found, however, and the prisoners, two horse thieves, were found in the jail all right. This was evidently an attempt upon the part of some one to assist these fellows to escape, though there is no accounting for his entering a window in the residence part of the house. It is getting pretty close to court time and the thieves no doubt feel a little anxious.
